That the said Halsted L. Ritter, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and, while acting as a United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, was and is guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor in office in manner and form as follows, to wit:

That the said Halsted L. Ritter, while such judge, was guilty of violation of section 146 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1928, making it unlawful for any person willfully to attempt in any manner to evade or defeat the payment of the income tax levied in and by said Revenue Act of 1928, in that during the year 1930 the said Judge Ritter received gross taxable income—over and above his salary as judge—to the amount of, to wit, $5,300, yet failed to report any part thereof in his income-tax return for the year 1930, and paid no income tax thereon.

Two thousand and five hundred dollars of said gross taxable

Two thousand and five hundred dollars of said gross taxable income for 1930 was that amount of cash paid Judge Ritter by A. L. Rankin on December 24, 1930, as described in article I. Wherefore the said Judge Halsted L. Ritter was and is guilty of a high misdemeanor in office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators, how say you? Is the respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, guilty or not guilty? The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, which resulted as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the sixth article of impeachment 46 Senators have voted "guilty" and 37 Senators have voted "not guilty." Less than two-thirds of the members present having voted "guilty", the Senate adjudges that the respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, is not guilty as charged in this article.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the modification of the order under which the Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment, is proceeding, and that the order for recess at 1:30 be vacated, so that the Senate may conclude its procedure in connection with the articles of impeachment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will read the seventh article of impeachment. The legislative clerk read article VII, as follows:

ARTICLE VII

That the said Halsted L. Ritter, while holding the office of United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, having been nominated by the President of the United States, confirmed by the Senate of the United States, duly qualified and commissioned, and, while acting as a United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, was and is guilty of misbehavior and of high crimes and misdemeanors in office in manner and form as follows, to wit:

Ritter, hereunder specified or indicated in this article, since he became judge of said court, as an individual or as such judge, is to bring his court into scandal and disrepute, to the prejudice of said court and public confidence in the administration of justice therein, and to the prejudice of public respect for and confidence in the Federal judiciary, and to render him unfit to continue to serve as such judge:

In that the said Halsted L. Ritter, while such Federal judge, accepted, in addition to $4,500 from his former law partner as alleged in article I hereof, other large fees or gratuities, to wit, $7,500 from J. R. Francis, on or about April 19, 1929, J. R. Francis at this said time having large property interests within the territorial jurisdiction of the court of which Judge Ritter was a judge; and on, to wit, the 4th day of April 1929 the said Judge Ritter accepted the sum of $2,000 from Brodek, Raphael & Eisner, representing Mulford Realty Corporation, as its attorneys, through Charles A. Brodek, senior member of said firm and a director of said corporation, as a fee or gratuity, at which time the said Mulford Realty Corporation held and owned large interests in Florida real estate and citrus groves, and a large amount of securities of the Olympia Improvement Corporation, which was a company organized to develop and promote Olympia, Fla., said holdings being within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States district court of which Judge Ritter was a judge from, to wit, February 15, 1929. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the seventh article of impeachment, 56 Senators have voted "guilty" and 28 Senators have voted "not guilty." Two-thirds of the members present having voted "guilty", the Senate adjudges the respondent guilty as charged in this article.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. AUSTIN. I make the point of order that the respondent is not guilty, not having been found guilty by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present.

Article VII is an omnibus article, the ingredients of which. as stated on page 36, paragraph 4, are-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. In stating a point of order, is it not appropriate to state the grounds of the point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Providing the statement is not argument.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is what the Senator from Vermont is undertaking to do, and no more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the statement is argument, the point of order may be made against the argument.

Mr. AUSTIN. The first reason for the point of order is that here is a combination of facts in the indictment, the ingredients of which are the several articles which precede article VII, as seen by paragraph marked 4 on page 36. The second reason is contained in the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present. The third reason is that this matter has been passed upon judicially, and it has been held that an attempt to convict upon a combination of circumstances

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained. The Senator from Vermont is making an argument on the point of order he has made.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have concluded my motion. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A point of order is made as to article VII, in which the respondent is charged with general misbehavior. It is a separate charge from any other charge, and the point of order is overruled.

JUDGMENT

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I send to the desk an order for judgment, and ask that the order be read by the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senate hereby orders and decrees and it is hereby adjudged that the respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, be, and he is hereby, removed from office, and that he be, and is hereby, forever disqualified to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States, and that the Secretary be directed to communicate to the President of the United States and to the House of Representatives the foregoing order and judgment of the Secreta and sentatives the foregoing order and judgment of the Senate, and transmit a copy of same to each.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask for a division of the question.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, to divide the question is perfectly proper. Any Senator who desires that the order be divided is within his rights in thus asking that it be divided. The judgment of removal from office would ipso facto follow the vote of guilty.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand there is to be a division of the question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have asked for a division of the question.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary should submit two orders. One follows from what we have done. The other does not follow, but we ought to vote on it.

Mr. ASHURST. I accept the suggestion. I believe the Senator from Nebraska is correct. Therefore, I withdraw the order sent to the desk and, in its stead, present the one

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona, having withdrawn the first order, submits another one, which the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, be removed from office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are the yeas and nays desired on the question of agreeing to the order?

Mr. ASHURST. The yeas and nays are not necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, how, affirmatively, do we adopt the order, unless it is put before the Senate, and unless the roll be called upon it or the Senate otherwise

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the order would follow the final vote as a matter of course, and no vote is required.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the vote of guilty, in and of itself, is sufficient without the order, under the Constitution, but to be precisely formal I have presented the order, in accordance with established precedent, and I ask for a vote on its adoption.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield. Mr. HASTINGS. Just what is the language in the Constitution as to what necessarily follows conviction on an article of impeachment?

Mr. McGILL. It is found in section 4, article II, of the

Mr. HASTINGS. What is the language of the Constitution which makes removal from office necessary, and to follow as a matter of course?

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President— Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator from Kansas has the reference, I shall ask him to read it.

Mr. McGILL. Section 4 of article II of the Constitution

The President, Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for, and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misde-

Mr. HASTINGS. I thank the Senator. Then may I suggest was not the Chair correct in the first instance? Does not the removal from office follow without any vote of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think the President pro tempore was correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will then direct that the order be entered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, upon the action of the Senate why does not the Chair make the proper declaration without anything further?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to do so. The Chair directs judgment to be entered in accordance with the vote of the Senate, as follows:

JUDGMENT

The Senate having tried Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, upon seven several articles of impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Representatives, and two-thirds of the Senators present having found him guilty of charges contained therein: It is therefore Ordered and adjudged, That the said Halsted L. Ritter be, and he is hereby, removed from office.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I send to the desk an order, which I submit in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris]. I think he is more nearly correct in the matter than I was. I ask that the order be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona submits an order, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered further, that the respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, be forever disqualified from holding and enjoying any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I understand that matter is subject to debate.

Mr. ASHURST. No, Mr. President. The yeas and nays are in order, if Senators wish, but it is not subject to debate.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the Chair state just why it is not subject to debate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the rules governing impeachment proceedings require that all orders or decisions be determined without debate, but the yeas and nays may be ordered.

Mr. DUFFY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it. Mr. DUFFY. Upon this question is a majority vote sufficient to adopt the order, or must there be a two-thirds vote?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in reply to the inquiry, I may say that in the Archibald case that very question arose. A Senator asked that a question be divided, and on the second part of the order, which was identical with the order now proposed, the yeas and nays were ordered, and the result was yeas 39, nays 35, so the order further disqualifying respondent from holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States was entered. It requires only a majority vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the order submitted by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HASTINGS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll, which resulted—yeas 0, nays 76, as follows:

So the order was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I send to the desk an order which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the proposed order.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to communicate to the President of the United States and to the House of Representatives the order and judgment of the Senate in the case of Halsted L. Ritter and transmit a certified copy of same to each.

Mr. ASHURST. I move the adoption of the order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the order.

The order was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, unless some Senator has an inquiry to make, or some motion or order he desires to enter, this is an appropriate time to move that the Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, adjourn sine die.

I wait for a moment to see if any Senator wishes to make a motion or present an order. [After a pause.] Hearing none, I move that the Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, adjourn sine die.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 50 minutes, p. m.) the Senate, sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, adjourned sine

Pursuant to the order entered on the calendar day Thursday, April 16, 1936, allowing each Senator 4 days after the final vote on the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, within which to file his individual opinion, the following opinion by Mr. PITTMAN was filed and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR KEY PITTMAN SETTING FORTH THE REASONS FOR HIS VARIOUS VOTES IN THE MATTER OF THE IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED

There were seven articles of impeachment. An affirmative vote by two-thirds of the Senate sustaining any one of the charges results in the removal of the judge. The Constitution of the United States provides for the removal of a judge by impeachment for "high crimes and misdemeanors." The words "high crimes and misdemeanors." The words "high crimes and misdemeanors." ment for "high crimes and misdemeanors." The words "high crimes and misdemeanors" were adopted from the old English law. A definition of legal language is that which was intended by the makers of the law, and as construed by the authority, granted such power. This language in the old English law was uniformly construed to include crimes and misdemeanors other than those defined and prohibited by statute. It was construed to include malfeasance and misfeasance in office, such as misbehavior and neglect of duty in addition to crimes and misdemeanors prohibited and punishable by statute. Such construction has been universally adopted by the House of Representatives in making impeachment charges, and in the trial of such impeachments by the United States Senate sitting as a Court. This was an essential and reasonable construction, as there exists under our Constitution no power to remove a judge except by under our Constitution no power to remove a judge except by impeachment.

Again, a judge, under the Constitution, holds office during "good behavior", which means for life unless he is adjudged guilty of misbehavior. The procedure is criminal in its nature, for, upon conviction, requires the removal of a judge, which is the highest punishment that could be administered such an officer.

The Senate, sitting as a Court, is required to conduct its proceedings and reach its decisions, in accordance with the customs of our law. In all criminal cases the defendant comes into court enjoying the presumption of innocence, which presumption continues until he is proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. The decision of the court must be based upon the evidence adduced and accepted at the trial. No outside information nor ulterior facts may be considered in arriving at such a decision. On the other hand, no prescribed form prevails for the impeachment and the technicalities with regard to indictments under the and the technicalities with regard to indictments under the statute. It has been uniformly held that if the facts upon which statute. It has been uniformly held that if the facts upon which the impeachment is based are sufficiently set out to place the respondent on notice, and he joins issue upon such facts, that then the impeachment is sufficient. This construction of the impeachment articles is reasonable in that the Senate, sitting as a Court, is both the judge of the law and the facts and competency, relevancy, and materiality of the testimony adduced at the trial.

It is admittedly a great power placed in the hands of the House of Representatives, to present the impeachment, and in the Senate, which adjudicates it. It should not be treated trivially either by the House or the Senate. It should not be used to regulate the conduct of a judge, but only for the purpose of punishing him for malfeasance or misfeasance in office where his conduct brings into contempt his court. The proceeding is not in the nature of a recall. It should not be permitted to be used for such purpose. I was not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the moneys

I was not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the moneys admitted to be received by the judge from his former law partner were corruptly received, and that they were received as a consideration for the granting of a fee to a former partner in the Whitehall case.

I could not vote for the conspiracy charge in view of the posi-tion I held with regard to the first charge. The charge that the judge had received a gift of $7,500 was admitted. While such act is reprehensible, I am unwilling to remove a judge upon such a charge, because there is high example for such act. Other judges have been known to receive gifts, and no impeachment has been made. In my opinion Congress should enact a statute making it a crime for a judge to receive gifts. It was charged that the judge had failed, in his income-tax return, to return $2,500 that he had had failed, in his income-tax return, to return $2,000 that he had received from his law partner. This was admitted by Judge Ritter on the stand. He attempted to justify the act, however, by stating that, even if he had made a return of such item and a further sum of $2,000 that he received from his law partner, that still it would have been offset by losses that were admitted by the Treasury Department, and, therefore, he would not have been obligated to pay any income tax to the Government.

ury Department, and, therefore, he would not have been obligated to pay any income tax to the Government.

While the concealing of such gross income might not have been for the purpose of avoiding payment of the tax to the Government, nevertheless it was a violation of the income-tax statute, which absolutely commanded the judge to fully and completely set out in his income-tax return all of his gross income, so that the Treasury Department, and not the maker of the income-tax return, could determine whether or not the income tax was due the Government. The evidence and admissions of the judge show that the failure to return, in a sworn statement, such admitted items of gross income was not through oversight but was done for a deliberate purpose. He knowingly and deliberately swore falsely to his income-tax return. This may not, in my opinion, be permitted of a judge who may be called upon to pass upon such questions in criminal proceedings.

The judge was charged with practicing law after going upon the bench in violation of the statutes in connection with a case in which his firm of Ritter & Rankin were attorneys before he went on the bench. I believe that in impeachment proceedings the Court should be quite liberal in these matters. It is, in my opinion, permissible for a judge to give to his former law partner or former associates in a case such information and knowledge that he had acquired while a legal attorney in a proceeding. There was an agreed fee of $4,000 for the trial of such case.

After the judge went upon the bench he, individually, and without consultation with his former law partner.

After the judge went upon the bench he, individually, and without consultation with his former law partner, wrote to his clients asking them for an additional $2,000 attorney fee. In that letter he stated that he intended to go on with the case; that he and his former law partner intended to insist upon a high supersedeas hand on appeal for the purpose of making such hand so high bond on appeal for the purpose of making such bond so high that it could not be given, and no appeal would be taken in the case. He further stated in the letter that in the event of an appeal he, with Rankin, hoped to obtain the appointment of a receiver that would be amenable to their instructions and advice. He carried out his promise contained in that letter to continue in the case. Judge Chillingworth, before whom the case was tried, testified that after he had notified Ritter and Rankin of his intention to enter a decree in their favor that his docket shows that he had an appointment with Judge Ritter before the entry of the decree, and that Judge Ritter submitted to him a reference to the decree, and that Judge Ritter submitted to him a reference to a case wherein the Supreme Court of Florida had held that a $25,000 supersedeas bond in a case which involved only approximately $112,000 was a reasonable bond. Other evidence further discloses that Rankin urged that the bond be fixed at $35,000. Judge Chillingworth, however, fixed the bond at $7,500, and the appeal was taken. Rankin, alone, appeared in this appeal and received $2,000 additional for services in this appeal. The evidence in this matter was admitted. Therefore the question of reasonable doubt does not arise. In my opinion the evidence clearly shows that the judge did continue to practice law in this case until the appeal was taken. His proposal of action in such matter was not only unethical on the part of a lawyer but after it was made public was such as to destroy confidence in Judge's Ritter's court and to reflect upon the judge's integrity.

I voted for article VII because it contains a general charge that the judge, by reason of his conduct in the various matters charged, has raised a substantial doubt as to the integrity of the judge and destroyed confidence in such court and in the efficiency of the judge.

There are cited, however, in this article charges that I have voted against in the vote upon the separate articles of impeachment. Therefore my vote for article VII is not to be deemed an approval of such matters in article VII.

KEY PITTMAN.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business. I will state that when that motion shall have been agreed to, and certain matters which are more or less emergent shall have been disposed of, it is my purpose to move a recess in order that Senators may have the opportunity of having lunch. It is also my purpose to call for the regular order, the regular order being the flood-control bill introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of legislative business.

ANTIPRICE DISCRIMINATION BILL

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask that a letter I have received from Prescott Bigelow, chairman, Committee on Commercial and Industrial Affairs of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, together with a report of the committee on the so-called Robinson-Patman bill, be inserted in the Congres-SIONAL RECORD and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the letter and report were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> BOSTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE Boston, Mass., April 3, 1936.

> > MARCH 26, 1936.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,

Senate Office Building, Washington,

My Dear Senator Walsh: On authority of the board of directors of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, please let me record with you the Boston Chamber's opposition to the adoption at this session of Congress of any of the pending measures seeking amendment of section 2 of the Clayton Act to abolish the present system of or section 2 of the Clayton Act to abolish the present system of price differentials on goods bought and sold in commerce.

The chamber believes that legislation such as the Robinson-Patman bill (S. 3154), which would make unlawful price discounts based on quantity of merchandise sold, would not only tend to increase the cost of all merchandise to consumers but would force the abandonment of many sound practices to the detriment of business and employment.

A summary of the chamber's views is contained in the enclosed report prepared by our committee on commercial and industrial affairs.

We respectfully ask your cooperation to the end that the Robinson-Patman and other "price discrimination" bills may be disapproved by Congress. Very truly yours, PRESCOTT BIGELOW Chairman, Committee on Commercial and Industrial Affairs.

BOSTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Report of the committee on commercial and industrial affairs in opposition to the Robinson, Patman, and other bills to abolish price differentials

To the Executive Committee and Board of Directors:

Several measures pending in Congress to outlaw so-called price-discrimination methods, originating with the Robinson-Patman bill, have aroused a great deal of apprehension among manufac-turers and distributors, especially larger retailers, because of the revolutionary changes in business methods which these measures

The bills would revise section 2 of the Clayton Antitrust Act to apply more stringent restrictions against granting price differentials based upon quantity shipments of merchandise. The more drastic of these bills, such as the Robinson and Patman drafts, would practically eliminate all price discounts having to do with the size of orders which a manufacturer receives.

While commonly believed to be directed against the buying open while commonly believed to be directed against the buying operations of chain stores, these measures would in reality affect all lines of business and would react with especial severity upon retailers and others who are accustomed to buy merchandise on a large scale. The present Clayton Act permits differences in price at which merchandise may be sold on account of variations in grade, quality, or quantity of a commodity; or differences in the cost of selling or transportation; or in the same or different communities when price differentials are made in good faith to meet competition.

In the Robinson, Patman, and some other versions a seller would

In the Robinson, Patman, and some other versions a seller would be compelled to charge the same price per unit to a larger as to a smaller buyer of merchandise, except that the Federal Trade Commission might, after investigation, establish "quantity limits" within which certain price differentials might apply.

These bills would prohibit the payment of brokerage fees to a purchasing agent or representative of retailers, thus eliminating the economically useful retailers' buying organizations. They would also prevent manufacturers from granting advertising, or other service allowances to large buyers unless these allowances were available on proportionately equal terms to all customers.

It can scarcely be questioned that the effect of these bills would be to increase the cost of merchandise to the consumers. Such legislation would practically compel retailers to buy through middlemen. It would in many cases force the abandonment of unemployment stabilization methods which manufacturers have built up because of their ability to dispose of large quantities of merchandise during off-peak seasons at somewhat reduced prices. It would also attack, among other sound business practices, the discretion permitted to a manufacturer in selling to customers with varying credit risks; would eliminate sales and contracts based on competitive bidding, and would make no allowances for the savings to a manufacturer which retailers' warehouse and storage facilities provide. Nor would it permit price concessions based on out-of-season or overstocked merchandise, forced sales, or other emergency conditions.

Other versions of the bill, notably drafts filed by Senators Borah conditions.

Other versions of the bill, notably drafts filed by Senators BORAH and Van Nuys, are considerably more moderate in their intended effect, and reports from Washington this week indicate that a measure based on the Borah bill is likely to prevail if any legislation is to be adopted at this session of Congress.

The Borah bill would revise the Clayton Act to prevent discrimination as between different customers of the same seller with respect to any discount, rebate, allowance, or advertising service not available to all customers involving goods of like grade, quality, and quantity. It would also prevent sales in any section or to any customer for the purpose of eliminating competition or destroying a competitor.

Even the Borah bill is unnecessary, in the opinion of the committee on commercial and industrial affairs, because the Clayton Act at present makes unfair methods of competition unlawful and prohibits price discrimination between different purchasers of commodities which may substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.

The committee on commercial and industrial affairs does not believe that any necessary or useful improvement in business methods would be accomplished by the adoption of any of the somethods would be accomplished by the adoption of any of the so-called price discrimination bills; and, on the other hand, feels that an increase in the price of merchandise and disruption of basic business practices would result, without economic justifica-tion, from the adoption of the more drastic of these measures.

The committee on commercial and industrial affairs recommends that the chamber oppose all of these measures and that the chamber's views be submitted to Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

Committee on commercial and industrial affairs; Prescott mittee on commercial and industrial affairs; Prescott Bigelow, chairman; Stoughton Bell; Edmund J. Bran-don; Julius Daniels; Maurice W. Dennison; Harold S. Fulier; William A. Heffer; T. Frank Joyce; John S. Lawrence; Charles E. Mason; Louis W. Munro; Albert N. Murray; Samuel Pinanski; John A. Sargent; James H. Walsh, secretary.

AMENDMENT TO PACKERS AND STOCKYARDS ACT, 1921

Mr. COOLIDGE presented a letter from James H. Ferguson, of Worcester, Mass., which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

New England Sausage Manufacturers' Association, Worcester, Mass., April 15, 1936.

Hon. MARCUS A. COOLIDGE,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: Senate bill 4455, a bill to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, introduced by your colleague Senator Walsh, at the request of myself on behalf of our association, is of extreme importance to the independent manufacturers of prepared meat, as well as the wholesalers and operators of small market

This bill merely asks that the trade practices of the industry be transferred from the Department of Agriculture, whose chief business is the production of livestock and agriculture, to the Federal Trade Commission, a judicial body set up by legislative enactment for the express purpose of enforcing fair trade methods in competition in industry.

Up to 1921 the Federal Trade Commission had jurisdiction over this industry, but in that year, with a favorable Congress and the help of leading politicians, the Big Four packers of Chicago had the Packers and Stockyards Act passed, which placed judicial powers in the Department of Agriculture, giving them entire control of this industry. The passage of this legislation, in my opinion, is comparable only to the President, with the consent of the Senate, placing a farmer on the Supreme Court.

I am writing to ask you to support this amendment, for I am convinced if this bill falls of passage many of our small manufacturers of prepared meat will be forced out of business and that a monopoly will be created with the big packers in full control of the industry.

In our organization we are represented by the following racial groups: German, Irish, Jewish, Swedish, Polish, American, French, Italian, and Portuguese. We have 192 manufacturers in the State, with a total membership in the other New England States—Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, and Connecticut—187, making a grand total number of manufacturers 379, with a total number of employees of nearly 10,000. In Massachusetts we employ nearly 4,800 men and women, which include 252 salesmen. From the foregoing you will readily understand the importance of the industry and what this legislation means to us.

Trusting that you will support this bill with your vote when it comes to the Senate, thanking you for your interest in this matter, I am, with every good wish,

Sincerely,

James H. Ferguson,

JAMES H. FERGUSON, 53 Queen Street, Worcester, Mass.

Mr. BILBO. I ask consent to introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on Claims, and ask also that a statement prepared by me relative to the bill be printed in

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred, and the statement will be printed in the RECORD, as requested by the Senator from Mississippi.

The bill (S. 4490) for the relief of F. W. Elmer was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims. The statement presented by Mr. Bilbo is as follows:

I should like to make the following brief statement with response the bill which has just been introduced by me. This is would appropriate $2,500 to pay Mr. F. W. Elmer, of Biloxi, Miss., for valuable legal services rendered by him in the defense of one S. M. Taylor, a Federal prohibition officer, who, in the performance of his official duty, shot and killed one George Hammond in self-defense. Taylor was acquitted of the charge of murder in the United States District Court for the Southern District of

Mr. Elmer is a reputable citizen of Biloxi, Miss., and is a skilled lawyer with many years' experience in the trial of cases, both in the State and Federal courts. On December 23, 1928, Taylor accompanied Prohibition Agent James R. Goff to Terry's Wharf Biloxi, they having previously been informed that a boatload of liquor was about to be landed at that wharf. Upon their arrival at the wharf they found a man named Dowan Terry engaged in transferring pint bottles of whisky from an automobile to a Ford truck. Agent Goff arrested Terry and placed him in the custody of Taylor while he continued his investigation on and around of Taylor while he continued his investigation on and around the wharf relative to the reported boatload of whisky. While he was absent for a few minutes a gang of liquor sympathizers gathered around Taylor, and Hammond at the time approached Taylor with an oyster knife in his hand threatening Taylor's life. Taylor, believing that his life was in immediate danger, shot Hammond, who died about 3 days later. Immediately after the shooting, Taylor was arrested by the State authorities and charged with shooting with intent to kill. When Hammond died the charge was changed to murder and Taylor was indicted by the grand jury of Harrison County. Miss. for murder The then charge was changed to murder and Taylor was indicted by the grand jury of Harrison County, Miss., for murder. The then United States attorney, E. E. Hindman, resided at and had his office in Jackson, Miss., and the then prohibition administrator for the southern district of Mississippi, M. H. Dally, also resided and had his office in Jackson, Miss., about 200 miles from Biloxi, where Taylor was held by the State authorities. Mr. Hindman, the United States attorney, and Mr. Dally, the prohibition administrator, joined in a request to Mr. Elmer, because of his known ability as a criminal lawyer, to defend Taylor, and Mr. Elmer, relying upon the authority of those officers to make the request in question, proceeded thereafter without interruption to represent Taylor. Before Hammond died, Mr. Elmer appeared before a justice of the peace and obtained Taylor's release upon bond. After Hammond died, Taylor was charged with murder and again taken in custody. Mr. Elmer then applied for bond, which was refused. He then prepared and filed a petition for writ of habeas refused. He then prepared and filed a petition for writ of habeas corpus and obtained Taylor's release on ball in the habeas-corpus proceeding. After Taylor's indictment by the grand jury, the State of Mississippi employed one of the outstanding criminal lawyers of the State to assist the State prosecuting attorney in the prosecution of Taylor. It then appearing that it would be difficult to obtain a fair trial in the State court, Mr. Elmer prepared the necessary papers for and obtained the removal of the case from the State court to the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, where Taylor was tried before a jury. Mr. Elmer conducted the defense of the case in the Federal court, and as a result of his efforts Taylor was acquitted by a jury in the Federal court.

At that time national prohibition was in full force and effect time national prohibition was in full force and effect At that time national prohibition was in full force and energy and its enforcement was under the control and jurisdiction of the Treasury Department. It appears that the matter of the employment of Mr. Elmer as special counsel should have been made at the direction of the Attorney General of the United States. Through an inadvertence the United States attorney for the southern district of Mississippi and the prohibition administrator did not obtain an authorization from the Attorney General at the time for the employment of Mr. Elmer, and it appears that the matter was not brought to the attention of the Attorney General until after Taylor's acquittal and the appropriation for that year had lapsed. Mr. Elmer has never been paid anything for his services in the defense of Taylor, and it appears that the only way he may be paid now is by a special bill enacted by Congress for that purpose.

This matter was carefully investigated by the Bureau of Pro-hibition of the Department of Justice under the direction of Mr. A. W. W. Woodcock, Director of Prohibition, who made a report to the Attorney General, in which it is stated that the United States attorney, not being able to be present himself in the defense of Taylor after the shooting of Hammond, requested Mr. Elmer to defend him; that Mr. Elmer handled the case from the date of Taylor's that Mr. Elmer handled the case from the date of Taylor's arrest until his acquittal in the Federal court, and that "his efforts resulted in a verdict of acquittal of the defendant Taylor"; that Taylor was acting as an officer of the United States at the time; and that the sum of $2,500 is a fair and reasonable payment for the services rendered by Mr. Elmer in the defense of Taylor.

The Federal prohibition administration of the Court of the Court

The Federal prohibition administrator at New Orleans, La., who made a report on the matter, said, "An extraordinary showing has been made to substantiate the claimant's petition for reimbursebeen made to substantiate the claimant's petition for reimbursement in the defense of the defendant Taylor, who secured an acquittal against what first seemed insurmountable obstacles as to his release, however justifiable the homicide was in defense of his life." Mr. E. E. Hindman, the then United States attorney, in his report to the Attorney General, dated April 3, 1929, said that Mr. Elmer worked continuously on this case from February 24, 1928, until February 16, 1929, when Taylor was acquitted in the Federal court searching and interview of the search report of the search in the following down until February 16, 1929, when Taylor was acquitted in the Federal court, searching and interviewing witnesses and running down every piece of evidence that would help out at the trial, and that, in his opinion, Mr. Elmer should be compensated, and concluded his report with the following recommendation:

"I recommend that Mr. Elmer be paid the sum of $2,500 for his services in behalf of Taylor * * *, and I request that the Department take such steps as may be necessary to pay Mr. Elmer this sum, or such sum as the Department may consider to be proper in the premises. Mr. Elmer has received no compensation from any source, nor can he expect to be compensated from any other source."

I am advised and informed that on a number of occasions while I am advised and informed that on a number of occasions while national prohibition was in force special counsel were employed to defend prohibition officers and deputies who were compelled to use firearms upon people in the performance of their official duties, and that such counsel have always been paid. Mr. Elmer performed his part of the contract, and successfully, and his claim is just and it ought to be paid. When responsible officers of the Government call upon an attorney in an emergency to perform legal service and that service is done successfully, the attorney not only has the right to expect to be paid but it is the duty of the Government to pay him a fair and reasonable fee for his services. SENATOR GIBSON, OF VERMONT-ARTICLE FROM WASHINGTON TIMES

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Congressional Record an impressive article published in the Washington Times of April 3, 1936, entitled "Illustrious Exception."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ILLUSTRIOUS EXCEPTION

By James T. Williams, Jr.

"A complete and generous education is that which fits a man to perform justly, skillfully, and magnanimously all the offices, both private and public, of peace and war."—Milton.

There is at least one member of the so-called "lobby" committee of the Senate who still prides himself upon being all that Daniel

Webster declared the Members of the Senate ought always to be "men of individual honor and personal character" and "of absolute independence", who "know no masters and acknowledge no independence", who

This illustrious exception is Senator Gibson, of Vermont.

Although admitting that this notorious committee still has 1,000 telegrams in its possession after returning numbers of others which it seized, Senator Gisson declares:

"But I haven't looked at a single one of them and I don't intend to look at one."

This assurance will not be surprising either to his fellow Americans of the Green Mountain State, who know him best, or to the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, whose respect

Mr. Gisson has earned by his record of public service. But it will be none the less gratifying to all Vermonters and, most of all, to the fellowship of Norwich alumni, north, east, south, and west,

SENATOR GIBSON

Norwich University, of which Senator Gibson is a distinguished graduate, was founded as the American Literary, Scientific, and Military Academy in 1819 by a former superintendent of the United States Military Academy at West Point, Capt. Alden Partridge.

The founder of Norwich was, indeed, a foresighted educator. It was his firm conviction that a citizen soldiery is essential to the maintenance of free government.

It was his firm conviction that a citizen soldiery is essential to the maintenance of free government. This is the principle which Norwich University has maintained and applied throughout more than 100 years of useful service to the Republic.

At Norwich University, in Northfield, Vt., her sons, year after year, learn the supreme lesson that obedience to law is liberty. In peace and war the graduates of Norwich University have kept the faith of the founder of that institution. From her gates have gone out north, east, south, and west not only good engineers and capable businessmen and trusted leaders of their fellow citizens but, above all, men of honor who command the respect of honorbut, above all, men of honor who command the respect of honorable men.

It is true that Norwich University is, physically speaking, what is known as a small college. It always has been and it was the purpose of Captain Partidge that it always should be. He learned at West Point the fundamentals of character building. He knew that a college should be a place where youth could enjoy close association during the formative period of their lives with older and wiser men.

Throughout the more than 100 years in which Norwich University has been sending forth to the service of the Republic leaders trained in the school of the soldier, the Norwich student leaders trained in the school of the soldier, the Norwich student has benefited by personal contact with his fellows, his instructors, his university, and the Vermont community of which it is the center. His surroundings, geographically and otherwise, have always contributed to the cultivation of character. In the lexicon of Norwich University character is long-standing habit.

At Norwich University it is impressed upon every student that no man is fitted to command who has not first learned to obey.

BENEATH HIS DIGNITY

When a Norwich student takes the oath of allegiance he does not take it with his fingers crossed. When he swears to uphold the Government of the Constitution he does not secretly exempt from that obligation support of the Bill of Rights.

Kluxer methods and Kluxer cowardice have always been conspicuous by their absence from Norwich University. No one of her graduates ever sanctioned or led a lynching bee. At Norwich University the flag is never carried by masked men.

No one of her graduates ever took advantage of the protection of his public office to assassinate the character of his fellow men.

Norwich University is an institution in which the people of the Green Mountain State take a pride that is shared not only by their neighbors of the other New England States but by the fathers and mothers of other States of the Union whose sons have been fortunate enough to make Norwich training the foundation for their service as citizens and soldiers of the Republic in peace and war. and war.

Senator Gibson did not need to reassure any Norwich man the seizing and reading of private telegrams and the use of their contents to vilify others was beneath his dignity as a Senator and his honor as a man. And no American who knows what Norwich stands for would need to be reassured on this score by her illustrous son in the Senate of the United States.

OPERATIONS OF WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION IN WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a recent statement by E. C. Smith, Jr., deputy State administrator, regarding the operations of the Works Progress Administration in West Virginia.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF OPERATIONS OF WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION IN WEST VIRGINIA

By E. C. Smith, Jr., deputy State administrator

Relief workers received in wages 60.5 cents of every dollar spent by the West Virginia Works Progress Administration up to March 31. Nonrelief workers, including foremen, timekeepers, professional and skilled workers, not available from relief rolls but vital to the operation of projects, received 9.3 cents.

This shows 69.8 cents of each dollar has gone to relief and non-relief project employees.

For materials, equipment, etc., on projects, 23.9 cents.

Administrative employees received 4.1 cents in salaries.

Administrative costs, other than salaries, such as rent, necessary supplies and equipment, communications, travel, etc., 2.3 cents.

That is where every one of the $13,516,056.81 the West Virginia Works Progress Administration had spent at the close of business on March 31, 1936, had gone. This sum includes $12,666,521.92 spent on actual project operations and the separately allocated $849,534.89 for all administrative purposes, including the National Youth Administration's $16,658.

Relief workers employed on March 28 totaled 52,631. Nonrelief project supervisory and skilled-worker personnel totaled 3,734, or 6.6 percent, while a 10-percent maximum of nonrelief personnel is allowable. Administrative personnel totaled 556, of which 141 were State-office employees, where general control of the entire program is centered. Administrative employees are but 1 percent of the total employment. State office administrative employees are but three one-hundredths of 1 percent.

At the close of March 1,641 separate jobs or projects were in operation. About 450 project foremen and timekeepers were from relief rolls and a large number of the nonrelief skilled workers also formerly were of relief status. Many more were border-line cases. Naturally, a portion of these, chosen for their skill, were not in desperate need of W. P. A. employment, but well-trained, experienced technical men are vital to a construction program.

Only the foremen, timekeepers, and administrative workers could be selected by name. Nonrelief project workers must come through the National Reemployment Service, an entirely separate agency, under the United States Department of Labor. The relief workers certified by the West Virginia Relief Administration as to the priority of their needs, eligibility, and employability were assigned indiscriminately, without regard to their identity.

Washington releases project money from time to time on the basis of need, computed in the light of the employment quota and other governing conditions. At the present time we are under other governing conditions. At the present time we are under orders from Washington to reduce our employment quota to 43,900 by June 30, and cannot assign new workers. Workers must be reassigned from other projects, either those finished or from which workers can be spared, when additional labor is needed on specific Administrative funds are released by Washington monthly, en tirely separately from project funds, and on the basis of an estimated Budget, to which we must make expenditures conform.

For those who prefer figures to percentages, $8,177,943.08 in security wages were paid relief clients from the $13,516,056.81. Of this they received $1,017,773.40 for time credited but not worked because of severe winter weather or other conditions beyond their control. Total administrative salaries were $552,296.09.

Wages to nonrelief workers, foremen, timekeepers, $1,250,552.33, who drew only $7,215.01 for time credited but not worked because of conditions beyond their control.

Material and equipment costs for projects were $3,238,026.51.
Administrative costs, other than salaries, such as office rent, necesoffice equipment and supplies, communications, etc., $297,sary of 238.80.

What has the administration to show for this money?

Fifty-eight percent of it is going to projects sponsored by the State government, and the remainder to those sponsored by cities, counties, and boards of education, with the exception of a very small percentage of professional projects, sponsored by Federal Government agencies other than the Works Progress Administration.

This W. P. A. is: Building approximately 300 miles of farm-to-market roads—State primary, secondary, class A, B, and C—at an estimated average cost of $10,000 per mile.

Improving nearly 500 creek and hollow roads, from 1 to 8 miles in length, to make them usable, at a cost of about $3,500,000.

Building approximately 100 miles of paved streets in municipalities, costing the Government about $3,295,000. These are replacing worn-out, heavily used business-section streets in a number of cities, but especially outstanding projects are located in Huntington, Wheeling, Morgantown, and Fairmont.

Building, reconstructing or otherwise improving or extending seven city water systems; Federal cost, $73,000.

Building 504,847 linear feet of storm or sanitary sewers, giving many small communities their first adequate sanitation systems, $1.359,000.

Repairing, improving, or painting buildings and equipment of practically all of the State's institutions, such as colleges and hospitals, $313,510.

hospitals, $313,510.

Constructing four major publicly owned buildings: Marshall College elementary training school, $172,000; Western State Hospital (reconstruction), $61,519; Morris Memorial Hospital Treatment Building, $38,763; Morgantown Negro High School, $24,880.

Building or improving municipal airports at Clarksburg, Morgantown, Elkins, and Martinsburg, Federal cost, $204,000.

Cooperating with city in building new South Side bridge at Charleston, costing $770,000, Federal funds $440,000, and rebuilding Davis Avenue bridge across Tygart River, Elkins, Federal funds, $8,472.

Building 20 parks, playgrounds, or swimming pools in various sections of the State, $330,000.

Construction of five community buildings, $54,083.

Construction of 21 high school, college, or community athletic fields or stadiums in various sections of the State, $267,130.

Repairs and improvements to 22 county and municipal buildings, grounds, and institutions, including construction of a new municipal fire house at Mannington, $15,000.

pal fire house at Mannington, $125,000.

Repairing, painting, and improving public schools and grounds in all sections of the State, $357,754.

Making garments for distribution to the needy through county courts or relief administrations employing 3,849 women in sewing rooms, $666,000

Erection of shelters for children along school bus routes, $25,700. Erection of sanitary privies under a community sanitation program proposed by State health department, $639,000. (The W. P. A. had built 21,170 privies at a $22.41 average cost by Mar. 15.)
Sealing abandoned coal mines to eliminate acid discharge into streams proposed by State health department as means of saving several million dollars annually to public when completed, in water treatment, plumbing, and other costs due to mine acid damage getting into water systems, Federal cost $48,400.

This does not include a great many smaller projects of various

This does not include a great many smaller projects of various types or those of the professional and education divisions to employ white-collar persons from the relief rolls.

The farm-to-market roads are graded to 22 feet in width, with 14 feet of 8-inch stone base, in ordinary cases. However, in instances where roads must carry unusually heavy traffic loads the grade is 26 feet wide and the stone base 16 feet by 9 inches thick.

Although funds are not available for surfacing these roads, they are so treated to be usable and prevent deterioration. When it is available gravel, shale, "red dog," fine stone is rolled into the road to present a smoother surface. In other cases the stone merely is rolled smoothly with fine rock on top.

to present a smoother surface. In other cases the stone merely is rolled smoothly with fine rock on top.

Creek and hollow roads are not entirely reconstructed. Only the sections that become unusable are rebuilt, while sections that remain good the year around are not improved. Construction of culverts or small bridges often is necessary. Construction of this type of road usually is 9 feet in width, with gravel, shale, or red-dog surface, where these materials are available. Stone is knapped in where necessary. Improvements of these roads will give many small communities and a large rural population year-around communication for the first time. Also they have been a means of providing nearby work for rural relief clients, where otherwise they might have had to travel long distances on foot each day.

The major part of the street construction is of knapped stone

The major part of the street construction is of knapped stone base with tar or asphalt concrete surface treatment. A certain amount of entirely concrete or other types of construction have been used. In some cases brick streets were relaid, using only the good bricks and replacing the worn ones.

Of the water-system improvement projects, the Whitesville (Boone County) one is unusually interesting. Here the Works Progress Administration is building a newly incorporated municipality its first waterworks system, including a cement reservoir on the hill above the town, a $3,000 brick pump and machinery pality its first waterworks system, including a cement reservoir on the hill above the town, a $3,000 brick pump and machinery building, water treatment, and pumping equipment, 10,350 feet of cast-iron water mains and meters and connections to serve 250 of the town's 300 places of business or residences.

Of the school repair projects, the Mercer School in Charleston is typical of the outstanding work. Twenty-four men were given 3 months' work at a Federal cost of $7,900.

The building was erected in 1903 for a high school. An addition was built in 1925 and it was changed to a graded school. Electric service was not provided in the original building, but was installed in later years. The old blackboards were much too high for children and there were no cloakrooms. The old plastering was unsafe and large areas were in danger of falling. The walls were dingy. Light was poor. Woodwork was in bad repair.

W. P. A. workers overhauled the electric wiring, eliminating fire hazards, and installed modern fixtures. They built cloakrooms and restored the plastering. They redressed the slate blackboards and built them lower for younger children. They built display boards above. The woodwork was repaired, scraped, and varnished. The interior of the building was repaired.

Tests made by the Appalachian Electric Power Co. showed that classroom light has been increased five times. Where the light meter read "1-foot candlepower" in classrooms before the work was started, it read "6¾-foot candlepower."

PROVISION TO PAY JURORS AND WITNESSES IN FEDERAL COURTS

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, in conjunction with the ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee, I ask unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution 568 be laid before the Senate and considered at this time.

There being no objection, the President pro tempore laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 568) to provide an additional appropriation for fees of jurors and witnesses, United States courts, for the fiscal year 1936, which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for an additional amount for fees of jurors and witnesses, United States courts, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Justice Appropriation Act, 1936, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $900,000 for the fiscal year 1936.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I have here a letter from the Attorney General setting forth that funds have been exhausted for the payment of jurors and witnesses in the Federal courts, and this joint resolution, passed by the House and sent to the Senate, provides an appropriation of $900,000 for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTROL OF FLOODS ON THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I call for the regular order, being the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3531) to amend the act entitled "An Act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes" approved May 15, 1928.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, it was my understanding that when the Senate should conclude the impeachment proceedings against Judge Ritter, I should be in possession of the floor. I wish to state, however, that I am perfectly willing to yield the floor in order that the Senate may proceed with legislative business, particularly emergency legislation. I understand that our floor leader has moved that the Senate resume the consideration of the regular order of business, which is the bill in which the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton] is interested, having to do with emergency flood relief.

Like other Senators, I am greatly interested in the consideration of the tobacco compact control bill, being House bill 12037, a similar bill before the Senate being Senate bill 4430, which I trust will be reached immediately after action shall have been taken on the bill of the Senator from Loui-

I make that statement for the purpose of the RECORD.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, lest silence on my part might be deemed acquiescence in the statement of the Senator from North Carolina, I desire to say that as soon as the consideration of the measure which has been made the unfinished business shall have been concluded, I think the consideration of the measure which was before the Senate anterior to that should be resumed; namely, the deportation

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas should now, I think, make his motion with respect to a recess.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I had intended to do so. I now move that the Senate take a recess until 2:45 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 2 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.

On the expiration of the recess the Senate reassembled.

BARBARA BACKSTROM

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. The object of the concurrent resolution is to correct the spelling of a name in a bill which has passed both Houses.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the concurrent resolution

The legislative clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 36), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Vice President and of the Speaker of the House of Representatives in signing the enrolled bill (H. R. 4387) entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan to hear. determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Barbara Blackstrom" be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of said bill the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed to insert the name "Backstrom" in lieu of the name "Blackstrom" where it appears in section 1 of the amendment of the Senate to the text of said bill and in the amended title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS-CONFERENCE REPORT Mr. HAYDEN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10630) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I should like to have the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill considered at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if that is to be done, I think we should have a quorum present.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I renew my request for the present consideration of the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I stated a moment ago that on so important a matter we ought to have a roll call. I think the Senator from Arizona should make a statement, even though brief, concerning the attitude of the Senate conferees in the conference.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I shall be glad to give the Senator from Oregon any information he may desire with respect to the conference report.

Mr. McNARY. I recall that when the bill was before the Senate it contained certain legislative matter which ran counter to the views of the House. I assume the House conferees are going to take those projects back to the House for a vote?

Mr. HAYDEN. The rules of the House prohibit House conferees from agreeing to any legislation incorporated by the Senate in an appropriation bill. For that reason this conference report does not include any items of legislation adopted by the Senate. All such items must be taken back to the House of Representatives, and the House will vote upon them.

Mr. McNARY. What are those items? I think the Senator, when he submits a conference report, should be willing—I know he is able—to specify what occurred in conference.

Mr. HAYDEN. The principal items in disagreement between the House and the Senate with respect to the legislation are the provisions adopted by the Senate authorizing the construction of certain reclamation projects. The Senator will remember that the Senate listed seven projects for authorization which heretofore have not been constructed with money appropriated by Congress. Each one of those projects has been begun with money allocated by the President of the United States from relief funds. This being the first year when Budget estimates were submitted for the construction of such projects, the Senate considered the Budget estimates, and, in addition thereto, decided that it was proper that there be regislative authorization for the projects. That action was taken by the Senate. It was a matter which could not come before the conferees owing to the House rule that any legislation on an appropriation bill must go back to the House for action. So there has been no final action as yet with respect to those projects.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Can the Senator advise us when it is likely that the House will act upon the contested matters?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is expected that the House will act upon them early next week. I made inquiry today, and it is probable that the House will not be in session tomorrow, but it is expected that the measure will be disposed of promptly in the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the conference report was considered and agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, one amendment to the appropriation bill recommended by the Committee on Appropriations was not agreed to in conference. The Senate adopted amendment no. 60, asking for information with respect to a method of expediting topographic mapping and with respect to the cost thereof. In order to obtain that information I offer a resolution for which I ask immediate consideration.

I ask that the resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution. The resolution (S. Res. 281) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby requested to submit to the Senate at the beginning of the next session of Congress a program for expediting the topographic mapping of the United States in an economical manner within a period of years and the estimated total and annual cost thereof both in the field and in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, in explanation of the resolution I may say that the committee came to the conclusion that the method now employed in preparing these maps is entirely too expensive, and that there is a better and a more economical way of doing the work. We wish to obtain information on that point for the benefit of the Senate. That is why I have offered the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 568) to provide an additional appropriation for fees of jurors and witnesses, United States courts, for the fiscal year 1936, and it was signed by the Vice President.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER FLOOD CONTROL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3531) to amend the act entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes, approved May 15, 1928."

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate is, as its title indicates, a bill to amend what is known as the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928. The bill is designed solely to amend the Flood Control Act of 1928.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Johnson in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. This bill, then, does not relate to anything except the Mississippi River and its tributaries?

Mr. OVERTON. That is all.

Mr. CONNALLY. It provides no flood control of other |

Mr. OVERTON. It does not. It relates exclusively to what is known as the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River. The Senator from Texas will observe that there is hung upon the wall of this Chamber a map showing the extent of the project to which the bill relates. That project extends from Cape Girardeau in Missouri on down to the Gulf of Mexico.

The Flood Control Act of 1928 adopted a plan known as the Jadwin plan. That plan embraces only the flood-control problem of the lower Mississippi Valley. It is a plan of levees and of floodways. The pending bill does not undertake to modify that plan in respect to its basic principles. It undertakes to modify the plan in certain particulars in accordance with the recommendations made by the Mississippi River Commission and the Chief of Army Engineers.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator tell me this: When the Jadwin plan was created, was there in contemplation the new idea of reservoir protection at the source of the stream and its tributaries?

Mr. OVERTON. There was not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the Senator's judgment, does the new method of approach to flood control, involving the construction of reservoirs at the source and on the tributaries. change, in any degree, the necessity for the Jadwin plan as originally created?

Mr. OVERTON. It does not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is going to discuss that question before he concludes?

Mr. OVERTON. I shall do so in, perhaps, a few minutes. Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

Commission and by General Markham, Chief of Army

Mr. OVERTON. So this bill undertakes to modify in certain incidental particulars the Jadwin plan in accordance with the recommendations made by the Mississippi River

Engineers.

The Flood Control Act of 1928 adopted as a national policy the assumption of responsibility on the part of the Federal Government for the control of floods in the lower valley of the Mississippi. It declared, among other things, that, in view of the fact that the States bordering upon the Mississippi River in the lower valley and their local subdivisions had contributed the sum of $292,000,000 to flood protection in the valley, there would not be required any further local contributions. There are certain exceptions, however, set forth in the act of 1928, and among these exceptions is the obligation that is imposed upon the local subdivisions of the different States to provide rights-of-way for levees and levee foundations on the main stem of the Mississippi River, and also the obligation, resting upon States and local subdivisions, to maintain the levees after they shall have been constructed.

The Flood Control Act of 1928 further declared that the Federal Government assumed responsibility of providing flowage rights for the floodways proposed in the adopted plan. It declared in section 4 of that act:

The United States shall provide flowage rights for additional flood waters that will pass by reason of diversions from the main channel of the Mississippi River.

It provided a method of condemnation of such flowage rights and of all easements required in the prosecution of the plan by condemnation proceedings to be instituted in the

These, Mr. President, are the "high lights" of the Flood Control Act of 1928. That act adopted a plan for flood control in the lower valley. It assumed national responsibility for the prosecution of that work, with the exceptions that I have mentioned; it provided for the acquisition by the United States of flowage rights that were necessary in the construcundertake to add to the principle of responsibility on the part of the Federal Government and it does not undertake to detract from the obligations imposed upon the State and local governments. The purpose of the bill is simply to amend the Flood Control Act of 1928 in accordance with the engineering recommendations of the Army engineers, and to provide for an authorization of what is estimated to be a sufficient amount to complete the plan.

That project is about half completed. It was stated at the time the Flood Control Act was reported to the Senate that the sum authorized in that act, namely, $325,000,000, would, in all probability, be insufficient to complete the work.

General Markham, in the course of the hearings conducted by the subcommittee of the Commerce Committee of the Senate, declared that no one at the time ever supposed that $325,000,000 would be sufficient to do the work; and that it was thought by the Mississippi River Commission: by the then President of the United States, President Coolidge; by General Jadwin, Chief of Engineers; and by everyone else who had given any thought or study to this question that it would cost approximately somewhere between $700,000,000 and $750,000,000.

This bill, as I have stated, is restricted to the alluvial valley. It is a plan of levees and of floodways. It has nothing to do with reservoirs. It has been suggested that by the construction of reservoirs at the headwaters of the tributaries of the Mississippi River these floodways might be dispensed with, but the floodways have been recommended by the Mississippi River Commission, by the Chief of Engineers. General Markham, by General Jadwin, and by General Brown, and it is the firm conclusion of the Army engineers that the reservoirs will not dispense with the necessity of the construction and operation of the floodways.

In response to the query addressed to me a few minutes ago by the Senator from Michigan, I will say that the Flood Control Act of 1928 provided in section 10 that the Chief of Engineers and the Mississippi River Commission were to make a study of flood control in the lower valley with respect to reservoirs and submit a report thereon; and last year, in 1935, the Secretary of War submitted a comprehensive report on reservoirs in the Mississippi River basin. That report declares, in effect, that in order that there may be fair protection by the construction of reservoirs on the tributaries of the Mississippi River, it will be necessary to construct 151 reservoirs, at a cost of $1,250,000,000, and that such reservoirs should be used as detention reservoirs; in other words, they should be used as flood-control reservoirs, and that with the construction of these reservoirs it might not be necessary to use the floodways in the adopted plan; but the report declared, in effect—and General Markham so testified—that during the prolonged period when these different reservoir projects are being surveyed and are being considered by the engineers and by the Mississippi River Commission and are being recommended to Congress and being acted upon and are being built the lower Mississippi Valley is in imminent danger and peril at any time of a devastating flood.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The report to which the Senator is referring, as I recall, is to the effect that 1,000,000 cubic feet per second must be taken out of the river at some point near or below the mouth of the Arkansas River and must be diverted into the floodway in order to enable the channel of the river, within the highest levees that it is safe to construct, to carry the remainder of the flood waters in time of high floods. Is not that correct?

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. The statement, as I remember, also is that the reservoirs would prove a substantial additional factor of safety, that they would reduce the floodwaters by about 385,000 cubic feet per second, leaving between 600,000 and 700,000 cubic feet per second, which would still need to be cared for by floodways in the event of such a flood as occurred in 1927. The conclusion of the engineers was expressly upon tion of the various floodways. The pending bill does not the point to which the Senator from Michigan has so properly referred, and was that the reservoirs without spillways | would not insure safety or adequate protection.

It was further said, as stated by the Senator from Louisiana, that it might be, after the reservoirs are constructed, that it would not be necessary, except in the cases of what we call superfloods, to employ the floodway. But the plain conclusion of the engineers is that the floodways are essential for the protection of that lower valley region.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator for his contribution. Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a further question in this connection?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Did the survey for the prospective reservoir to which the Senator refers include the new contemplation of reservoirs which are now being planned in the upper regions of the Ohio River?

Mr. OVERTON. It did not. The Senator means the comprehensive report?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. OVERTON. It took in the Ohio River and some of its tributaries, the Missouri River and some of its tributaries, and the Arkansas and the White Rivers.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; but what I am trying to discover is this: As the Senator knows, our Commerce Committee is now surveying flood control on a much wider far-flung basis than ever before, and among the other factors involved in the tentative discussion is a system of extended reservoirs which, as I understand, were never in contemplation when the reservoir survey to which the Senator from Louisiana referred was made. Am I correct about that?

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator is correct. As I understand the Senator from Michigan, the engineers made no recommendation that any specific reservoir be constructed. They simply made a survey of reservoirs on the tributaries and made the report, without making a recommendation for the construction of any specific reservoir. They stated, in effect, that they submitted the information for the benefit of Congress in order that at future times we may make up the different projects referred to in their report.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President— Mr. OVERTON. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I believe the Senator from Louisiana did not understand the question of the Senator from Michigan. His question is whether the surveys that were made under the 1928 act comprehended the tributary streams of the Mississippi River which are now under consideration by the Commerce Committee. I think it is true that the instruction to the engineers in the act-I believe section 10 of the act of 1928—was to make a survey of the tributary streams of the Mississippi River, and, pursuant to that instruction, the surveys were made. There were 308 separate reports made under that act. They related not only to the principal main-stem tributaries but also to tributaries of lesser importance.

The information which the Commerce Committee now has before it contained in reports, according to my understanding, was produced as a result of that provision in the act of 1928. The information is now available to the committee

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator from Arkansas is correct. That information is before the Commerce Committee and is being considered, as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vanden-BERG] knows, in connection with the omnibus flood-control bill. As I understood the Senator from Michigan, he desired information as to whether the report specifically recommended the inclusion of any specific reservoirs in the floodcontrol plan for the Mississippi River.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the Senator will forgive me, the thing that perplexes me-and I might as well say it now as at any other time-is the sudden expansion, which we find in the Commerce Committee, of flood-control plans in areas that never were heretofore contemplated as being within Federal jurisdiction and with a basis of noncontribution which has no precedent.

In connection with some of the plans which are sifting in upon us, for example, I may illustrate by referring the Senator to the Ohio witnesses who appeared at our last meeting, presenting a reservoir scheme in central Ohio which would substantially remove water from the Ohio River at flood time, but which never has been even surveyed by the engineers because it is a new comprehension and is a part of the new conception of a larger flood-control scheme.

I am just wondering, inasmuch as the figures are mounting to such Gargantuan size, whether or not in attempting to deal with one piece of property piecemeal we are not calculated to be exceedingly wasteful in net results as compared with the possibility of between now and next December perhaps having the advantage of just such a comprehensively created survey as I understand the President of the United States himself has in mind, so we might deal with the thing as a

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Louisiana will permit me, I think that is a very pertinent suggestion. However, in answer to the inquiry submitted by the Senator from Michigan, if I may in the time of the Senator from Louisiana make a statement, the view that underlies the so-called Overton bill is that no matter what plan may be worked out as to other areas, this plan is mature, essential. and indispensable, and any delay would merely protract the very long period which has already elapsed since the plan was adopted.

This plan would have been consummated and completed some time ago but for the fact that the original Jadwin plan located the spillway in what is known as the Boeuf Basin. and the owners of land within that basin were so dissatisfied with having that area made a floodway that the engineers simply did not proceed to carry out in its entirety the plan which was adopted in 1928. They were ordered in some instances to make a review of that feature of the so-called Jadwin plan, and the result is the Markham plan, which is incorporated in the bill of the Senator from Louisiana.

The Markham plan represents the conclusion of the engineers after the study had been made of the subject of reservoirs in relation to the lower Mississippi Valley and after the Jadwin plan or the Boeuf Basin floodway plan had been reviewed. The Markham plan is in lieu of a part of the Jadwin plan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ROBINSON. I have not the floor.

Mr. OVERTON. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator will see my point if I may say that obviously the measure of need for a spillway is reduced in proportion as effective reservoirs are created in the upper reaches of the stream and its tributaries. It seems to me that in our enlarged flood-control scope in the Commerce Committee we are now considering an infinitely larger measure of reservoirs in the upper reaches of the tributaries than was ever contemplated when this particular spillway scheme was devised and recommended.

So until we know the precise and conclusive extent to which a reservoir system is to be expanded, even beyond the Jadwin and the Markham plans, I am wondering how we can economically and conclusively determine the extent of the need for the spillway. That is the problem that is bothering me at the moment.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, in response to the statement of the Senator from Michigan, I shall say to him that we have all the information that can possibly be given us upon that subject. We have back of the recommendations of General Markham, General Brown, General Jadwin, and the Mississippi River Commission an experience of over 200 years in fighting floods in the lower Mississippi Valley.

We have considered levees and we have considered floodways and we have considered reservoirs, and the Mississippi River Commission for over 50 years has been giving as constant and as thorough and as able study to that problem as has ever been given to any engineering problem in all the history of the United States. After 50 years' study by the Mississippi River Commission and after the study made by all these different Chiefs of Engineers, they come before the Senate today and say that reservoirs will not dispense with the necessity of levees; that reservoirs will not dispense with the necessity of floodways; that there is only one solution of the problem of flood control in the lower Mississippi River Valley, and that is a system of levees built as high as it is practicable and economical and safe to build them, supplemented by the floodways recommended by the Army engi-

Now, let me read to the Senator from Michigan the statement by General Markham in that connection, made before the Senate Committee on Commerce when they had under consideration this particular bill:

As to the contention of those who think that the lower valley can be protected within the levees of the main stem, I would state our conclusion that in order to take care of floodwaters there must be taken out of the river a million cubic feet a second. There is no conclusion that in order to take care of floodwaters there must be taken out of the river a million cubic feet a second. There is no means that we know about of holding any such amount of water, except and unless the United States would take up reservoirs throughout the entire country and, for the single purpose of withholding water, expend about $1,260,000,000. We said to the House committee last year that the reservoirs proposed for the Arkansas and the White Rivers, at, I think, an estimated cost of $126,000,000, could be reckoned to withhold between 330,000 and 365,000 cubic second-feet, leaving still 700,000 or 650,000 cubic second-feet to be removed from the river by floodways.

If there is any other answer having to do with protection of the lower valley, we do not know it, we cannot uncover it, and we cannot discover it.

Let me supplement that statement with General Markham's written report. When General Markham submitted his report last year in connection with this project, he likewise submitted and endorsed the recommendations and the statements made by the Mississippi River Commission, which are as follows:

This Commission has submitted recently a separate report on a comprehensive system of tributary reservoirs for control of floods in the lower Mississippi River. In this report it was shown that, in connection with the existing levee system, substantially complete protection, except backwater areas, might be obtained by such a tributary reservoir system. Substantial local benefits would also be obtained. The cost is estimated at approximately $1,250,000,000.

A project of such magnitude and diversification, even if justified in its entirety, would require a long period of years to complete. Some of these reservoir projects have already been undertaken by the United States. The Commission recommended that, under certain conditions, others be undertaken by the United States for progressive construction over a period of years. With the reservoirs already under construction some reduction in flood discharges on the Mississippi River is anticipated. As additional reservoir projects are authorized and completed, progressive educations. reservoir projects are authorized and completed, progressive education in flood flows may be expected.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question at that point, for information?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. When the Senator quotes the necessity for relief in terms of a million cubic second-feet or more, is it the annual flood need or the superflood need to which the engineers refer?

Mr. OVERTON. The million feet is the superflood need.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And, according to the engineers, are we to understand that they use "superflood" in the sense of the flood which they expect once in 16 years?

Mr. OVERTON. No; that is the maximum predicted flood. Let me say to the Senator, however, that in the judgment of the engineers the floodwaters of the lower valley can be retained within the leveed channels until the Mississippi River reaches a latitude opposite the mouths of the Arkansas and the White Rivers. When the Mississippi River reaches that point the leveed channels have a hydraulic capacity of only 2,000,000 cubic feet per second.

The flood of 1927 brought down into that area 2,477,000 cubic feet per second. The 1928 levees are built as high as they can safely be built; and when I say that the carrying capacity of the leveed channels of the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Arkansas on down to Red River is 2,000,000 second-feet, I mean the levees that are built to the 1928 grade and section, which represent the highest that it is practicable to build.

Any flood, whether it be called a maximum flood or a superflood or a major flood, which brings the waters of the Mississippi River down to the mouth of the Arkansas River in excess of 2,000,000 cubic feet per second, means a devastating flood in the lower reaches of that valley unless floodways are provided to take care of the excess waters.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, as a matter of experience, how often does that happen?

Mr. OVERTON. It will happen once in 15 years, according to the judgment of the engineers. That is, it will be necessary to use these floodways once in 15 years, and another floodway-the Morganza floodway, lower down-probably once in 10 years.

Mr. ROBINSON. But, Mr. President, it is liable to happen at any time. The difficulty about the matter is that there is no way of determining in advance when it will happen

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President-

Mr. OVERTON. I yield to the Senator from New York. Mr. COPELAND. There is one thing I can say which perhaps will assist the debate at this point.

I fear there is a misconception of what will be accomplished on the upper reaches of the Mississippi and the Ohio Rivers by such flood-control protection as we are seeking to provide. For example, if we spend the money to which we are giving consideration in connection with the pending omnibus bill, I do not want the people in Pittsburgh to think they are not going to get their feet wet the next time there is high water.

The most enthusiastic report I remember in connection with reservoir and dam control on the upper reaches of the Ohio and its tributaries, running up into my own State, is that the possible flood will be lowered about 5 feet. If we have sufficient rains to go beyond that point of protection, there will still be floods on the river. So my judgment is that all we may do over the period of the next quarter of a century on the upper reaches of the Mississippi system and the Ohio system will be materially to protect localities; but I think that in the last analysis there must be made some provision such as is made in the Overton bill to take care of the extreme cases when the water is unusually high.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator from New York for his contribution, and I agree with him in the statement he

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana permit me to make a statement for which he will thank me also?

Mr. OVERTON. Indeed, I will; most cheerfully.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have not the slightest opposition in the world to the successful completion of this superfloodcontrol program for Arkansas and Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. I am very glad to hear the Senator say so; but it is not altogether a superflood program.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thought I could probably win a little commendation at that point. My only interest is in the problem as a whole which confronts the balance of the United States, which is the taxpaying portion of the United States, in respect not only to this problem but to the utterly enormous flood problem which is now flooding the Commerce Committee. If I seem to be rather eager for a comprehensive answer instead of a piecemeal answer, I trust the Senator will not think I am unfriendly to the thing for which he is pleading.

Mr. OVERTON. Let me say to the Senator from Michigan that I do not think he is unfriendly—at least I hope he is not unfriendly-toward my bill and the project which it proposes. But let me say to him that if it is economy he is thinking of, I present a plan, through the recommendations of the Army engineers, which will cost for its completion approximately $272,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I interrupt the Senator just once more at that point?

Mr. OVERTON. Let me finish the thought.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well.

Mr. OVERTON. As against that plan comes the suggestion that there be constructed reservoirs costing $1,250,000,-000, and on top of that comes the report from the engineers that that will not dispense with the necessity not only of the levees, but also of the floodways. As against the $1,250,000,000 plan, we have the $272,000,000 plan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am assuming in our entire discussion of the matter that the Senator is proposing to present amendments to the bill as printed in line with our discussion which would lead to some warrantable and predictable limit of $272,000,000 upon the pending bill. Am I correct in that?

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator is correct in that; and I shall say for the information of the Senator that at a well-attended meeting of the Committee on Commerce a few days ago, and just before he had reached the committee meeting, the committee considered those amendments, and authorized me to present them on the floor; and I expect to do so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. In the light of the statement just made by the Senator relative to the costs, and, as he contends, the economies which will be effectuated under his bill, may I be permitted to read the concluding paragraph of a letter written by General Markham dated March 6, 1936, addressed to the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]?

Mr. OVERTON. Permit me to say, if I may interrupt the Senator, that that letter was written before the compromise amendments had been agreed upon between General Markham, Chief of Engineers, and myself and others interested in the bill, and now the Chief of Engineers has submitted those amendments in a letter, which I have had printed in the Record, and has stated that those amendments, if adopted, will remove all objections he and the Secretary of War have had to the bill as contained in that letter.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator intends to propose those amendments?

Mr. OVERTON. Indeed I do propose to submit them.

Mr. KING. Having started to read this paragraph, may I complete it?

Mr. OVERTON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. It reads:

It appears obvious that the total cost of the Overton bill is likely to be a very much larger sum than the $275,000,000 authorization proposed. I am unable to estimate what the ultimate expense may be and thus can but state that it is indefinite and immeasurable.

The Senator states that amendments have been prepared since this letter was written. May I ask the Senator whether those amendments will make it clear that there are not uncertainties with respect to the cost of the projects? In other words, is he certain that with the adoption of the amendments he will offer the uncertainty with regard to the costs will be removed?

Mr. OVERTON. It will be removed to the satisfaction of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And of the Senator from Michigan. Mr. OVERTON. And of the Senator from Michigan. I thank him for that contribution.

I did not think that under the original bill there would be the excessive costs which were dreaded by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers. The Senator from Utah being a very able and distinguished lawyer, I may, perhaps, in a very few words, explain the disagreement between the Chief of Engineers and the committee in reference to that provision.

Section 12 of the bill provided for condemnation and acquisition of the flowage rights for these floodways by the Federal Government, and provided that for the properties so taken just compensation should be paid. That is the constitutional rule, as the Senator well knows, the Constitution declaring that no property shall be taken for public purposes without just compensation. It was my thought that any attempt on the part of Congress to limit that liability would be unconstitutional.

It was suggested by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War that the bill should adopt as a yardstick for compensation the assessed values of the properties in Arkansas and in Louisiana where these floodways are to be constructed. In the first place, I considered that such a provision would be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, because the Supreme Court of the United States has held that Congress has the authority to determine what property shall be taken, but it is for the courts to determine what compensation shall be paid for the property so taken. The one is a legislative discretion; the other is a judicial function. The second objection was that assessed values do not reflect true values. They vary from State to State, from county to county, and from parish to parish.

We then prepared an amendment, and after considerable negotiation it was agreed upon, and the Senator from Utah will observe how it restricts the liability of the Government.

It is provided that the Eudora floodway and its northern extension and the Morganza floodway shall not be constructed until the Secretary of War has obtained options covering 75 percent of the value of these flowage rights, as estimated by him, at a cost not to exceed $20,000,000. That provision has the effect of holding down the liability of the Federal Government. The floodways shall not be constructed unless 75 percent or more of the estimated value of the flowage rights can be obtained at a cost not to exceed $20,000,000. Therefore it is estimated that the flowage rights and easements necessary to the construction of the floodways will not cost in excess of, say, $30,000,000. The Senator from Utah can readily comprehend this constitutional method of limiting liability, and why it is that the Chief of Engineers in submitting the amendments to me stated that they removed all objection the Secretary of War had to the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again? Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. In view of the statement just made by the Senator and the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas a moment ago, may I call the attention of the Senator to what I understand to be the fact, that when the plan was first determined upon it embraced 1,200,000 acres. Because of objections made by residents of the section of the State affected, the Eudora plan was agreed upon in the pending bill. The point I am making is that as I understand the testimony-and I have only hastily glanced at it today—the lands which will be covered by water at some period in the Eudora floodway are worth approximately $75 to $100 per acre. If the full value were paid it would cost perhaps a hundred million dollars. I am wondering how the value will be determined, or how to obtain from the owners of the land an estimate of the damage that will reduce the hundred million to $20,000,000 or less, the amount indicated by the Senator. In other words, is there any certainty that those people having those valuable lands—Senator Ransdell stated they have been the most valuable agricultural lands in the United States-will consent to have those lands under this perpetual menace? Is there any certainty that they can be persuaded to reduce the contemplated damage to $20,000,000 so that they will give a perpetual easement for flowage rights over that vast area?

Mr. OVERTON. I am advised by those who are thoroughly familiar with the situation that there will be no difficulty in obtaining the flowage rights within the limitations to be proposed by the amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. OVERTON. I should like to make an additional observation before I yield. The Boeuf floodway contained within its area something over a million acres. Senators will understand that these floodways are leveed floodways. The levees are located, say, 10 miles or 9 miles or 7 miles apart, as the case may be. The Boeuf floodway proposed by General Jadwin took in more territory than the Eudora floodway. Eudora floodway has some eight-hundred-and-some-oddthousand acres in it. I cannot at the moment give the Senator the exact figure, but the Eudora floodway and the Morganza floodway and the northern extension of the Eudora floodway combined contain approximately 1,000,000 acres. These floodways are so located as not to take in the most valuable land. On the contrary, they are so located as to take in the least valuable land. The land within the confines of the proposed Eudora floodway is 75-percent woodland and uncultivated land, and only 25 percent is cultivated, and that notwithstanding the fact that it lies within this rich alluvial valley. It is because the Eudora floodway is so laid out that it is going to follow down the Tensas Basin, and will run through a large portion of land which is swamp or woodland.

Therefore the cost will not be nearly so great as perhaps the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] anticipates it will be. The same is true with respect to the Morganza floodway and the floodways of the Atchafalaya River.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Utah, of course, understands that it is not proposed to take the land. What is proposed to be taken is an easement or a flowage right, and under those circumstances the amount that would have to be paid for the easement would be much less than the full value of the land.

I see in the proposition which the Senator from Utah has raised considerable difficulty.

It is one, however, which would arise in any plan which might be agreed to, namely, effecting the prompt and amicable arrangements for the acquisition of these rights-of-way. But the theory of the bill is, as I understand it, that local institutions and agencies of the State, such as levee districts, will be used to secure these grants within limits that would bring the aggregate amount of the 75 percent of the grants within $20,000,000. Then as to the other 25 percent, recognizing the fact that there will be some-perhaps many-who will not be quick to make contracts, the Chief of Engineers must proceed in court to condemn.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, in other words, we will not let a small minority interfere with the execution of the

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but it will be only as to 25 percent. If he should fail to get the 75 percent within the limitations provided in the bill, the whole project would fail. Mr. OVERTON. Let me say to the Senator from Utah further in this connection that although these floodways necessarily run through Louisiana, yet the people of that State, after so many generations, having been afflicted with these devastating floods, are willing patriotically to cooperate with the Federal Government in the granting of the necessary rights and easements for levees and for floodways in order that that valley may be protected from further floods. I understand that, for instance, down in the Atchafalaya River there is scarcely any property owner who objects to granting, for a reasonable price, flowage rights in the Morganza and the West Atchafalaya floodways. I further understand that the majority of the people in the Eudora floodway favor the construction of the Eudora floodway, and that they are not going to ask such excessive prices as to operate as a stumbling block in the acquisition of the necessary rights for the construction of the Eudora.

Now I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Senator has stated that the amendments which he is submitting will bring the bill into complete harmony with the viewpoint of the engineers. If that is so, that is conclusive so far as I am concerned. I desire to ask the Senator specifically if his amendments have cured the Secretary of War's complaint and the Chief of Engineers' complaint against section 5 of the original bill.

Mr. OVERTON. It has not. That is excepted in the letter written by the Secretary of War. The provisions of section 5 represent a project which has been recommended by the Mississippi River Commission. It is not recommended by the Chief of Engineers. I shall get to that later, unless the Senator desires me to discuss that one particular project at the present time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; except that I should like to have it clear in my mind as to what the status is. I am afraid I did not understand the Senator. Am I to understand that, so far as the War Department's objection to section 5 of the original bill is concerned, it still stands against the Overton bill as it will be amended?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes; it still stands.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I invite the Senator's attention-and I ask him for information-to the letter of the Secretary of War, which seems to be without date, addressed to the Senator from New York [Mr. Copeland], with respect to section 12.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, that objection has been removed, I may say to the Senator from Utah, by the amendment which has been agreed upon between the Chief of Engineers, myself, as the author of the bill, and the

Mr. KING. Will it remove the objection which I infer is leveled against the bill, found in the following sentence:

This responsibility will involve claims not only for the flood-ways proper, but for the Red River backwater area, and for the lands frequently overflowed in the lower Atchafalaya Basin from south of Krotz Springs to the Gulf of Mexico. It will also involve the damage claims for railways, highways, pipe lines, telegraph, telephone, and power lines, and other utilities. Timber interests in the lower Atchafalaya Basin and elsewhere have advanced the claim that proposed modification of overflow conditions will injure timber growth. timber growth.

Will the objections which are offered in the light of this challenge to section 12 by the Secretary of War be removed by the amendment which the Senator tenders?

Mr. OVERTON. Of course, the Senator will understand that that report made by the Secretary of War was prepared by the Chief of Engineers. The Chief of Engineers has written to me, stating as follows:

Dear Senator Overton: You will find enclosed a copy of S. 3531, entitled "A bill to amend the act entitled 'An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes', approved May 15, 1928", into which have been incorporated certain amendments, as follows:

(1) A complete revision of section 7.

(2) An amendment to section 10.

(3) A complete redraft of section 12.

This bill with these amendments avecant as to section 5, each

This bill, with these amendments, except as to section 5, conforms to the views of the Chief of Engineers, and, in my opinion, satisfies the objections urged to the bill in the report thereon made by the Secretary of War.

Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Louisiana will proceed.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, recurring to the necessity of constructing floodways, I desire to read a statement made by General Markham during the hearings by the Senate Commerce Committee when it had under consideration, as it still has, for that matter, the omnibus flood-control bill. I propounded this question to General Markham:

I want to ask you the direct question, and I think you have already given an unequivocal answer to it: Can floods in the lower Mississippi Valley be controlled successfully without the construction of either the Boeuf or the Eudora floodways?

General Markham. They cannot be.

Senator Overton. And after you and the Army engineers and the Mississippi River Commission have made a further study of this situation, you have come to the conclusion that the Eudora floodway, as a substitute, is better than the Boeuf floodway?

General Markham. For the reasons that I stated early this morning.

Senator Overton. It is more economical; it is less damaging; it takes in less property?

General Markham. It has a higher conservation in it.

Further in the hearings, on page 65, General Markham | testified as follows:

Senator Overton. Therefore neither the combination of the use of cut-offs nor of reservoirs on the White and Arkansas Rivers will suffice to keep sufficient water out of the main channel, or so increase the hydraulic energy of the Mississippi River proper as to dispense with the Eudora floodway?

General MARKHAM. We think not.

Mr. President, I think I have covered the question of floodways, viewed from the standpoint of the necessity of their construction and of their operation.

I wish to say, as a Senator from Louisiana, that if I had not reached the deliberate judgment that these floodways are not necessary. I certainly would not have incorporated them in any bill or advocated them in any bill that provided for their construction. Why? Because these floodways are all located on Louisiana soil. The Eudora floodway starts in southeastern Arkansas, flows down through southeastern Arkansas and eastern Louisiana into the Red River backwater area, and thence on down into the Atchafalaya floodway, where the water is taken into the Gulf of Mexico.

The Atchafalaya floodways are located exclusively on Louisiana soil. The Bonnet Carre floodway is located exclusively on Louisiana soil. The reason is that the hills on the east side of the Mississippi River come down to the river so that these floodways and diversion channels cannot be constructed on the east side of the river, but must be constructed upon the west side of the river.

I wish now to invite the attention of the Senate to what has been done under the Jadwin plan, and as I proceed I shall undertake to show what is proposed under the modifications suggested by General Markham. On the wall of the Chamber is a map showing this great project. It starts at Cape Girardeau, which is located at the top of the map, and extends down to the head of the passes at the Gulf of Mexico. There has been constructed at the head of that alluvial valley a floodway known as the Birds Point-New Madrid floodway. This is not a diversion channel, for the reason that the water which will be emptied into this floodway will go back into the Mississippi River at its southern end. levees on the Mississippi River from Cape Girardeau down to the White and Arkansas Rivers have been practically completed.

To the right of the descending bank of the Mississippi River on its west side is the St. Francis River. That river is an alluvial plain river. It runs parallel to the Mississippi River. That area is now successfully protected from the floodwaters of the Mississippi River by the levees which have been constructed on it under the adopted plan. But that territory is subject to frequent floodage by the waters of the St. Francis River. It is futile, Mr. President, for the Government to protect that territory with these expensive levees on the west side of the Mississippi River opposite the St. Francis Basin and then permit that territory to be flooded by the waters of the St. Francis River. Therefore, General Markham and the Mississippi River Commission have suggested, as a modification of the plan, that floodcontrol works be constructed on the St. Francis River at a cost of $16,000,000. The people in that area have taxed themselves to the extent of $20,000,000 to provide protection from the floods of the Mississippi River. They are not getting protection on account of the territory being flooded by the waters of the St. Francis.

The same is true in respect to the Yazoo Valley. Yazoo River is another river which is an alluvial plain river. It parallels the Mississippi River. The people in that valley have contributed the great sum of $50,000,000 in undertaking to protect themselves from the floodwaters of the Mississippi River, but after they have obtained this protection they are still subject to overflow in that rich Mississippi Delta country by the floodwaters of the Yazoo. Therefore, General Markham has suggested that the Jadwin plan be further modified by the construction of flood-control works in the Yazoo Valley at a cost of around $48,000,000.

What is proposed to be done in order to protect those great, rich, and fertile basins, the St. Francis and the Yazoo, was done, Mr. President, under the Jadwin plan in order to protect the Tensas Basin. In order to rescue the Tensas Basin from floodage, levees were constructed on the south banks of the Arkansas River, from Pine Bluff to its mouth, up to 1928 grade and section. These levees insure the safety of all the area extending from the south bank of the Arkansas River down to the Red River backwater area in central Louisiana. That territory was protected by the levees of the Mississippi River. After being so protected, they were in constant menace of being overflowed by the waters of the Arkansas River. For a similar reason a line of levees was likewise constructed on the south bank of the Red River in order to protect from overflow not only the valley of the Red River but also the valley of the Atchafalaya River not taken up by the floodways.

I requested General Markham to write to me stating exactly his view in reference to the construction of floodcontrol works on the Yazoo and on the St. Francis, because the objection had been made in the course of the hearings that if these tributary rivers were to obtain flood protection, all other tributaries on the Mississippi River should likewise be embraced within the plan. I read the letter of General Markham, written to me under date of March 12, 1936, as follows:

Dear Senator Overton: I am in receipt of your letter of March 11, 1936, saying that flood-control works by the Federal Government had been recommended by me on the Yazoo and St. Francis Rivers and asking me to differentiate these two tributaries from such tributaries as the White and Arkansas Rivers in their respective relation to the flood-control plan recommended by me.

My report of February 12, 1935, recommends flood-control works in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River. Laws enacted and precedents set by Congress indicate a material Federal interest in the alluvial valley of the lower Mississippi.

The St. Francis River flows through a large area west of the Mississippi River near the head of and within the alluvial valley. Some 4.684 square miles in the St. Francis Basin have been protected by levees from Mississippi floods, the residents of the basin contributing $20,000,000 toward the work. Nearly one-half of this area is still subject to flooding from the headwaters of the St. Francis River. The Yazoo Basin is a large lowland area within the alluvial valley on the east side of the Mississippi River. The Yazoo River drains this area. Some 4,900 square miles of this territory have been protected by levees from Mississippi floods. The inhabitants of the basin have contributed over $50,000,000 toward the execution of these works. Part of the s50,000,000 toward the execution of these works. Part of the area, however, is subject to floods from the Yazqo itself, since the discharge capacity of the channels of that river in the low-lands is insufficient to carry off the flood waters. Approximately $20,000,000 have been expended by a number of local districts to remedy this flood situation, but the work accomplished has been insufficient. ineffective.

Under the provisions of section 7 of the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928, the United States has repeatedly expended funds for the repair of flood-control works along the St. Francis and Yazoo Rivers. These periodic expenditures indicate that it would be advantageous to permanently correct the situation along these rivers. The above-described conditions with respect to the St. Francis and Yazoo Rivers place these rivers in a category different from tributaries outside of the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is the White River considered to be in the alluvial valley?

Mr. OVERTON. It is not, except in reference to its lower

Mr. VANDENBERG. Am I correct in my information that the White River project has not yet been finally approved by the Board of Engineers?

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But it is included in the pending Overton bill. Is that correct?

Mr. OVERTON. I thought the Senator was referring to the reservoirs on the upper White River.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am.

Mr. OVERTON. Those reservoirs are located in the upper reaches. They are in the alluvial plain. They are not inincluded in this bill.

The next provision of the pending bill, which undertakes to modify the Jadwin plan, is the construction of the White River reservoir. This is not a detention reservoir in the sense of accumulating floodwaters that flow down into the main stem of the Mississippi River. That reservoir is an emergency reservoir located at or near the mouth of the White River down in the alluvial plain.

The purpose of that reservoir is simply this: When the crest of the Mississippi River flood stage is critically high, at the proper crucial moment, through a controlled intake, the reservoir will be opened, and the water will flood the area contained within the reservoir. That will have the effect of reducing the flood stage anywhere from 4, 5, or 6 inches to 2 feet, depending upon the duration of the flood.

It is readily conceivable that if the flood should last for some time after that reservoir had been filled, it would lose its effect on reducing the flood levels; but when the crest stage is of comparatively short duration it will have a very substantial effect on reducing the flood levels of the Missis-

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a further question?

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator may.

Mr. VANDENBERG. As I understand, the pending Overton bill, in respect to the White River sector, abandons any requirement for contributions. Is that correct?

Mr. OVERTON. In the construction itself; yes. The local interests are to relieve the Government of any damage. They are to provide, without any cost to the United States Government, all the flowage rights rendered necessary whenever the reservoir is used. They are to provide all other easements. The sole burden that will be placed upon the Federal Government in respect to the White River reservoir will be the cost of construction, and that only.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I ask the Senator one further question? To what extent is that a departure from the traditional method of dealing with flood control in this area? Is it any departure?

Mr. OVERTON. In my humble judgment, it is not a departure. We have, on down the valley, what are commonly known as backwater areas. They are unleveed. There in my own State of Louisiana is the great Red River backwater area. That is not leveed, or only partially leveed. It is left open as a reservoir to hold an appreciable amount of floodwaters of the Mississippi River. The White River Reservoir is to serve that purpose, and I think in a much more effective way, because it is to be used at the critical, crucial moment when the flood stage is high on the Mississippi River. Then the intake of the White River Reservoir will be opened, allowing the spilling of the waters from the Mississippi and the White Rivers into the reservoir, and thereby reducing the flood stages, just as other backwater areas reduce the flood stages.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. And this reservoir, being located close to the river, will reduce the high-stage level more than perhaps any other reservoir that could be established in the alluvial valley.

Mr. OVERTON. In my opinion, more than any other single reservoir.

Mr. ROBINSON. I recall that while the Mississippi River Commission did not estimate the reduction to be so much, the chief engineer of Louisiana, Mr. Jacobs-who, as the Senator knows, is a very great engineer—estimated that the effect of the White River Reservoir would be to reduce the level of the river somewhere in the neighborhood of 2 feet, which, of course, is a very great amount at a time of high-

Mr. OVERTON. Indeed, as General Markham has observed, perhaps a reduction of 6 inches would save the situation at a critical time.

Mr. ROBINSON. The lowest estimate was six-tenths of a

Mr. OVERTON. That was the lowest estimate. Mr. ROBINSON. The highest was 2 feet.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. Perhaps I am disturbing the continuity of the Senator's observations.

Mr. OVERTON. Not at all.

Mr. KING. I was called from the Chamber; but I was interested in the statement of the Senator when he was describing the flow of the river and the failure of the construction of reservoirs in the upper reaches of the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers to mitigate conditions, or at least to save the situation in Louisiana. I do not quite understand it.

It seems to me that if an adequate number of reservoirs were constructed, beginning up in the Rocky Mountains with the Missouri River, and then up in Minnesota and Wisconsin with the Mississippi River, and those reservoirs were adequate to hold back the floodwaters, there would be no menace to the lowlands in Louisiana and to the lands which are expected to be protected by the project which is now under consideration.

Mr. OVERTON. I may say to the Senator that that observation is in conflict with the thoroughly studied views of the Mississippi River Commission and of the Corps of Army Engineers. After studying the Mississippi River for years and years and years, they have come to the conclusion that the only sure plan and the only safe plan by which the lower valley can be protected is not by reservoirs but by the construction of levees as high as they can be built safely and economically, to be supplemented by the construction of General Markham, in his statement which I read awhile ago-perhaps the Senator was not present-stated, after I put that theory to him, that this plan of levees and floodways was the only answer that the Mississippi River Commission and the Corps of Army Engineers had been able to discover, or to uncover, or to make.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact, however, that the major part of the waters of the Mississippi River, let us say at the lower part of the State of Missouri and the beginning of the State of Arkansas, come from the Mississippi and the Missouri Rivers? In other words, are not the main tributaries, so far as the floods down in Louisiana are concerned, attributable to the Mississippi and the Missouri Rivers, in contradistinction to the White River, or the Ohio River, or any other of the tributaries?

Mr. OVERTON. No; our greatest floods come from the Ohio River.

Mr. ROBINSON. Just the reverse is true in the lower valley. The tributaries which contribute to the floods are the Ohio, the White, the Arkansas, the Red, and some others.

Mr. OVERTON. The Ohio is the principal offender.

Mr. KING. More so than the Mississippi?

Mr. OVERTON. The Mississippi takes in the Ohio, because, of course, as the Senator well knows, the Ohio is tributary to the Mississippi.

Mr. KING. Of course, I understand that.

Mr. OVERTON. I shall give the Senator my thought about this whole matter of reservoirs. Down in the lower valley there is a bottleneck through which these flood waters have to pour. It will remain a bottleneck, a dangerous, superflooded bottleneck, unless we secure a method of permanently diverting a certain amount of water from the Mississippi River. It will remain a serious, unsolved problem until we divert the surplus waters of the Mississippi River into the Gulf of Mexico through other channels.

Why is that? Into that bottle neck there comes the run-off from an area which extends from the Alleghenies to the Rocky Mountains, which extends from western New York to far-off Montana. It is an area drained by thousands upon thousands of streams and rivulets, which find their way into various tributary rivers and thence into other and larger tributaries and thence into the Mississippi itself, and this accumulated flow in times of great precipitation comes from this vast area, covering 41 percent of the entire continental United States, embracing in whole or in part 31 or more States of the Union. It comes, in the flood stages, right down into the lower valley and into that necessarily narrow channel represented by the Mississippi River with the levees on both sides.

What is to be done? Are reservoirs to be constructed from New York to Montana in order to hold back these floodwaters? My answer to that is that it would take years and years and years, and the only successful way to do it would be by spending not merely the $272,000,000 represented by the pending bill but by expending far in excess of a billion dollars.

The further answer is that the engineers reported at the last session of Congress, in a written report entitled "A Comprehensive Study of Reservoirs on the Tributaries of the Mississippi River", that these reservoirs if constructed could not be used for anything else but detention reservoirs; that they could not be used for purposes of manufacturing power, that they could not be used for purposes of irrigation, that they would be constructed and exist merely as a negative and restraining influence, and would have no constructive force and uses in upbuilding the areas in which they are located.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, would the Senator from Louisiana care to suspend his remarks now and let us take a recess?

Mr. OVERTON. I should be glad to do so.

UNITED POCAHONTAS COAL CO.-VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 195)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 2697, entitled "An act for the relief of the United Pocahontas Coal Co., Crumpler, W. Va."

This bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury and/or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to receive and consider, without regard to any statute of limitations, any claim filed by the United Pocahontas Coal Co., of Crumpler, W. Va., within 6 months after passage of the bill, for the refund of any income and excess-profits taxes overpaid by the company for the year 1919. The bill would authorize and direct the refund of such taxes regardless of the fact that the period of limitations for filing such claim by this taxpayer has long since expired.

On several occasions there have been submitted to me other bills which proposed to except certain taxpayers from the operation of the statutes of limitations pertaining to the revenue laws by extending the time for the refunding of amounts paid by such taxpayers. On those occasions I expressed my accord with the enacted policy of Congress that it is sound to include in all revenue acts statutes of limitations, by the operation of which, after a fixed period of time, it becomes impossible for the Government to collect additional taxes or for the taxpayer to obtain a refund of an overpayment of taxes. I pointed out in each instance that such legislation selects a small class of taxpayers for special treatment by excepting them from that policy, thus discriminating against the whole body of Federal taxpayers, and establishing a precedent which would open the door to relief in all cases in which the statute operates to the prejudice of a particular taxpayer, while leaving the door closed to the Government in those cases in which the statute operates to the disadvantage of the Government.

In this regard the instant measure, S. 2697, does not differ in principle from the bills which were under consideration on those prior occasions. I know of no circumstances which would justify the exception made by S. 2697 to the long-continued policy of Congress. Again I must express my belief that the field of special legislation should not be opened to relieve special classes of taxpayers from the consequences of their failure to protect their claims for the refund of taxes within the period fixed by law.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 16, 1936.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, APRIL 17, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our gracious Father in Heaven, be pleased to hear us as we wait at the altar of prayer. Grant grace, mercy, and peace to each of us and withdraw not the shield of Thy holy presence. We pray Thee, blessed Lord, to give us rich conceptions of the constancy of Thy goodness, which is woven of the silver and golden threads of divine affection. We entreat Thee to enlighten us in all our labors and inspire us to wise action, and may we seek to embody the truth in our thoughts and deliberations. We would hear the vow of the teacher of Israel: "I will behave myself wisely in a perfect way. I will set no wicked thing before mine eyes. I will hate the work of them that turn aside; it shall not cleave to me; a froward heart shall depart from me and I will not know wickedness." In the name of our Lord and Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

FEES OF JURORS AND WITNESSES IN UNITED STATES COURTS

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 568, to provide an additional appropriation for fees of jurors and witnesses, United States courts, for the fiscal year 1936.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the hearings before the Appropriations Committee indicate that the appropriation, as I understand it, is exhausted or will be within a week and they have not the money to pay the jurors and the witnesses for the rest of this fiscal year. Is it not true, may I ask the gentleman from Texas, that they will have to shut down the courts if we do not do this?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am advised by the Attorney General that they will have to shut down the courts unless the appropriation is made. The appropriation is now $100,000 in the red.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Nine hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. RICH. And that is for witnesses?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Witness fees and fees of jurors in all United States courts.

Mr. RICH. And this is absolutely necessary in order to conduct the business of the courts?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly, and Congress cannot control the amount, because the cases are called for trial and the judges approve the bills; and whatever bills are approved, we have to pay. The fees are fixed by law.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman that I appreciate the work the gentleman is doing to keep down the expenses of government, but the gentleman ought to let the judges of this country know also that they are bringing in here exorbitant bills that they want us to approve, and it is our duty not only to look after the expenses we are incurring but the expenses incurred by other people who are coming here to ask for the money of the taxpayers, and I hope the gentleman will insist that they keep this expense down to the minimum.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We try to do that.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman why one statement was made that unless this appropriation is provided we would have to close up the courts within a week, and another statement was made that we are now $100,000 overdrawn. Which statement is correct?

Mr. BUCHANAN. They are both correct.

Mr. BOILEAU. If we have gone $100,000 in the red so far, how has that happened?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Obligations have been incurred by various courts in holding scheduled trials. There is no more money to pay jurors and witnesses and we cannot ask them to continue to hold court and tell jurors and witnesses they have no money to pay them. The overobligation of $100,000 distributed among all our courts is not very embarrassing, but it does become so if it increases very much more without funds.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the courts were closed for a year, would we not be better off?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think not. I am in favor of law and order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I differ with the gentleman, but I am not going to object.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 568

Resolved, etc., That for an additional amount for fees of jurors and witnesses, United States courts, including the same objects specified under this head in the Department of Justice Appropriation Act, 1936, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $900,000 for the fiscal year 1936.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL AND SELECT COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 567) to provide an additional appropriation for expenses of special and select committees of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1936.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, this is required as a result of the deficiency that is in prospect as a result of the action of the House in giving this authority to spend money.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will state to my colleague that it is the result of the action of the House in authorizing these investigations and then fixing by resolutions the amount that may be expended by the several investigating committees. The Appropriations Committee and the Accounts Committee have no control over it after the House authorizes it. The special committees can incur the expenses and they

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Texas why it is necessary to continue to have $3,600 as a limitation on any legal talent that is retained by these committees?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Thirty-six hundred dollars applies to any talent, legal or otherwise, and I think it is a very wise provision. What called for the enactment of that clause, for which I am partially responsible, was that we found out one select committee was paying $14,000 a year for a man to help them. The Senate had a similar provision before the House adopted this.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If the gentleman will allow me, I should like to ask this question: Why should a committee of the House or Senate be limited to paying only $3,600 for an attorney to fight an attorney of William Randolph Hearst who is getting $75,000? Are we not entitled to as good talent as they are?

Mr. BUCHANAN. They can make special arrangements when it becomes necessary.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. They tried to make special arrangements the other day to pay $10,000 for an attorney and the House voted it down, and I am going to object to this.

Mr. Speaker, I object.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA RENT BILL

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution

House Resolution 489

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 11563, a bill declaring an emergency in the housing condition in the District of Columbia; creating a Rent Commission for the District of Columbia; prescribing powers and duties of the commission, and for other purposes; and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. General debate on said bill shall be considered as closed, and the bill shall be considered as having been read the second time. Amendments may be offered to any section of the bill, but debate under the 5-minute rule shall be closed within one hour and a half. At the conclusion of the contideration of the bill or amendment. sideration of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of the District of Columbia rent bill. The bill has been debated for 3 whole days. There was an obvious filibuster carried on against it, and it was thought best to bring in a rule to bring the matter to an issue.

This rule is not strictly a gag rule. There has been more debate on this bill than on any other ordinary bill. So debate has not been gagged.

All this rule does is to provide for an hour and a half of debate on amendments, and that the debate shall then close. That same results could be accomplished by a motion in the Committee of the Whole at any time, when debate could be shut off. The rule is in that respect more liberal than the general rules. It is true that the rule provides that the bill shall be considered as having been read the second time. The bill has been read in full the first time before the filibuster, and the waiver of reading the bill a second time denies no one any rights.

Under the rule the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. and amendments are then in order to any part of the bill. Debate on these amendments must close within an hour and a half, but that does not cut off the offering of any amendment to the bill. There is no gag in the rule. A gag rule prevents or limits amendments. The rule is simply an attempt to expedite the business of the House. It does not go into the merits of the measure, but simply provides that, after due consideration, this House must function and that no fili- | rule which makes its fair consideration absolutely imposbustering can be permitted to interfere with the orderly, expeditious, and respectable conduct of the proceedings in this House.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. RICH. A few minutes ago the chairman of the Appropriations Committee asked for additional funds for the various committees of the House. During the past few years we have had set up 41 organizations of the Government that are now functioning, and you are now asking for another commission.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As Major Bowes would say, "All right; all right; all right." [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. I say, "All right"; but I want to say to you as chairman of the Rules Committee that the Rules Committee and you as chairman and leaders on that side must assume the responsibility for these appropriations.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will not the gentleman as a patriotic citizen help us to bear some of that responsibility?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the Republican members of the Committee on Rules find themselves in a somewhat awkward position. We are opposed to the legislation because we believe that nothing will come of the bill except more taxes for the people and jobs for a few privileged ones who may be selected. Notwithstanding our opposition, we are quite in sympathy with bringing the measure to a vote. We think a vote should always be possible in a parliamentary body. However, I cannot let this stringent and unusual rule be presented and adopted without at least voicing a protest. Our good chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] says the rule is not strictly a gag rule. If it is not strictly a gag rule, then I do not know what a gag rule is. There is to be no debate on the bill which, if it is to be enacted into law, should be materially amended. Any amendments proposed will only have a debate of 90 minutes. This is certainly not sufficient debate for a bill of this character. Finally, we do want to impress on the membership of the House that, at least so far as the Republican members of the Committee on Rules are concerned, we sincerely hope the rule will not be a precedent for future actions of the House. It would be most unfortunate if it was to become a habit.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman believe that we ought to establish any more commissions or set up a lot more organizations to investigate the Government and conditions in Washington when the law of supply and demand will regulate the housing conditions here probably just as well as it will in any other part of the country, and more so when we eliminate about 150,000 workers on the Government pay roll who ought to be back in our own districts instead of being in Washington and increasing the Government expense?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If that is a question, I will say that if I had my own way I would eliminate 90 percent of the commissions already in existence.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Let me assure the gentleman from Massachusetts that this is not a precedent, and, so far as I am concerned, will not be considered as such. We do not intend to bring District of Columbia bills in under rules. The District has 2 days a month for the purpose of legislation. The purpose of this rule is to perform a major operation in a very serious malady.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The statement of the chairman of the Committee on Rules placates us a great deal.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes up under a sible. In fact, the only way that a bill of this character can be properly considered is by having reasonable debate and reasonable opportunity for amendment, which is denied by the rule, and the debate and opportunity for amendment ought to run along in order on 1 day. That has not happened in this case; but owing to the parliamentary situation which has resulted, it is impossible that it should come in that way.

The bill itself is an orphan. The gentleman who introduced it told the House that the bill is nothing to him. The chairman of the committee spent a very considerable time in abusing those who are opposed to it, without presenting any legitimate argument in its favor. In fact no one has presented here on the floor any legitimate argument in favor of the bill. I am in hopes that the membership of the House will cast their votes on the measure upon its merits and not because this man or that man has been abused and not because of any resentment against anyone. As a matter of fact, it is a bill of very considerable importance. Objections were made to this bill of a very valid character by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. Its constitutionality was discussed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DOBBINS] last Monday, and he presented absolutely conclusive reasons why this House should not from a constitutional standpoint vote for any such bill as this. I do not want to have it charged to me when I am through in this House that in violation of what I regard my constitutional oath to be I deliberately voted for a measure knowing it to be unconstitutional.

This is not the first experience we have had with this kind of a bill. Such a bill was enacted into law in wartimes, which hung over us for several years and there never were any rent reductions under that bill. But it is a nice juicy bill to provide nice juicy jobs and that is the only possible excuse for voting for it. Then, the folks who vote for those jobs have the additional excuse to carry back home to their constituents that their constituents do not have to pay for these jobs, because we saddle those jobs on the taxpayers of the District of Columbia. Is not that a nice situation? No possible excuse for the bill except the creation of jobs, and we duck out from any responsibility for creating the jobs and say to our constituents that we saddle the expense on the taxpayers of the District of Columbia. Is not that a nice picture for us to carry back, and will not we look proud when we carry it back?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. RICH. If the statement made is correct that they are going to saddle the expense on the taxpayers of the District of Columbia, then eventually we will have to make a greater contribution to the District of Columbia, because the people here will not be able to carry on the affairs of the Government.

Mr. TABER. Oh, I hardly believe that the Members in the House would have the nerve to raise the amount of the Federal contribution above what it is in the District of Columbia appropriation bill for this year, because the folks back home would have to pay some of those taxes, and I do not believe that the folks back home want to pay any more taxes for the benefit of the taxpayers of the District of Columbia. There will be considerable hesitancy when it comes to that proposition.

In addition to creating a nice lot of juicy jobs, I think I should like to call attention of the House to some of the high spots in this bill.

For the purposes of this act the commission or any officers, examiners, engineers, appraisers, attorneys, or such other employees or agents shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy, any books, accounts, records, papers, or correspondence relating to any matter which the commission is authorized to consider or investigate.

They can look over an applicant's income tax to see whether he is in a position to pay the rent. They can look over all the books of anybody who owns any property at any time. I do not know whether other Members want to vote for that. I do not.

Complaints may be made and filed by or on behalf of any tenant and by or on behalf of the owner of any rental property, notwithstanding the existence of a lease or other contract between the tenant and the owner or between the owner or any guest. The commission may, and if requested shall, file with its determination a finding of the facts on the evidence presented, and upon which its determination is based.

That means if you have a lease and the landlord wants to get rid of you he can go before this commission, which, as you know, will have a great lot of District of Columbia people on it, and he can try to get rid of you, notwithstanding the fact that you have a lease. Suppose you come down here when Congress meets and make a lease on an apartment to carry you through the winter and the landlord has two or three more come in who will pay more, and he goes to the commission and says that he has been renting you this apartment at a lower rate than will justify giving him a return. He can take you before that commission. He can show that he is losing money on the job, and he can throw your lease out, and you can move out in the middle of your term. You have absolutely no protection on a contract with this sort of thing. The same thing applies to the landlord.

If the commission determines that such rents, charges, service, or other terms or conditions are unfair, or unreasonable it shall determine and fix such reasonable rent or charges therefor, and fair and reasonable service, terms, or conditions of use, or occupancy, and may also order and require the furnishing of such service by the owner as it shall lawfully determine to be fair and reasonable for the particular premises involved.

That means that they can go to a piece of property, and they can require the owner to give service by installing elevators, by doing any and all sorts of things that will cost him money, without regard to whether that owner can stand the expense, or whether he can borrow the money for it or not, and they can wipe out the total value of that owner's property by that operation. I do not believe in turning over to any commission the power to do anything of that kind.

The termination of the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties to any cause pending before the commission shall not deprive either party of the right to a hearing; or subsequent to the commission's determination therein, to a rehearing; or the right to recover in any action any sum which may be found to be due to either of the parties under such determination.

On page 13 they have some nice provisions:

The right of the tenant to the use or occupancy of any rental property existing at the time this act takes effect, or thereafter acquired, under any lease, or agreement for such use, or occupancy, or under any extension thereof by operation of law shall, notwithstanding the expiration of the term fixed by such lease or contract, continue at the option of the tenant subject, however, to any determination, or regulation of the commission relevant thereto—

and such tenant shall not be evicted or dispossessed so long as he pays the rent and performs the other terms and conditions of the tenancy as fixed by such lease or contract or, in case such lease or contract is modified by any determination or regulation of the commission, then as fixed by such modified lease or contract.

That means that a tenant can remain in possession of the property notwithstanding his lease has expired, notwithstanding the fact that the landlord has rented it to somebody else, notwithstanding, perhaps, that at the time that tenant hangs over, you or I have come down here a month or so ahead of time and have bargained for the apartment. If some tenant starts one of these proceedings, he can hang over and keep us from getting possession of a property that we have leased in good faith on our part from the landlord and which the landlord in good faith has leased to us. I do not believe the House of Representatives likes that kind of business.

Those are just a few of the things that are covered in this bill. I am not going to call attention to any more of them, because it seems to me the whole thing is absolutely ridiculous.

On page 23 there is a provision in section 21, as follows: The provisions of this act shall not apply to a new building in the course of construction at the time of the enactment of this act or commenced thereafter.

Now, that is a sop to the fellow who is apt to build a building. Relief for tenants has always come in the regular way as a result of landlords building more buildings. If the landlord is making an excessive profit, he will build more buildings. You try to destroy what the landlord has, and at the same time you try to delude him into building more apartments or houses. Do you suppose that will fool anybody? This bill will do more than anything else to keep people from building buildings, to keep people from building apartment houses and houses, and to keep the rents up. I do not think the House of Representatives wants to pass any such a bill. It is clearly in violation of the Constitution.

The assertion has been made, in an attempt to fool the membership of the House, that this bill is opposed by realestate agents. Personally, I know no real-estate agents in Washington. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton], who made a very good argument against this bill on the first day it was being considered, told us that he knew none of these real-estate agents. Frankly, I do not make it my practice to spend my time going to real-estate agents' banquets in the District of Columbia, nor to banquets given by any other outfit that would embarrass me in any way in performing my legislative duties here in this House. I do not believe the majority of the Members of the House spend their time this way; I do not believe the majority of our Members or any substantial number of them do. I think they want to meet what problems are theirs honestly, fairly, and face to face.

Summarizing in just a word, we have here, first, a bill that is unconstitutional; secondly, we have the experience with a previous bill which resulted in raising rents instead of lowering them and giving no relief to the tenants; thirdly, we have a bill containing a lot of absolutely ridiculous and unworkable provisions; fourthly, this bill is an orphan, the sponsor of which does not come out and tell us what the bill is, what it will do, fairly and straightforwardly. This is a bill in which abuse of those opposed to it is relied on as an argument for your support-nothing else; just bare abuse.

I hope the House will beat this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia 'Mr. Coxl.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I did not have occasion to read this bill until this morning. Frankly I am astounded that such a proposal as this should be seriously presented to this House with the expectation of favorable action.

This bill is State socialism with a vengeance. It violates every property right known to the law. Nothing worse has ever come out of Russia. It is an effort to shackle American freedom. In spite of this statement I am supporting the rule, for I want the question brought to an issue in this House for final determination one way or the other.

The rent commission to be set up under this bill will be able to establish complete dominion over the property rights of the people of the District of Columbia. The bill declares that all rental property in the District is affected with a public interest. A more absurd statement I do not think it possible for an intelligent mind to utter.

Do you know what is involved? Are you acquainted with the provisions of the bill? If you are not, then, in justice to yourself, I urge that you hurriedly scan the language of the bill before you go on record.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. With pleasure.

Mr. BLANTON. Yet, regarding such a bill as the gentleman has denounced, his great Rules Committee has brought in a rule stating that all points of order against the bill are waived, although points of order are to protect Members and to give them means to stop such outrageous bills.

Mr. COX. Let me say to the gentleman that I am meeting my responsibility as I understand it. The committee voted out this rule because of what has heretofore taken place with respect to the effort to get the bill to consideration in the House. While I do not like the bill or a single declaration contained in it—it is wholly and absolutely repugnant to my sense of justice-yet I think there was justification for the Rules Committee voting out this rule, because it brings the question to a vote in the House in the event the rule is adopted.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield?

Mr. COX. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Has anything been done by any of us not in accordance with the rules?

Mr. COX. No; that is true.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman helped make the rules. Mr. COX. My committee reported the rule and for that reason I shall vote for it, but I shall vote against the bill if the rule is adopted, and hope it will be defeated. Rental charges in Washington are far too high, but we cannot afford to violate all property rights as a means of rectifying the evil. [Here the gavel fell.]

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S OBJECTIVE

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address on the subject of President Roosevelt's objectives, delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] on the radio over the Yankee network on April 14 last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered over the radio on April 14 last by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack]:

Ladies and gentleman of the radio audience, at the outset I want to express my appreciation to the officials of station WNAC, Boston, and of the Yankee network for affording me the use of their facilities on this occasion, enabling me to speak to my friends and to the people of my district, comprising South Boston, Dorchester, Mattapan, and Hyde Park, and to the people of New England, from the Capital City of Washington.

In the brief time allotted to me I am going to discuss the objective of the present Democratic administration, under the constructive and courageous leadership of President Roosevelt. The structive and courageous leadership of President Roosevelt. observations that I will make are based on my studies and experiences as a Member of the Congress during the present Democratic ences as a Member of the Congress during the present Democratic and the past Republican administrations.

What is the objective of President Roosevelt and the present Democratic administration? That is a question that one hears on every hand. It is on everyone's lips. It is a proper and natural question to ask. In a few words, the objective is greater economic security and greater social justice for our people. When we view the legislation recommended by President Roosevelt, this objective is apparent. tive is apparent.

In looking over an administration, the same as looking over any person's public record, and just the same as another looking over our own record of life to date, the whole picture should be viewed and passed upon. To form and pass judgment on one act, either in public or private life, is not the correct and fair premise upon which to proceed. The whole picture should be viewed and honest judgment passed upon that picture instead of forming judgment upon one act that may not be approved in disregard to all others. As we look over the picture of this administration we see one of courageous leadership, of honest effort, of the attempt on the part of President Roosevelt to do the best that he possibly could under the existing circumstances. That is all that can be expected of anyone.

In considering what I have to say I call to your attention that every person, whether in or out of public life who has ever led and who in the future will lead the fight for the average person, will be attacked, villified, and subjected to every effort and charge try and inflame the people's minds against him in order that his efforts in behalf of the people will be defeated. It must be borne in mind that economic insecurity is a dreadful condition for any person to undergo. It is one of the curses of mankind. It is the duty of our Government to try as far as possible and proper within constitutional means to minimize the distressful condition of economic insecurity. It must also be borne in mind that economic insecurity can be decreased by the elimination of certain abuses which the present administration has undertaken to remove or control for the general welfare of our people. I will refer to them as I proceed.

I have said that the objective of President Roosevelt is to obtain greater economic security and greater social justice for the American people. I am now going to mention the legislation proposed by him and passed by a Democratic Congress in support of that assertion.

The present administration is divided into two parts: (1) Emergency legislation and (2) permanent legislation. The present depression, out of which we are emerging, brought economic insecurity to millions of our people who, in normal times, with employment, would be in a fairly satisfactory economic position. The depression affected this great class adversely, and something had to be done for them and for all others similarly affected.

To clearly appreciate the problems that faced President Roosevelt when he was inaugurated on March 4, 1933, we must permit our minds to go back to those trying days in order to understand the objective that he had in mind—greater economic security and social justice for our people. At that time the country was facing chaos. Over 5,000 banks had failed or had been suspended during the previous year; the deposits of 20,000,000 of our people, their life's savings in most cases, were threatened with loss. Our banking system, the economic lifeblood of our Nation, was imperiled. ing system, the economic lifeblood of our Nation, was imperiled. The Federal Government under the previous Republican administration had failed to act in behalf of human suffering. Local govtration had failed to act in behalf of human sthering. Local government—State and municipal—and local charities which had been carrying the relief burden for over 3 years, were unable to meet the demands. Around 15,000,000 of our people were unemployed. The abuses of the stock exchanges, which had contributed to bringing about the depression, still existed; nothing had been done to regulate or control them. The sale of fictitious stock, as a result of which our people were robbed of hundreds of millions of dollars each near was still permitted. of which our people were robbed of hundreds of millions of dollars each year, was still permitted. Foreclosure of home and farm and bankruptcy of business were general. Agriculture was in a terrible condition. Despair existed everywhere. Business leadership had failed to assume its duties and responsibilities. The air of defeatism prevalled. Some were even saying that we could not survive this depression. I refer to these facts to indicate the conditions and the feelings of fear that existed. In brief that was the situation that faced President Roosevelt. Under his leadership these conditions have changed. He undertook to meet the problems of the day. He gave to us what we were seeking and praying for—courageous leadership. courageous leadership.

It must also be remembered that today we are looking back, while in 1933 we were looking forward. It must also be borne in mind that hindthought is always better than forethought. It is the easiest thing in the world to be a critic. It must be remembered also that we have been enveloped in the greatest economic catastrophe that has ever confronted the world in its entire history. It must also be remembered that the problems of government are

It must also be remembered that the problems of government are many in days of adversity—they are few in days of prosperity. The only real problem in days of prosperity is to prevent the unreasonable expenditure of the taxpayers' money.

The first act of President Roosevelt was to save our banking system and the life's savings of 20,000,000 of our people. That act of his electrified the country. By saving our banking system and the deposits of millions he also saved our insurance companies, our entire financial and business life, which are dependent upon the existence of proper banking facilities. Certainly his act in the banking situation, constructive and courageous, meant greater ecobanking situation, constructive and courageous, meant greater economic security for all of our people, without regard to whether or not we had any money on deposit in any bank at that time. This courageous act alone entitles President Roosevelt to the everlasting gratitude of our people.

In addition, and to assure greater economic security to our people, he strengthened cur banking laws, so that we will not be faced in the future with a destruction of our banking system and of the wiping away of the life's savings of millions of our people. Not content with that, and in addition, he recommended, and the Congress passed, a law guaranteeing deposits in banks up to $5,000. Over 15,000 banks are members of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and all depositors of those banks are guaranteed payment of their deposits up to the sum of $5,000, and at no expense ment of their deposits up to the sum of $5,000, and at no expense ment of their deposits up to the sum of $5,000, and at no expense to the taxpayers. He not only met the emergency situation by closing all banks to prevent chaos, but President Roosevelt has obtained the passage of permanent legislation assuring protection of deposits and greater economic security for the American people. I next refer to the unemployment problem. What about their insecurity, due to no fault of their own? What about the results of undernourishment that are passed on from parents to children, the effects of which take at least two generations to die out? Faced with the inability of local government and of charitable organizations to carry on, President Roosevelt acted. He recommended and the Congress responded in order that emergency security, pending the return to normalcy, might be given to the unfortunate victims of the depression—millions of American citizens—of human beings. Relief had to be extended, and it was extended, to relieve human suffering and distress and to prevent the long-time effects of suffering and distress and to prevent the long-time effects of

The legislation to protect homes and farms against foreclosure, and to also save our banks, insurance companies, financial and business activities of all kinds, necessary for employment of millions—all have as their objective greater economic security and social justice. His efforts to stimulate business through increased consumption, and thereby increased production, resulting during the past 3 years in the reemployment of over 5,000,000 persons, also assure greater security to those benefited. That great battle, the complete return to normalcy and on a sounder basis, with the resultant reemployment of the still unemployed, is still going on. Better understanding between employer and employee through the labor legislation that has been passed is also a part of this protection. picture. That is a very important part of his objective. Improved business profits, which all right-thinking people want to see, have occurred since his inauguration, resulting in reemployment and greater security for both employer and employee. The attempt to obtain a greater distribution of earnings, an important and necessary part of any social-justice plan, aims toward greater economic security for all.

Social-security legislation providing for old-age pensions for the needy—the first time in our history that the Federal Government has done this—which can at a later date be somewhat increased as conditions improve; unemployment insurance, to reduce the hardships of a future depression; old-age contributory annuities, enabling employees to obtain an earned annuity when their years of productivity are over—are also powerful evidences of his objective of greater economic security and of greater social justice.

Stock exchanges—a means of the purchase and sale of corporate securities—have a useful and necessary place in our finanrate securities—have a useful and necessary place in our financial and business life. However, abuses have no place therein. Such abuses have been a contributing factor to most of the depressions that we have had. Such abuses played an important part in bringing about the present depression. The regulation or part in bringing about the present depression. The regulation or control of such abuses is necessary for our future welfare—and for our national economic security. Over 20 years ago a congressional committee recommended legislation regulating the abuses of stock exchanges. It was under the leadership of President Roosevelt, despite powerful opposition, that it was accomplished.

The legislation to prevent the watering of stock and to prevent the fraudulent issuance and sale of stock was passed under his leadership, saving the American investors hundreds of millions of dollars each year, thereby assuring greater protection and greater economic security.

The effort to shorten the workweek as one of the means of means.

The effort to shorten the workweek as one of the means of preventing displacement of human labor by labor-saving machinery, the elimination of child labor, of the sweatshop, started by President Roosevelt, the victory of which he is fighting to achieve, and will, with your help and support, are also important parts of his great objective. The regulation and control of the abuses of finance and of industry, the prevention of monopoly, the effort to enable the small-business man to continue in competitive business, are known by all and are necessary for the economic security of are known by all, and are necessary for the economic security of our people.

In a troubled world, filled with selfish nations, with no regard for In a troubled world, filled with selfish nations, with no regard for international agreements and treaties, and the necessity of our national defense, of means to assure our national security, have received his consideration, resulting in a proper increase of our Army and Navy to assure adequate national defense in case of attack. It is the duty of a nation to preserve its own existence to retain its place among the nations of the world, and to employ such means as will assure its continued existence. That has been done. I call to your attention the fact that while a Congressman represents a district—a Senator a State—the President represents the whole United States. He must view the country and the people as a whole. It is only natural to expect that there are some parts of a whole. It is only natural to expect that there are some parts of the program of President Roosevelt with which some do not agree. the program of President Roosevelt with which some do not agree. However, the objective of greater economic security is one, I am sure, with which we all agree. As we look over the whole picture, when we compare the conditions of today with those of March 1933, which President Roosevelt inherited, I submit to all honest and fair-minded persons that it is a fine picture to view. Some complain about expenses. That will probably be the main issue next fall. In this connection, let me remind you that when sickness comes into our family—when someone of our loved ones is seriously ill—the family expenses go up rapidly. We will do anything spend next fall. In this connection, let me remind you that when sickness comes into our family—when someone of our leved ones is seriously ill—the family expenses go up rapidly. We will do anything, spend all we have, and borrow, if necessary, to save our leved one. In March of 1933 we were a sick Nation—very ill—seriously afflicted with a disorganized economic system and its dreadful results. Under the leadership of President Roosevelt we are now recovering from that condition. By the election of 1932 we sought a different leadership and treatment of our national sickness and its problems. As a Nation and as a people we did not want to leave our illness subject only to the treatment of past depressions and the leadership that we had received from 1929 to 1933, with the harshness and suffering of the cold and destructive policy of do nothing—of letting the natural laws of economics run their course.

With the mandate of the people, President Roosevelt gave leadership and treatment to the sick Nation that have brought results. That policy, of necessity, called for large expenditures to bring the patient back to health. Now that we are convalescing let us not forget the acute pain and suffering of those days. Let us realize that money had to be spent, and will have to be spent, to obtain for our people the complete recovery that we are all seeking. The economic illness of a nation brings unexpected and unusual expenses just the same as the illness of a loved one brings it to the family.

Therefore, as we view the emergency and permanent policies of President Roosevelt, we see that their objective is greater economic security and greater social justice for all of our people. That is a fight which has been waged from time immemorial—it will continue as long as the human race exists. Those who lead this fight must expect to meet strong opposition—the attempt to instill fear of such leadership in the minds of the people whom they seek to assist—the determined effort to create misunderstanding as to their motives and objec motives and objectives. President Roosevelt has met and will continue to meet such opposition. However, with an understanding on the part of our people of his great objective—greater economic security and greater social justice for our people—with the realization on your part that he is leading your fight—with your help and support—he will continue to wage this fight to obtain for us, in our day, improved conditions—bringing to us a stronger feeling of protection and a greater feeling of spiritual and material happiness and contentment, and passing on to the future generations the knowledge that we of this generation met and determined our problems in a manner that was for the best interests of this and future generations of America.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes, the balance of my time, to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hoff-

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, had this bill been considered on its merits, the first time it came up it would, in my judgment, have been overwhelmingly defeated. We should now lay aside all personal feeling and defeat it today. But we all know what happened, those opposing it, believing it unconstitutional, started and carried on a filibuster and because of the delay, because of the many roll calls, and of the personalities which were indulged in, because of the filibuster, this rule became necessary. The rule is a practical answer to the filibuster and will enable the House to dispose of this legislation and to do it at once, though it should be remembered that the gentleman from Texas in opposing this bill only exercised his rights under the rules of this House, and believing as he undoubtedly does that the bill is unconstitutional, and being perhaps somewhat in doubt as to the ultimate outcome, characteristically and very vigorously and tenaciously stuck to his plan of attempting to defeat it at all hazards, regardless of any inconvenience he might cause.

There is no question in the minds of those who come from outside the District and who have not been in the habit of paying exorbitant rates that we should have legislation which would accomplish the purpose which presumably is the object of this bill.

There is no question, there can be no question, in the minds of those familiar with rents charged for homes, apartments, rooms, and with the rates charged by hotels in other cities of like size for accommodations similar to those offered in Washington, but that we who are called here on Government business are being unmercifully gouged. There should be, and there is, a way to overcome this condition. For my part, if this District is under control of the Congress. I cannot understand why we who are forced to come here in order to perform our duties, why those who come to assist us, those who come to visit us on business or pleasure, those who have business with the departments which can only be transacted here in the Nation's Capital should not have living accommodations and have them at a reasonable price. Some of the people who live here, some of those who own and rent this real estate, who operate the hotels, reply, "We do not ask you to come here; you do not need to come here; if you do not like it, you should go elsewhere." But that is not the situation, that is not altogether true. We have no choice. The District happens to be the seat of the National Government. It is here that the larger portion of the Nation's business must be transacted. There is no other place to which we can go and perform our duties. There is no other location where this business can be transacted.

Nor is there any question but that the rents charged are exorbitant—that advantage is taken of the situation. Last year some of us were charged almost twice as much for the rooms we occupied as were those who occupied them the preceding year. This year rates are still higher. Some of the rooms I have been in were small, altogether too small for a large man, a trunk, or a suitcase.

Mr. HAMLIN rose.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; I see the gentleman from Maine, who has arisen. The small rooms do not bother me, because I am a little fellow, and I can crawl into almost any place, but my good friend the gentleman from Maine, 6 feet 3 inches, and 240 pounds of a big fellow from top to bottomhe is big, not only physically but intellectually, greatest of all, perhaps, in his kindly good-fellowship. He should have a room in which he can move about, in which he could not only move but breathe. It may be all right to put a little fellow in a cell, but a big man like my friend should have room and plenty of it.

Mr. Speaker, after all, is the District of Columbia controlled by the Government, by the Congress—is it the place set apart for the transaction of the Nation's business, for the residence, temporary though it may be, of those who come the gentleman from Texas and from New York in their efforts here as officials, of those who come to assist in carrying on the governmental work? Or is it only the property of the individuals who come here to profit from the salaries and the wages of the employees?

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentlewoman from New

Mrs. NORTON. Of course the gentleman knows that every Member on the floor of the House has constituents here in Washington who are being gouged.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Certainly. We are all glad to have the home folks visit us and to be privileged to show them the historic places in the city. But we do not wish to see them overcharged. Today three of the loveliest young women from my home town, Miss Cordelia Lockner, Miss Helen Lockner, and Miss Mildred Schelhas, two of whom have been associated with the home office for a number of years, are here. When they came to Washington they discovered that the hotels were filled. There was no place for them, and so it became necessary that I give up to them the place which I had in this fine building just across the park because they could not get a place elsewhere. This, of course, was a pleasure; but when you reach my age, after you have become eligible to the Townsend pension, just any place to sleep will not do. And good rooms are hard to find. This thing of going out and sleeping in your car or crawling into a barrel or a box or an old building is not altogether agreeable to an old man. Others of the home folks went down to Alexandria and to other points outside the city because they could not find accommodations in Washington.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman realize that the rights of the property owners here in the District of Columbia are taken away from them under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; I realize that full well. In my judgment those provisions and the other which would impair the obligation of a contract render the bill unconstitutional and will force many to vote against it. I am only speaking now for the moment of the conditions which exist here in the District.

Mr. COX. We concede that the condition exists, but does the gentleman want to take one's property rights away from him in order to remedy that situation?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; but here is the answer to that. Those people who own this property came here from choice. You may say, "We come for the same reason", but that is not strictly accurate. We seek office or employment from choice, but we have no choice as to the place where the service is to be rendered. We are servants of the people, the people established this location as the seat of government. and here we must serve. Carry the thought to its logical conclusion: the Government will grow, the number of employees will increase, the size of the District remains the same. If a real-estate speculator or a group of speculators purchased the available property, a monopoly would be created, rents might be raised, Congressmen, the secretaries, Government employees, and officials, unless unbelievably wealthy, would have no place to stay. Such a situation is a possibility. There must some day be regulation to prevent monopoly and extortion. If someone's property rights must be destroyed, then the rule of necessity must be applied. If one of two innocent persons must suffer, then, of necessity, the Government must protect itself, its officials, its employees, and those who come here to profit in a business way, either through real estate or otherwise, must be regulated. The charges must be limited.

This bill is bad as drawn, its provisions unconstitutional. Another bill should be brought in which will be just, equitable, and accomplish the designed purpose. Most assuredly, if the Congress controls the territory within the District of Columbia, emergency or no emergency, it has the right, the duty, to protect itself and those who are necessary to its existence.

For this rule I cannot vote for the reason that it is merely a device, expedient for the moment, to thwart the purpose of to defeat this unconstitutional legislation. For the bill itself I cannot vote, though I believe in the purpose which presumably is sought to be accomplished, because I believe the bill is not constitutional, and there is no reason why we should shirk our responsibility and throw upon the Supreme Court of the United States, already overburdened, the task of considering legislation which we believe to be legally unsound. plause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Louisiana for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON].

IMPROVEMENT OF NAVIGABILITY, ETC., OF THE CONNECTICUT RIVER AND ITS TRIBUTARIES

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 4979) to insure domestic tranquillity, to provide for the common defense, and to promote the general welfare of the United States by improving the navigability, controlling the flood waters, and eliminating the pollution of the Connecticut River and its tributaries; by providing for the development and improvement of forest reserves, recreational grounds, parks, and highways, and the preservation of wildlife; by promoting agriculture and industry, and by producing electrical energy for interstate transmission, and also by providing healthy water supplies; and for the relief of unemployment among the people in the Connecticut River Valley and neighborhood; and further, for the creation of a corporation to carry out the aforesaid be rereferred from the Committee on Flood Control to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the same bill to which the gentleman referred this morning in committee?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. It is the same bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

ROOSEVELT, DEMOCRACY'S GREAT LEADER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio speech made recently by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Granfield].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech delivered by my colleague, Hon. WILLIAM J. GRANFIELD, of Massachusetts, over the Yankee network in Washington, D. C., on April 16, 1936, on Roosevelt, Democracy's Great Leader, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, upon the approaching election will depend whether this Nation is to go forward to the great destiny which our forefathers conceived for it. That President Roosevelt will be renominated is a foregone conclusion, and I very much doubt if any other name will be presented to the Democratic convention in Philadelphia for this high honor. More than that, I am firmly convinced that under his banner Democracy will triumph in November and the great reforms he has initiated carried through to reverse.

It is interesting to note the reaction of what is generally known as big business to the coming election. Three years ago, when as big business to the coming election. Three years ago, when President Roosevelt assumed office, the country was on the verge of chaos. Industry, commerce, and agriculture were all but prostrate. At that time, the men representing big business came to Washington and pleaded with President Roosevelt to do something to save them. Their one fear, very privately expressed, was that he would not prove strong enough for the task, and they demanded that Congress stand back of him to a man. One after another of the so-called New Deal measures were enacted and placed in operation, and slowly but surely the Nation began to climb out of the depression into which it had been plunged by 12 years of Republican misrule. Harkening to the pleas of big busiyears of Republican misrule. Harkening to the pleas of big business, the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which had been created during the Hoover regime, were greatly enlarged and expanded. This agency, pouring out millions to banks, insurance companies, railroads, and industry generally, saved the situation for them, and firms which were on the brink of bankruptcy found a new measure of hope as earnings increased and dividends became something more than a mirage. No sconer had this been accomplished, however, than many of the men, beneficiaries of this governmental aid, grew resentful of restrictions placed on them by other measures, such as the National Recovery Administration and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. It was then they began muttering against President Roosevelt and demanding that the Government turn business "loose." To them he became a Stalin, a Hitler, a Mussolini. The accomplishments of the President and his Democratic Congress were termed "communistic, socialistic, and paternalistic." They wanted to be saved, but were unwilling to aid in saving the rest of the country, at least if it was going to cost them anything to do it.

Although the Supreme Court declared the National Recovery Although the Supreme Court declared the National Recovery Administration and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration unconstitutional, big business was still dissatisfied, and it refused to play the game fairly. As it has been pointed out by President Roosevelt, after the Supreme Court decision declaring the National Recovery Administration unconstitutional industry began to tighten up all along the line, and it increased hours of labor and reduced wages wherever and whenever it was possible. Many of the big concerns which under the Agricultural Adjustment Act were called upon to pay processing taxes either passed them on to the consumers or back to the producers, and when this act was declared unconstitutional they were in the fine position of the man who may unconstitutional they were in the fine position of the man who may eat his cake and have it, too. The refunds to the meat packers alone were $51,000,000; and, since contracts had been made with the farmers, this had to be made good through new taxes, some of which are now being considered by the Congress.

which are now being considered by the Congress.

Even this bounty did not satisfy some of them, however, and they are demanding that the Nation go back to what President Roosevelt had graphically described as the "rule of the fang and claw." Executives of big business, bankers, Wall Street operators, and industrialists such as the Du Ponts, and a few high-priced lawyers are bemoaning the loss of their so-called liberties and the alleged invasion of the Constitution. They are shedding tears over regimentation. Yet, in spite of their constant opposition, the country has been foreing ahead.

country has been forging ahead.

That the great corporations, many of whose executives are numbered among the opponents of the present administration and outstanding critics of the New Deal, are tilting at windmills is manifest by stock-market reports. Since the inauguration of President Roosevelt and the return of confidence among investors, as well as increased business due to New Deal measures, the gain in stock values listed upon the New York Exchange would more than pay the national debt. A statement has just been issued which shows that 1,148 corporations during the last year alone showed net gains in their earnings of 47½ percent. In items of dollars this report, which was compiled by the Standard Statistics Co. of New York, shows total net earnings of these concerns amounted to $2,029,999,000 for the year 1935. This may be compared with the net earnings of the same concerns during 1934 of $1,481,551,000. Certainly no one in authority or in his right mind could contend that these concerns are not in a more healthy and flourishing condition than they were a year ago, and yet the critics flourishing condition than they were a year ago, and yet the critics of the New Deal insist it is hurting business. The officers of these corporations may oppose President Roosevelt, but it will be difficult, indeed, for them to convince their stockholders that the administration which restored dividends is not entitled to support.

Among the outstanding critics of the administration are some Among the outstanding critics of the administration are some of the large, heavily financed, and well-entrenched newspapers of the country. Their writers, columnists, and cartoonists are bending every effort at their command and exerting all their talents to belittle the various New Deal agencies so instrumental in recovery, and editorial columns ring with charges that the Government is driving us to ruin, business gone to the dogs, and national credit wrecked. Yet their advertising pages of the stock-market reports belie everything they say, and their own advertisements urging advertisers to avail themselves of opportunity to reap the rich rewards of salesmanship through their columns reveals that they don't believe their own editorials.

One of the slogans upon which Republican spellbinders are relying to win voters in the approaching campaign is "balance the

One of the slogans upon which Republican spellbinders are relying to win voters in the approaching campaign is "balance the Budget." No one can deny that it would be a fine thing if the National Budget could be balanced, but if this must be done at the expense of business recovery, hunger and suffering, and human misery, it had better stay unbalanced for a while at least. It should be borne in mind, moreover, that it was not Mr. Roosevelt who developed the unbalanced Budget. Under President Hoover the national debt was increased $6,000,000,000, and instead of making progress against the depression, business continued to grow worse. The deficit under Federal revenues for the last 4 years is slightly more than it was for the 4 years of the Hoover administration, but there is a clear-cut difference between the deficits created during these two administrations. That of the Hoover administration was a net loss so far as the Nation is concerned, while a very substantial amount, considerably over half, in fact, administration was a net loss so far as the Nation is concerned, while a very substantial amount, considerably over half, in fact, of that which has developed during the last 3½ years is represented by gilt-edged securities held by the various governmental agencies. The $3,000,000,000 loaned through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is amply secured by mortgages on the homes it saved. The same is true of loans made through the Farm Credit Administration, and also by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation

As recovery advances, these loans are being repaid and may be recovered back into the Treasury to reduce the deficit, while no such course is possible with any of that $6,000,000,000 spent during such course is possible with any of that $6,000,000,000 spent during the Hoover administration over and above the current revenues. Another complaint that is going up from the Republicans is that relief money has been squandered. They charge extravagance and worse in the operation of various relief agencies. "Boondoggling" has become a fearful word to dangle in front of the voters. Charges of petty corruption are magnified and made to appear colossal. Sifted down, most of these charges are trivial and insignificant. They represent the petty chiseling of some unfortunates on relief. How do they compare with the looting of the Nation's oil reserves condoned by Republican Presidents or the enormous fraud reserves condoned by Republican Presidents or the enormous fraud uncovered in the Veterans' Bureau?

Meanwhile, under the direction of this administration the Home Meanwhile, under the direction of this administration the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has saved a million homes, the Farm Credit Administration almost an equal number of farms, hundreds of thousands of young men have been placed in C. C. C. camps to learn the rudiments of forestry and the dignity of labor. Slums have been wiped out in some 40 or 50 cities, and thousands of farm families moved from poor, worn-out lands to farms on which they can make a living and become self-sustaining. Thousands of miles of electric power lines have been stretched out into rural sections to lighten the labors of hundreds of thousands of farmers. Public buildings nost offices new roads have been constructed and Public buildings, post offices, new roads have been constructed, and at the same time money has been advanced to the States to relieve at the same time money has been advanced to the States to relieve hunger and want for those unable to find employment.

Early in his administration President Roosevelt said no one would go hungry if he could prevent it. That was a covenant with the Nation, and he has kept the faith. These are the things which the great body of people see, and no amount of propaganda by Republican newspapers or Republican spellbinders can blind them to these solid and substantial facts. Undoubtedly this is the reason for the large increase of Democratic strength in hitherto Republican strengtholds and which has startled the high command of that lican strongholds, and which has startled the high command of that party. California, long looked upon as solidly Republican as Vermont, now shows a Democratic superiority of 426,441 in registration in seven counties alone. In the recent primary in Wisconsin, President Roosevelt received twice as many votes as the two wings of the Republican Party combined; and since the Borah forces represented more than half the Republican strength, it is reasonable to assume if Mr. Borah is not nominated for President on the Republican ticket, a highly improbable assumption at this time, that many of his supporters in that State will vote for President Roosevelt. Therefore, primary in Illinois revealed, a similar situation. velt. Tuesday's primary in Illinois revealed a similar situation, save that the Borah faction was not relatively as strong. However, save that the Borah faction was not relatively as strong. However, the Democratic forces polled nearly two votes for every one cast for Republican candidates, and the only question as to Illinois in the November election will be the size of President Roosevelt's majority. During the next 6 months the voters of this Nation will be bombarded with propaganda and editorial tirades against President Roosevelt. He will be denounced on one side as a czar and a tyrant, and in the next breath he will be called weak and ineffective. He will be charged with squandering billions of dollars and will be credited with every individual instance of suffering, which will be magnified into a national calamity. While some of the people may be fooled or beguiled by this, the great majority the people may be fooled or beguiled by this, the great majority, I am sure, will remain steadfast, loyal, and unafraid, and they will again demonstrate the truth of Abraham Lincoln's maxim that you can't fool all the people all the time. I am firmly convinced that President Roosevelt will be reelected in November and vinced that President Roosevelt will be reelected in November and that the Congress will be as strongly behind him as it is today, and that, in the light of history as it will be read by the future generations, the death knell of special privilege was rung in this Nation in 1932—that the decision of the voters of 1932 was confirmed in 1936, and that a new epoch was created wherein the rights of the average man to his job, and security for his home and in his old age became a sacred trust to this Nation, and no less for protection for the special form. less for protection for the special few.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blan-TON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I never engage in a futile fight. Under this very remarkable rule no fight for proper amendments could be made against this bill which would not be futile, hence I shall offer no amendments.

This rule will go down in history. This is a bill which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], an authority on the Constitution, denominates as communistic, unconstitutional, ridiculous, and "worse than anything that has ever come out of Russia."

This rule waives all points of order on this sort of a bill. The rule closes general debate on the bill. The bill will not be read under the 5-minute rule like other bills, this rule even taking that right away from the membership. It is not to be read under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Please do not take my time.

Mr. COX. I want to support the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad I have such a distinguished minutes, although I have deep affection for the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I yielded to the gentleman when I had the

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield later to my friend. I want to make a statement first, and then I will yield.

Mr. Speaker, this rule prescribes that the bill has already been read under the 5-minute rule, so that the usual second reading of the bill has been dispensed with and it will not even be read now. Debate on all amendments is limited to an hour and a half.

Mr. COX. Will not the gentleman yield now?

Mr. BLANTON. Please let me finish; then I shall yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, the rules of this House were not formulated merely to pass bills. The rules of the House are to afford a means for the membership to pass good bills, and the rules are also to afford a means to the membership who know the rules to stop bad bills from being passed by pursuing those rules. Every single thing that we have done to stop this bad bill has been done in strict accord with the rules of the House. Not a rule has been violated. If we had not delayed the passage of this bill until time afforded the membership an opportunity to understand it, we would have had no chance whatever of killing it.

Even the distinguished and able gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] stated a few minutes ago that he "did not have occasion to read this bill until this morning", yet after reading it and today understanding it, he said he was astounded at such a proposal; that "it is socialism with a vengeance"; that "it violates every property right known to law"; and that "nothing worse has ever come out of Russia"; and he said that it is "an effort to shackle American freemen." Is not that a terrible indictment? If we had not delayed the bill, he would not have had an opportunity to read it, or to have reached that very statesmanlike conclusion.

Now, there has not been one thing done in this House with respect to this bill except what the rules authorize. Everything that has been done in this House respecting this bill. in an attempt to keep it from passing, has been in strict conformity with the rules, upheld by the Speaker of the House-get that.

The distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] says that this is a communistic bill. This bill, as is well known to the membership, is intimately connected with another bill that is even more communistic, a bill that puts communism back into the 175 schools of Washington, where there are 2,968 teachers, and where there are 99,000 little school children, known as the Sisson bill.

Now, the efforts that some of us have been making to stop this bill also have been made incidental to stopping that Sisson bill that puts communism back in the schools. Without this rule this Ellenbogen bill could never be passed in this Congress, and without this rule this Sisson bill could never be passed in this Congress. When we delayed the Ellenbogen bill we at the same time delayed the Sisson bill, and were killing two birds-both red-with one stone, as Members of Congress now know all about both bills.

All of us have the right to name bills, have we not? I am going to name two bills, and I hope they will be known by these names from now until eternity. Instead of calling this the Ellenbogen bill, from now on I want it known by the name of the Ellenbogen-O'Connor-Rules-Committee bill. [Laughter.] Instead of knowing the Sisson bill as the Sisson bill, I am going to name it now, and I want it known hereafter as the Sisson-O'Connor-Rules-Committee bill [laughter and applause] that seeks to put communism back in the schools.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not even going to offer an amendment to this bill. I will offer one preferential motion. I am not even going to move to strike out the ridiculous provision which says that Congress reserves to itself the right to alter or amend this bill. I understand, however, the committee will do that. I am not even going to move to strike out any of its many unsound provisions. They are consistent with convert. I have only 10 minutes, and I want to use the 10 every other part of the bill, and one part is just as sound as any other part of the bill. All I am going to do, under such a rule, is reserve the right to offer a preferential motion and to vote against this bill and to vote against the Sisson bill. I have done my duty by both of them. I have worked hard to stop both of them. I have done many hours of work, when some of you were asleep, in trying to stop these infamous measures, especially the Sisson measure that puts communism back into the schools of Washington.

Mr. COX and Mr. McCORMACK rose.

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield in just a moment. I am trying to get through in order to yield to my friend the gentleman from Georgia, as I promised him, and for fear I will not be able to do so I yield to him now.

Mr. COX. Let me state to the gentleman that as a member of the Rules Committee I am not at all proud of this rule.

Mr. BLANTON. It ought not to be here if you are not proud of it.

Mr. COX. If adopted, nothing could be more unfortunate than for it ever to be accepted as a precedent.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not call it "the Cox bill." [Laughter.] Mr. COX. I know, and I am, in a measure, supporting the position that the gentleman takes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am not ashamed of anything I have done about these two bills. I have done all I could to kill them. I have done my duty. I have done everything a man could do under the rules of this House to stop these two communistic measures.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute. And to show what our Subcommittee on Appropriations that handled the District of Columbia bill, and took out of the bill $78,660 for so-called character education, has done, and to show you colleagues why we did it, I went to the trouble of working weeks to assemble the facts in the RECORD for you, which you will find in my speech of April 2, 1936, beginning on page 4838, and I checked up every fact before I printed this speech in the RECORD. You will find it printed in the RECORD of April 2, 1936, at page 4838, and I invite the Members to read that convincing evidence which we developed at our hearings. Read the testimony of Dr. Ballou and his admissions, read the testimony of his professor of social studies (Jones) and his admissions, and then if you can vote for that Sisson bill when it comes up, all right; it will be your responsibility.

This bill cannot hurt me-neither one of them can hurt me-if you want this kind of communistic, unconstitutional measure to go on the statute books, all right. I, myself, do not own a piece of property in Washington. I have not a friend in Washington whom it will affect.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. No; I am sorry, I have not the time.

It does not affect me in any particular. If any of you want it on the statute books to affect the 500,000 people living here. all right. I am going to vote against this bill and against the Sisson bill, and try to get a roll call on both.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the rule.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'CONNOR) there were 49 ayes and 50 noes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, and I object to the vote on that ground.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call

Mr. COX changed his vote from "present" to "aye."

The SPEAKER. Under the resolution the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. UMSTEAD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule provides that the bill shall be considered as having been read the second time. Amendments are now in order, and the Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. Norton].

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, strike out lines 15 and 16.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, section 24 is obviously a mistake in the bill and should be stricken out. I do not think any argument is necessary, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I think this is a bad amendment. I think the provision should stay in the bill. It says:

The right to alter, amend, or repeal any provision of this act is hereby reserved to the Congress.

That is where the right should be, and not with this bunch of Commissioners. We take the responsibility and they take the credit. We take the criticism and they proceed to help themselves and take the credit for every good thing we do. It is time that that was stopped. I do not care what the House does. I do not think it accidentally got into the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Zioncheck) there were 58 ayes and 1 no.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following privileged amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause of the bill be stricken out.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect the motion to pass, but I would feel recreant to my duty if I did not offer it.

The rules of the House provide that where Members believe a bill is bad, they have a right, under the rules, to offer such a motion to strike out the enacting clause. I have felt that I would be recreant to my duty if I did not pursue every possible means afforded by the rules of the House to stop such a bad bill, which even a member of the Rules Committee, Judge Cox, of Georgia, says is unconstitutional, communistic, outrageous, and worse than anything that has ever come out of Russia.

I want to call attention to one peculiar situation. There were, with the chairman, about 100 of us here who heard the debate on the rule. After hearing the debate, notwithstanding the prestige of the Committee on Rules behind the rule, the membership who heard the debate voted 49 for the rule and 50 against it, a majority against it, forcing the Rules Committee chairman to make a point of no quorum, to get a roll call. That was worth $1,000 of anybody's money, to see and to realize that you could still have confidence in the judgment of the Members of the House if they were present and heard what was going on. The 50 against were the ones who had been present and had heard what was going on. They heard Judge Cox's statement about this bill being communistic and unconstitutional. They saw the ridiculous rule which stopped all general debate, although it was not concluded, and which waived all points of order against the bill, and prevented the usual second reading of the bill for amendments.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. No; I am sorry-which rule said that the bill was already read when it had not been read for amendment. Just by a Thurston magician wave of the hand, ipso facto, under the rule the bill had been read-and which said that all amendments presented had to be debated in an hour and a half—and most of the time under the rules would be under the control of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, whenever she should demand recognition. When the membership listening here on the floor understood that ridiculous rule a majority voted against it, and the greatest thing that ever happened was to have the chairman of the great Committee on Rules forced in a situation like that, after he had been talking against points of no quorum and roll calls, to have to get up and say, "Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because a quorum is not present, and I want a quorum here", and thus stop the business of the House! He had the members of the Ways and Means Committee leave their committee so as to come here and he had the members of all of the other committees that were busy come here and vote on something they did not know anything about, as they had not heard the debate, and naturally they passed the rule.

I do not care what you do with this motion. I have done my full duty. I am going to vote to strike out its enacting clause as a first chance to kill the bill, and then I am going to vote against the bill, and I hope we will be able to force the chairman to make the point of no quorum, so as to have a roll call on it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly I yield to my genial friend from Georgia, who gave one of the finest pronunciamentos possible against the bill.

Mr. COX. What is the difference in effect in supporting the gentleman's amendment and waiting finally to vote on

Mr. BLANTON. My motion forces a quick, decisive vote. Oh, the gentleman's committee was in such a hurry to bring expedition on the passage of a bill which he says is infamous, communistic, and unconstitutional that I wanted to help him expedite the matter. This is really a vote on the bill. If you vote for this motion you kill the bill right now. But, of course, it will not pass. But when we vote on the passage of the bill I believe there will be enough votes against it to kill it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] has not stated the facts. The bill was read, and the time for general debate was concluded. The only purpose of bringing in this rule was to prevent another filibuster on the passage of the bill.

Several times the unconstitutionality of this bill has been suggested, and several times the House has been told that the Supreme Court of the United States has upheld the rent commission bill. I wish to quote now from the case of Block, trading under the name of White, against Hirsch, argued before the District Supreme Court March 3, 1921, and decided on April 18, 1921. This is quite a long argument, and it would be impossible for me to quote it in full in this short time. The court held that the legislative declaration of facts afforded a ground for the regulation and that the regulation was justified as a temporary measure, even though it might not be as a permanent change, and that is all we ask in this bill. That it remain in effect until the emergency terminates. There is one-half of 1 percent vacancies in the District; surely that constitutes an emergency. Again, Mr. Chairman, before the Supreme Court of New York there was a similar decision rendered, and so I think if the lawyers in this House will take these two decisions under consideration they will find that this is absolutely a constitutional bill.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman vield?

Mrs. NORTON. I have not the time; I am sorry.

Mr. DOBBINS. For just a brief inquiry.

Mrs. NORTON. Very well.

Mr. DOBBINS. Was not the legislative declaration of fact to which the lady referred a declaration of necessity growing out of the World War, and did not the Supreme Court say that it took notice of that fact?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. DOBBINS. Is not that true, that the legislative declaration of fact grew out of the World War, and the Supreme Court took notice of it?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes: and there is an emergency here now-a very great emergency.

Mr. DOBBINS. There is always an emergency.

Mrs. NORTON. There is a great emergency now. We have only one-half of 1 percent of vacancies in this District. Surely that constitutes an emergency, and the hundreds of letters I have received from tenants throughout the District supports the fact of an emergency.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman

Mrs. NORTON. Yes. Mr. SCHULTE. The gentlewoman has heard the statement made on the floor that the bill was communistic. Since when has it become communistic to try to lower the rents for the people of the District of Columbia or any other place in the United States? Can the gentlewoman explain that?

Mrs. NORTON. Of course, such a statement is absurd, but it is in line with many statements that have been made with regard to this bill. I should say that if the rents in the District of Columbia continue to soar as they have during the past few years it will bring about a communistic condition in the District. We are trying to prevent communism-not to bring it about.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope the motion of the gentleman from Texas will be rejected. It is simply another method of trying to defeat this bill. If the membership of this House knew how acutely the people of this District are suffering as a result of the exorbitant rents and of the tremendous lobby of real-estate people in the District, I say to you they would certainly defeat this motion. They would not allow the ridiculous charge of communism to be used to influence and confuse the issues involved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to propound a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair, as to whether or not, if it were not for the provision in the rule waiving the second reading of the bill for amendment, it would be necessary to have that bill read?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of Mr. ZIONCHECK. The point of order is that the gentleman's remarks do not bear upon a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to state to the gentleman from Washington that he has not stated a point of order. The gentleman from Texas will proceed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman not having stated a proper point of order, I desire to ask the Chair whether or not that will appear in the middle of my remarks.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair having ruled that the gentleman from Washington did not state a proper point of order, I will ask, under the ruling of Mr. Speaker Byrns, if this interruption does not go out of my remarks?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Washington stated a point of order, but the Chair overruled the point of order and did not hold it in order. The Chair, therefore, rules that the gentleman's remarks would be entitled to appear in the RECORD at the proper place where they occurred in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I would like to repropound my parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the Chair whether or not, but for the provision in the rule which waives the second reading of the bill for amendment-

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. At this time I renew my point of order. I want the Chair to rule on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overruled the gentleman's point of order, and does so again.

The gentleman from Texas will proceed.

Mr. BLANTON. So that my parliamentary inquiry may not be "squirted up", I will ask it again.

Mr. Chairman, I will ask whether or not, but for the provision in the rule which waives the second reading of the bill for amendment, it is a fact that this bill would have to be read a second time by the Clerk for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is correct. If the resolution had not been adopted, under the normal procedure this bill would have been read for amendment in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLANTON. Then my statement previously made was correct, and the distinguished gentlewoman from New Jersey should not have said that I made an incorrect statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not undertaking to rule on the correctness of the statement to which the gentleman refers. The Chair ruled on the gentleman's parliamentary

The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If the contention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] is correct, do we understand there will be no reading of the bill under the 5-minute rule in Committee of the Whole, and therefore no opportunity for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that, under the plain language of the rule, the bill will not be read in Committee of the Whole, but that for a period of one hour and a half amendments may be offered and discussed, and thereafter any amendment which is offered will be considered and voted upon by the Committee without debate.

Mr. O'MALLEY. But only such amendments which may be offered within that time will be in order. Is that true?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair just stated to the gentleman from Wisconsin that, although debate on amendments would not continue for more than one hour and a half, all amendments offered to any section of the bill will be in order and will be voted upon by the Committee under the plain language of the rule.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. Norton) there were ayes 36 and noes 56.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "Congress" on page 24, line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to advise the gentleman that that is already out of the bill. It is included in an amendment which has already been adopted by the committee

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out line 19, worded as follows:

SEC. 26. This act shall take effect immediately.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the gentleman's amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Zioncheck offers to amend the bill, on page 24, by striking out all of line 19.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to revise and extend my own remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent at this time that I be allowed to talk out of order if

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to make a specific request before the Chair can present the request to the House.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. As long as no one objects to it, Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The request has not been put to the House and cannot be until the gentleman makes it specific.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote for this bill. My reasons are very elemental, but I think they are sound. I am satisfied this commission will not do much. It will be another commission; but they cannot do any harm, because the real-estate sharks and the landlords and bankers in Washington, D. C., are getting all the money they can from the people now; so if they try to increase the rents, it will be a useless gesture, because they cannot get the money.

You know there are very fine landlords in the District of Columbia. You will remember that when the 15-percent Economy Act went into effect the landlords even told the Government employees who were renting from them that they were awfully sorry. They even cried crocodile tears, but they did not reduce their rent. When, however, the 10-percent restoration of salary went into effect the landlords, with firmness but gentleness, informed many of their tenants that the rent would be increased 25 percent of the 10 percent. They were entitled to it! Very decent of them!

I take the position that this commission cannot do anything worse; and if they do not do anything worse, the situation cannot be any worse; but they may make it a little better; they may accidentally stumble onto a matter where some of the colored people down here might have electric lights in their homes instead of coal-oil lamps or lard buckets with wicks in them. They might accidentally suggest to the District health officers that they could breed smaller cockroaches; and you know those other things that run around make a lot of noise at night, and if you put a bag in their way they kick it aside and get annoyed. Maybe that is the reason the gentleman from Texas voted against the death sentence.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman not quote me. I voted for the death sentence.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. But the gentleman talked against it and voted against it until he got on record, and then he changed his vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington will suspend a moment.

The Chair wishes to state to the gentleman from Texas that it is contrary to the rule to interrupt a speaker without first addressing the Chair.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BLANTON. I ask whether or not the gentleman has a right to say I voted against the death sentence when I voted for it—

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have the right to tell the truth.

Mr. BLANTON. And leave me in a false attitude here before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not undertaking to rule on what rights the gentleman on the floor has, but the gentleman from Texas is well aware, of course, that he has no right under the rules to speak from his seat.

The gentleman from Washington will proceed in order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, this morning my attention was invited or drawn to a little editorial in the Washington Post.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If the gentleman understood—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington will suspend. The gentleman from Texas will state the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that under the rules of the House the gentleman is restricted to striking out the specific language mentioned in his amendment and must confine his debate to the amendment; that he has no right to indulge in personalities against me here which, my colleagues understand fully well why, I cannot resent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must discuss the matter contained in his amendment. The gentleman from Washington will proceed in order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, the point I am trying to make is that I disagree with the inference that the gentleman from Texas has not gentlemanly instincts.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is not conforming to the ruling of the Chair or to the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington, under the ruling of the Chair—and the Chair is sure the gentleman understood it—must discuss the subject matter of his amendment, and will proceed in order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, what was the amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offered the amendment. The Chair did not hear it read, but presumes the gentleman knows what is in his amendment.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I offered an amendment to strike out the language "this act shall take effect immediately."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine himself to the language of his amendment.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. So I contend, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Texas has gentlemanly instincts.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the last statement made by the gentleman was in viola-

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The time of the gentleman from Washington had expired and the Chair had so announced before the gentleman from Texas made his point of order. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington would strike out section 26, which provides that this act shall take effect immediately. I am opposed to the amendment because I believe that the act should take effect immediately.

Mr. Chairman, my reason for making this statement is that as chairman of a select committee of this House I have been investigating the real-estate securities and the default in these securities, which amounts to close to $20,000,000,000, and your committee has obtained considerable evidence.

This select committee of the House after 18 months of investigation has obtained evidence showing that property in the District of Columbia suffered less than any other in the United States. The owners, companies, and corporations who have built and control hundreds of these apartment buildings and hotels, though in many instances I admit the original bond issues were excessive, as in the Smith and other cases, nevertheless the investigation on the part of the Select Committee to Investigate Real Estate Bondholders' Reorganization disclosed that the occupancy even in the worst years-under the Republican administration in 1931, 1932, and the first part of 1933-was nearly 80 percent; and the agents and owners in very few instances reduced the rentals, and then only a small percent. This, notwithstanding the fact that the taxes are lower in Washington than in any other city in the United States, with janitor and other employee services at the lowest wage scale, and with cost of upkeep and maintaintence at the lowest figure, and yet these property owners in the city of Washington permitted their mortgages and bonds to go in default, failing in many instances to pay taxes and interest, saying nothing about their failure to pay the portions of principal when due. The withholding of the payment of these obligations was deliberate and brought about defaults, with the resulting foreclosures, which enabled them to acquire the outstanding bonds.

This shameful manipulation and failure to pay just obligations made possible their acquiring bonds, in many instances, as low as 5 cents on the dollar. So today hundreds of apartment buildings in Washington cost the present owners 25 percent of the original cost or the amount of the original bond issue. Still, the owners continue to increase their rentals to pay from 8 percent to 10 percent on the original investment. As they have been able to acquire the outstanding bonds, as I have stated, at such low prices, these properties net them as much as 25 percent or more, which I consider exorbitant, unfair, and unjustifiable.

It is for that reason that I feel that this legislation is in the right direction; that the commission which will be created will be able to bring about adjustment in rents which I know will be fair to the landlords and owners and which the tenants will be able to pay. We have in the city of Washington in the neighborhood of 50,000 Government employees, including our own clerks and Capitol employees, whose average salary, I understand, is $133 a month, of which they are obliged to pay out nearly one-half for living quarters. There are thousands of other people living in Washington whose earnings as clerks in stores and offices are below $100 a month who find it impossible to obtain decent quarters to live in. I feel that these conditions should not be tolerated, and simple justice demands that not only the Government employees but all the residents of Washington should be protected from the unscrupulous real-estate people of this city. I want it understood that I stand for the property owner to receive a fair rent to take care of his taxes, amortization, upkeep, and repairs, and tion of the ruling of the Chair and in violation of the rules of | from 6 percent to 8 percent return on his money. It is outrageous and unfair that we should permit manipulators to exact tribute out of all proportion to their investments.

> Mr. Chairman, the bondholders have been taken advantage of. The tenants have been taken advantage of.

> The property owners who have increased their rents are not entitled to consideration from the Members of this House; and I know, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blan-TON], who is always desirous of being of service to the people, knew the conditions as I know them to be, he would not oppose the bill, but, on the contrary, would favor the bill. After all, no harm can be done and a great deal of good may be accomplished.

Mr. EKWALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. EKWALL. Is this bill a bill to increase rents or just to investigate the rent situation here in the District?

Mr. SABATH. If the conditions are investigated as thoroughly as I believe they will be, it will be shown that the rents charged are excessive.

Mr. Chairman, I am under the impression that this bill will tend to reduce rents and still leave the property owners and the investors more than a fair profit on the money which they have invested. I feel that the bill should be passed and that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington should be defeated.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent at this time that the amendment which I submitted be withdrawn, because it was a facetious or a pro-forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe in personal controversies. I have never engaged in any, and I hope I never shall. I do not believe in calling names. It has been stated by the gentleman from Georgia that this bill is socialistic. I think if the gentleman had studied and analyzed the bill and had reflected on the matter he would not have made such an amazing statement. This statement is so far from the facts and so utterly unrelated to the bill that there is no need even to discuss it.

Mr. Chairman, what does the bill do? The bill simply says that a landlord in the city of Washington shall be allowed to receive a fair return on the fair value of his property. If that is communistic, every public utility law in every State of the Union is likewise communistic. It is no more nor less than the provision that is contained in every public service law in nearly every State in the Union. I do not know whether the State of Georgia has such a law, but I believe the State of Texas has this law.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ELLENBOGEN. For a brief question, I shall be very pleased to yield.

Mr. EKWALL. Why would it not be a good idea, according to the theory of the gentleman, to apply this to all homes and all property all over the United States, if it is not communistic?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Because it is not justified, I will say to the gentleman. I do not favor this except in an extreme emergency, and we now have such an emergency in the District of Columbia, where you are unable to secure property at a fair rent. The District of Columbia is in a peculiar position.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, since the gentleman mentioned me and my State, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. No; I do not yield. I am sorry.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman mentioned my State.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I cannot yield, as I do not have the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that under the rules of the House it is proper to address the Chair before interrupting the gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, he is still doing it. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is violating the same rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will not my colleague from Pennsylvania yield for a correction?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes in addition to the 5 minutes, and if this request is granted, I shall be very happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I shall be very pleased to yield, Mr. Chairman, to my distinguished colleague from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Pennsylvania stated that my State of Texas passed such a rentcontrol law.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. A public-utilities law. Mr. BLANTON. A former Governor of Texas, named Ferguson, had a rent-control law passed, and the Supreme Court of Texas held that it was absolutely unconstitutional.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Then the constitution of Texas must have provisions that are not contained in most of the other constitutions.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I will be pleased to yield later, and I hope I shall have the time to yield.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Not at this time. I want a few minutes to make my statement, and then I shall be pleased to yield.

The only thing this proposed law states is that a landlord shall not charge excessive rent. It does not take his property, it does not appropriate his property, it does not apply to any home owner who owns and lives in his own home. It only applies to those who rent their homes to others, and in those cases it says that the commission shall fix a fair return upon a fair value.

Now, the United States Supreme Court has said time and again that public-service laws are constitutional.

I am not in favor of a permanent rent-control law, but while we have an emergency we should have this law. It does not apply to any other part of the country, and should not apply, because you do not have to go anywhere else, but the people must come to the city of Washington if the Government calls them here for the purpose of taking a position. They have no choice in the matter, and they should be protected in their living conditions, otherwise they cannot come here and give their services.

I may say further, Mr. Chairman, that under the terms of this bill the law is limited to 3 years because we feel that within that time the overcrowded condition in the city of Washington should certainly disappear.

The Supreme Court has held a similar bill constitutional in the case of Block against Hirsch, which has been referred to, and which is reported in Two Hundred and Fifty-sixth United States Supreme Court Reports, and also held a similar law of the State of New York constitutional, which is reported in the same volume.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I am sorry, but I do not have the time. A little later I shall be very happy to yield if I have the time.

Now, this bill has been stated to be connected with the Sisson bill. This statement, of course, is ridiculous. This bill was introduced long before the Sisson bill.

Mr. DOBBINS and Mr. ZIONCHECK rose.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. DOBBINS and Mr. ZIONCHECK objected.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

I rise, Mr. Chairman, at this time for the purpose of propounding to the gentleman from Pennsylvania the inquiry which he regrettably did not find the time to hear during his argument. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will entertain the inquiry now, I will ask it in my own time.

The gentleman stated that the purpose of this bill is to guarantee to landlords a fair rental, as well as to the tenant. Under the terms of this bill, as I understand them, if a landlord executes a lease at a certain rental, let us say at $50 a month, and determines the next day he has charged too little in that lease and that the property is worth $100 a month, he has the right, under this bill, to file a petition with the Rent Commission to repudiate his lease and ask to have the larger rent allowed him. Is not that correct?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. DOBBINS. I yield for the purpose of a reply from the gentleman.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. It certainly would be ridiculous for the Commission to permit such a proceeding.

Mr. DOBBINS. It is permissible, under the bill, is it not? Mr. ELLENBOGEN. The bill is framed like all rentcontrol laws, and provides that the tenant may come in and say that the rent charged is excessive.

Mr. DOBBINS. And may not the landlord likewise say that it is unfair?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. The landlord does not need to come in, because he has the power to enter into any lease and can collect any rent he desires, if the tenant does not file a complaint objecting to the lease.

Mr. DOBBINS. The inquiry permits the owner or the tenant, on their own initiative, to direct it solely to the question whether the rent is adequate and the terms of the lease are fair. The old law, which, it has been said, is identical with the present one, did not permit that inquiry to be made during the pendency of the lease.

This bill permits an inquiry to be instituted by the tenant or by the owner, as will be found on lines 11, 12, and 13.

Notwithstanding the existence of a lease or other contract between the tenant and the owner or between the owner or any guest.

It provides that a man can go and secure a lease and the next day go to the chairman of this commission and ask that the terms of the lease be re-formed.

Suppose two or three individuals want the same piece of property, that none of them wants to pay the landlord's price, that two are too honorable to make an agreement with the undisclosed purpose of repudiating it, but the third agrees to pay the price, and then the next day goes to the chairman of this commission and asks to have the terms reduced as being unfair. Is there any fairness in a bill that invites duplicity of that sort?

My objection to this is that it encourages double dealing and repudiation. It is not a bill for fair dealing, but it is a bill for double dealing. It ought to be voted down by all Members of the House who believe in fair dealing. It is also unconstitutional beyond all doubt.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOBBINS. I yield.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the language in this bill he just read is in the law passed by Congress May 22.

Mr. DOBBINS. Certainly the 1922 amendment could not have been considered by the Supreme Court in a case that came before the courts in 1919.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOBBINS. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman from Illinois has properly stated that this bill is undoubtedly unconstitutional. In view of the Democratic platform, is it not also undemocratic?

Mr. DOBBINS. It is undoubtedly undemocratic and unconstitutional, and the bureaucracy it provides for would be perpetual.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words on page 1 of the bill starting with the word "District", in line 6, and ending with the word "persons", in line 9. the words being as follows:

District of Columbia dangerous to the general welfare, health, peace, and morals of the public and to public officers and public employees whose duties require them to reside within the District, and other persons.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the gentleman to withhold his amendment for a moment.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. A pro-forma amendment is pending. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offered an amendment and the gentleman from Illinois spoke in opposition to the amendment. That amendment is now pending.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I renew my unanimous-consent request to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to withdraw the pro-forma amendment, Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I now renew the amendment which I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIONCHECK: Page 1, line 6, beginning with the words "District of Columbia", strike out the remainder of line 6 and all of lines 7, 8, and 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, there has been a bad rumor running around the town that the reason the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] objects to this bill is that he is a landlord.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately conditions are such that I cannot resent these personalities, and I make the point of order that the gentleman from Washington in discussing the amendment such as he has offered has no right to engage in personalities under the rules of the House.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order, and rules that the point of order is well taken. The gentleman from Washington will confine his remarks to the amendment which he offered and avoid personalities, and please proceed in order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I think if the Chairman reads that amendment and knows what I am trying to strike out he will see that I am in order. It seems that there is a house out here-let us see, 1851 Irving Street NW., square 2598, lot 75, upon which there is a house. That house was purchased in the District of Columbia, I think, on December 31, 1924. It was purchased from Allie L. Douglas and transferred to May Matthews Blanton on that date, and it was recorded the next day. May Matthews Blanton-

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does not the gentleman want the facts? I do not know whether that is true or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington will suspend. The gentleman from Texas will state his point of Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, but for the conditions that prevent me from resenting these personalities, I would not under any circumstances allow the gentleman from Washington to even mention my wife's name.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Understand, I do not know that this is your wife.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair reminds the gentleman from Washington again that he must confine his remarks to the amendment which he has offered, and that he cannot indulge in personalities.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. That is right, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair hopes that the gentleman will respect the rules of the House and will not continue to indulge in personalities.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I am going to proceed strictly in order. May Matthews Blanton transferred to-

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I again repeat that the gentleman is not discussing his amendment, and I make the point of order that the gentleman must confine himself to his amendment.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. But, Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington will suspend while the point of order is being stated by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, my point of order is that under the rules of the House the one making the amendment must confine his discussion to his amendment, and has no right to bring in any extraneous matters in his argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair again sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. May I be heard on the point of order? The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled on the point of order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The next time I want to be heard. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to say to the gentleman from Washington again that he hopes he will proceed in order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will.

The CHAIRMAN. Or else take his seat.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, on the next point of order I want to be heard. I am going to explain that this is very pertinent to the amendment that I have offered, but I want to be heard next time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair reminds the gentleman from Washington that it is within the discretion of the Chair as to what the Chair will hear on a point of order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And may I state to the Chair that when I am properly heard on this there can be no discretion?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order. Mr. ZIONCHECK. To R. Q. Lee, the deed dated December 10-

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is violating the rules of the House, violating the ruling of the Chair thrice repeated to him, that he cannot discuss outside, personal matters on an amendment to strike out language such as the gentleman made.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order? I am serious in this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas raises a point of order. Will the gentleman repeat the language that he understood the gentleman from Washington to use, to which he refers?

Mr. BLANTON. In this argument the gentleman from Washington was attempting to engage in personalities by first stating that I was a landlord when I was not; second, by bringing in my wife's name.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is referring to the last point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas. The Chair did not hear the language used by the gentleman from Washington, and therefore is unable to rule.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Washington was repeating about some deed that was made to R. Q. Lee at a certain date.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Who was R. Q. Lee? The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the point of order is sustained, and the gentleman from Washington will either proceed in order or the gentleman from Washington will take his seat.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. R. Q. Lee was a former Member of Congress from Texas-

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that, in continued violation of the rulings of the Chair, the gentleman from Washington proceeds to discuss outside, personal matters.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I would like to hear the ruling out of the book this time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Washington state to the Chair the statement he made just prior to the moment the gentleman from Texas addressed the Chair?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. In other words, why I feel that this is pertinent?

The CHAIRMAN. No. That is not what the Chair asked the gentleman. The Chair asked the gentleman to repeat the brief statement he made just prior to the time the gentleman from Texas stated his point of order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have made so many that I do not know to which one the Chair is referring.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I think the Clerk could read that and have it correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington will suspend. Will the reporter submit to the Chair the language upon which the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas was based?

(The remarks of Mr. Zioncheck were submitted to the Chairman.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas as to the particular language referred to in that point of order. The Chair wishes, however, to again say to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Zioncheck] that he must confine his statement to the language of his amendment, and if the gentleman insists upon making further personal references he will be compelled to take his seat.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK] has the floor. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. No.

Mr. NICHOLS. For a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Oh, yes. I yield for that.

Mr. NICHOLS. I desire to ask the Chair whether or not the Members of the House are not presumed to be advised of the language used by a Member addressing the House when a point of order is raised against the language. I do not think there is any Member of the House who knows what is contained in the language which the Chair has before him, and we would like to be advised what that is.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I would like to find out, too. [Laughter.1

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair advises the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Nichols] that the Chair examined the language taken down by the Official Reporter and ruled upon that language, based upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. Zioncheck] will proceed in order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. R. Q. Lee evidently died and his widow and heirs transferred it-referring to the property-to George M. Marx. I am very glad this happened in 1900 and something, or otherwise people might think it was Karl Marx. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. MEAD. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment now pending before the committee, offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK].

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I object, whatever it [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington objects to the withdrawal of his amendment.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. O Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that amendment may be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the amendment be withdrawn. Is there objection?

Mr. MAIN. Mr. Chairman, I object; and I ask recognition in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5

Mr. MAIN. Mr. Chairman, this is one of those occasions when we are likely to allow our emotions to supersede the dictates of our intelligence.

I grant you that many of us, coming into the city of Washington, resent what appears to be the mercenary gouging of Washington landlords. I grant you that many of us do not approve of the tactics which have been adoptedthe parliamentary procedure which has been followed-in trying to block consideration of this bill; but I would appeal to the Members of the House not to let these considerations actuate them when it comes to voting upon this important piece of legislation.

I had the experience while engaged in the practice of law of being beaten on both sides of a State law which is typical of laws in many of the States, namely a mortgage-moratorium law. For this reason I feel very keenly about the decision made by the Supreme Court of the United States in what is known as the Home Building & Loan Association against Blaisdell, decided by the Court in Two Hundred and Ninetieth United States Reports, at page 398. That case was decided quite largely upon the decision which preceded in the case known as Block v. Hirsch (256 U. S. 135). Block against Hirsch was a case growing out of a previous rent-commission law in the District of Columbia. These two very important decisions of our Supreme Court revolve around the word "emergency." Mr. Chairman, I do not find that the proponents of this bill have taken the trouble-perhaps they did not dare in this type of legislation—to declare that an emergency does exist; and I undertake to say that our Court will not take judicial notice of an emergency such as is assumed by the advocates of this measure.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. ZIONCHECK. The gentleman is not confining his remarks to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan will proceed in order.

Mr. MAIN. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that anything is in order which relates to the constitutionality of the measure, and I am addressing myself directly to the constitutionality of the proposed law.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAIN. I decline to yield, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I may say that the drafters of the bill under consideration have indirectly referred to an assumed emergency; but again I repeat the assertion that our court will not take judicial notice of an emergency such as they seem to assume does exist. They declare or speak of a "war against the depression." We all know this language is merely a play upon the word "war" and that such an emergency does not exist in the sense in which it is used in this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I think lawyers and students of the Constitution recognize that the case of Block against Hirsch was a border-line case. Certainly the case of Home Building & Loan Association against Blaisdell was an extreme borderline case. In my humble opinion, Mr. Chairman, these two cases will come up repeatedly to plague the legal profession and the distinguished jurists across the plaza who gave these two cases the sanction of their judicial determination. Hard cases make bad law, and I appeal to the Members of the House not to fall into the error of enacting another bad law.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my pro forma amendment, which was not seriously intended, may be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the regeust of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MEAD: Page 23, line 2, after the word

"thereof", insert a new section, as follows:

"The Commission is hereby authorized and directed to complete a study of the Federal Government's building requirements in the District of Columbia and to submit a report of such findings to the Congress not later than January 15, 1937. In their report to Congress the Commission may recommend the transfer of Federal agencies from the District of Columbia to other parts of the United States."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. MEAD. Will not the gentleman withhold his point of order until I complete my observation?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am not at all serious in attempting to amend the bill by the addition of the language just read by the Clerk. More important is my desire to bring to your attention the uneven growth of the Capital of the Nation, with the recurring emergency demands which result from that uneven and rather hasty development. A capital city expands without restraint as bureaucracy in government increases, and Washington is found to be larger each decade since it became the Capital of the Nation. Washington will be larger 10 years from now than it is today. No matter how we may rail against bureaucracy and the concentration of industrial organizations. Government will increase and expand, and with the expansion of the Government will come the expansion of its Capital facilities. The largest growth of a capital city, however, comes about during wartime or when we are called upon to endure a depressive period.

My idea in suggesting this amendment is to bring to the attention of the Members of the House the fact that there has developed in the Capital City much of the activities of Government which could be decentralized and efficiently administered in other sections of the country. The Post Office Department, for example, in each State, or in each of the several postal districts of the country, has a central accounting office with jurisdiction over all the postal activities in that area. Yet here we find the Agricultural Department utilizing land that should be left for real estate in maintaining an experimental farm.

I hope the Commission that was created to locate an airport site will go outside the District of Columbia and stop the congestion resulting from the location of too many facilities within the District.

I want to say to begin with that I am friendly to this legislation, and I want to pay my respects to the chairman of this committee for her diligence, her patience, and her sincerity of purpose, exemplified by her actions since the very beginning of the consideration of the bill in the House earlier in the session.

We have concentrated in the District of Columbia too many of the facilities of Government. We have, for example, the Walter Reed Hospital, bringing patients from Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and all over the eastern section of the United States to the District; and, in addition to that, we have another veterans' hospital known as the Mount Alto Hospital. We have St. Elizabeths Hospital, and we have a Naval Hospital in the District that is expanding very rapidly.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon,

Mr. PIERCE. Is it not true that we are decentralizing the departments to some extent, especially through the Agricultural Department? Is it not true that they are now making arrangements to have the various acts of Congress enforced in each State capital?

Mr. MEAD. Decentralization comes and goes according to the likes and dislikes of the particular department or bureau | platform of the Democratic Party as adopted in 1932.

head. It may now be fashionable in the Department of Agriculture; 5 years from now it may not be so. But it does seem to me that some survey board ought to be instituted and a definite policy brought forth by the Congress and adopted in this regard. No harm will come to the business of the District if in the further expansion of Federal activities some consideration is given to communities outside the District of Columbia.

May I remind you that only the other day, on the anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson, great emphasis was laid on some of his philosophies. Thomas Jefferson stated that he was opposed to the growth of bureaucracy, and maintained that a democracy would live and prosper in a nation of smaller communities rather than in the building up of teeming, populous centers. Yet, as a result of the overgrowth of one of our cities, the Capital City of the United States, we must increase bureaucracy by creating a commission that would be unnecessary were it not for the fact that the Capital City has expanded tremendously in periods of depression and in periods of war.

I believe that the Post Office Department, the Agriculture Department, the Army, so far as Army posts are concerned, and the Navy, so far as navy yards are concerned, and the other activities of the Government, could wisely and prudently decentralize some of their facilities and give opportunity to the smaller communities in remote sections of the United States to enjoy some of the prosperity enjoyed here. This would obviate the necessity of rent commissions and it would prevent these recurring emergency periods during which some landlords gouge the tenants to a degree beyond mercy. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I renew my point of order. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. TABER. I do. The amendment offered by the gentleman is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words in the first section of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the statement of the gentleman from New York that we should decentralize many of the offices now located in Washington. I believe that we should not only decentralize but should carry out the first plank in the platform of the party that is now in power. which I desire to read.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, with very deep regret I must make a point of order against the gentleman's remarks. They are not germane to the amendment which he has presented.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] will proceed in order and discuss the language in his amendment.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary in-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] has not yielded.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield. I want to discuss this amendment.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. ZIONCHECK. The point of order is this: If the gentleman from Pennsylvania would start asking where the money is coming from, that might be germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not state a point of order, and the Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman from Washington understands that is not a point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] will proceed in order.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, this bill creating another commission to regulate rents is contrary to the first plank in the

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I submit a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is not discussing his amendment and is therefore not proceeding in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to rule, because the Chair did not hear the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed in

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, the first section of this bill states that the rent and housing conditions in the District are dangerous to the general welfare, health, peace, and morals of the public. I want to show that the health, peace, and morals of the public, if they were promoted in accordance with the first plank of the Democratic platform-

Mr. ZIONCHECK. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington will state his point of order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. My point of order is that the last five words of the first section of the bill are these: "this act unless sooner repealed", and, evidently, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not speaking on his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is now discussing the first section of the bill and the Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed in order.

Mr. RICH. Under the bill we are discussing at the present time, if we carried out the statement that was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] decreasing the number of people we have in Washington by decentralizing these bureaus

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington will state his point of order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The point of order is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is talking about an amendment to which a point of order was made and which was sustained by the Chair and, evidently, he cannot be right this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed in

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, the first plank in the Democratic platform may be something that the Democratic Members of the House of Representatives do not want to hear, but I think if they are sincere and serious in trying to carry out the things they told the American people they would carry out, they would be glad to hear this and do the things they promised the American people they would

Now, the situation is just this. Stop establishing more bureaus, cut down Government employees, and the housing situation will adjust itself.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will state his point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his own amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will proceed in order. Mr. SISSON. I have no objection to his reading the Democratic platform, if he wants to, or the Bible either. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled and has sustained the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, it seems the Democrats do not want to listen to something they promised the American people. They are not interested although they should be pleased to have somebody call this to their attention, and I hope when the bill comes to a vote they will defeat it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. There is now a pro-forma amendment pending before the Committee. Is there objection to the withdrawing of the pending pro-forma amendment?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I am not going to object if I can get time to finish my speech, and I can finish it in 5 minutes. However, I do not object.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR! offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: On page 8, line 11, strike out lines 11 and 12 and the words "any guest" in line 13.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, in the 3 days in which this bill has been debated there have been a number of very fine speeches made in reference to it, attacking its constitutionality, first, on the question of an emergency. Whether or not that exists, I think, is a fact that might well be left to the courts. I personally cannot determine it. and I doubt if many people here are in position to determine it on the facts.

The other point which my amendment reaches is the question raised with respect to interference with existing contracts. I believe the bill is defective in this respect. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dobbins] made a fine address on Monday and pointed out the language which I now move to strike out. This language is, "notwithstanding the existence of a lease or other contract between the tenant and the owner or between the owner or any guest."

This, of course, is probably in violation of the Constitution as to the protection of existing contracts. I believe if this language is taken out of the bill, as it should be, most of the objections to the bill fall, and the Court can decide the question of the emergency, if it be raised.

There has been a great deal of talk here about hordes of additional employees. This is not correct, of course. They will all be under civil service, and the Appropriations Committee will take care of the appropriations in that respect.

I offer my amendment in good faith to perfect the bill from a constitutional standpoint, and I believe the amendment should be adopted.

Mrs. NORTON, Mr. ZIONCHECK, and Mr. TABER rose. Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, the committee accepts the amendment-

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, the gentlewoman from New Jersey does not rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from New Jersey is the chairman of the committee handling the proposed legislation. She is seeking recognition, and the Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from New Jersey for 2 minutes, the time remaining under the rule.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I will consume that 2 minutes if anybody does.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield the 2 minutes to me?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will yield 1 minute of the time, if necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the chairman of the committee, the gentlewoman from New Jersey, for the remaining 2 minutes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. ZIONCHECK. The point of order is this; I think the parliamentary rule is-and if it is not, it should be-that the chairman of the Committee on Rules cannot take the last 5 minutes to make an amendment and then make a speech consuming all the time. I think that is not decent.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair understands the gentleman's point of order, the Chair overrules it. There is 1 minute of time left.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, then I make another point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order, and make it brief.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I do not want to argue the point. I do not want to offend the lady from New Jersey. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the gentleman from Washington has made a point of order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. How much time is remaining? I want to know how many are going to talk.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a point of order. The time has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. O Mr. Chairman, that comes too late. All time has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules that point of order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. What objection is there? Why does the Chair overrule the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will explain. Under the rule the time for debating amendments is limited to 1½ hours. That hour and a half has expired. The bill is now open for as many amendments as may be offered hereafter, but there will be no debate.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, if there are no other amendments, the Committee will now rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. UMSTEAD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11563, and pursuant to House Resolution 489, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered under the rule. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ZIONCHECK rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes, otherwise I have a technical point upon which I can raise the question of personal

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Then I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 108. Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote upon the ground there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-one Members present, not a quorum. The roll call is automatic. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 85, nays 196. answered "present" 1, not voting 146, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected and to lay that motion on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I want the Members to know that I cheerfully accept the verdict of the House with regard to this bill. [Applause.] Also I want them to know that the fight I made on the bill went far deeper than the bill itself. It was a fight for a principle; the principle is whether or not the House has the right to pass on legislation or be prevented from doing so by filibustering on legislation that has been properly reported out of a committee of the House. I am very grateful to the Committee on Rules for having brought in the rule, and I am also deeply grateful to the Members for voting in favor of the rule to bring the bill up under orderly procedure, particularly since they were opposed to the bill.

I want my colleagues in the House to know that I have never sought as the chairman of this committee to influence legislation. I believe in correct procedure under the rules of the House, and that is the principle involved in the determined fight that I have made on the bill.

Whether or not the bill is constitutional is a question not even any lawyer in the House can determine, much less the chairman of your committee, who is not a lawyer. It is a fact, and the evidence has been offered in the consideration of the bill, that the Supreme Court has decided on two occasions that such a bill is constitutional; but, after all, that was not the question really involved in my fight on the bill. So far as the bill is concerned, I want you to know that last year when it was introduced in the House and voted out of the committee-I was not present when the vote was taken-I tried very hard to get the real-estate dealers of this city to consider the extreme cause of the people of the District of Columbia and they turned a deaf ear to any suggestions I had to make. To keep the record straight, at this point I want you to bear in mind that there are many fair-minded owners and real-estate people in the District. They are not in opposition to this bill. It then seemed obvious that the only thing to do, after repeated efforts to have the unfair real-estate people bring about a better understanding with their tenants and a fair adjustment of rents to bring the bill before the House. If the Members offered any constructive amendments to the bill they would have been accepted by your committee, or if a better bill were offered it could have been substituted for this bill. My only desire was to help the poor people of Washington.

I have made a sincere effort to assist the great mass of people here who are denied the right of representation in Congress. Thousands of citizens have appealed to me to do something about a situation that has become desperate. It was my duty as your chairman to do so, and the only reason I had for presenting this bill to the House. My conscience is absolutely clear in the matter. Communism has reared its ugly head into the consideration of this bill. I have no fear of communism so long as we remember that the rank and file of this great Nation is entitled to a square deal. When we try to throttle and destroy helpless citizens and deny to them the rights they are entitled to under the Constitution of our beloved country, then, indeed, shall we need to fear the destructive forces of communism. It was the last cry of a disturbed mind to bring the charge of communism into this bill.

You have voted on the bill, and I have no doubt that you feel you have voted correctly. I have no criticism to make about that. However, the real purpose of the filibuster was explained better than I can explain it by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] himself on April 15, when in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on page 5549, he said:

In order to prevent the consideration of the Sisson bill until we In order to prevent the consideration of the Sisson bill until we could have an opportunity to get before the Members of Congress the result of an investigation made by our Subcommittee on Appropriations handling the District supply bill, which caused our subcommittee to refuse to allow $78,660 for so-called character education, and which hearings show conclusively that the Sisson bill should not pass, several of us having been doing all we could to delay the passage of the Ellenbogen bill, even if we are not able to defeat it, because immediately following its passage the Sisson bill will be called up for passage.

Further, on page 5549 of the RECORD, I quote:

If Rules Committee grants a rule on the Ellenbogen bill I want it to assume full responsibility for it should the bill pass, for I know without such a rule it would not be passed. And if we are limited to 1½ hours for amendments, I do not intend to make any effort whatever to stop its passage, for effort would be futile with that limited time allowed to present numerous amendments and the chairman controlling most of the time. And I want it to assume responsibility for the Sisson bill.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is the first time during my service as a Member of this House that an attempt has been made to defeat one bill in order to prevent the consideration of another. Such parliamentary practice is disgraceful. Every bill should stand on its own feet.

When the Sisson bill comes before the House, I have not the slightest doubt it will be considered on its merits, and nothing less than fear of the outcome of your consideration would have thrown those opposed to the bill into so great a panic that 3 whole days were devoted to filibustering.

Certainly this fear should not have been made the basis of an attack on this bill or of having consumed 3 days of the time of this House, not to speak of the tremendous expense which the taxpayers of the entire country must bear as a result of the disgraceful filibustering tactics pursued in this House. Thank you sincerely for the fine consideration you have shown your chairman in order to keep the record straight. [Applause.]
The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey has expired.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR TIMBER OPERATIONS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House Joint Resolution 215, to amend Public Act No. 435, Seventy-second Congress, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows: Line 10, strike out "March" and insert "September."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Arizona?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is this bill?

Mrs. GREENWAY. Does the gentleman want me to explain it fully?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. No; just briefly. What is the bill about?

Mrs. GREENWAY. The bill is to allow a contractor to cut timber as a contractor on an Indian reservation, with the date postponed from March to September. It is with the approval of the Department of the Interior. The bill has passed both Houses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Arizona?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, constrained as I am not to, I object. The Indians have suffered enough.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES COMMEMORATING FOUNDING OF NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 10489) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding and settlement of the city of New Rochelle, N. Y., with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That in commemoration of the two hundred and fiftieth anni-"That in commemoration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding and settlement of the city of New Rochelle, N. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is this bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. The bill provides for the coinage of 50cent pieces in commemoration of the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of New Rochelle, N. Y. The Senate amended the bill. The House had a policy which protects coin collectors, and this is simply to require them to coin 25,000 at any one time.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Michigan going to object to this or not?

Mr. COCHRAN. This bill passed both Houses.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will not object if they do not object. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the Senate amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cochran to the Senate amendment: On page 2, line 1, after the word "than", insert the word "twenty."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withdraw that temporarily?

Mr. BLANTON. I will withdraw it.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE MISSOURI VALLEY

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the development of the Missouri Valley.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, the Missouri River rises in southwestern Montana and flows in a general southeast direction and joins the Mississippi 15 miles north of St. Louis, Mo. This river is 2,470 miles long, and when united with the Mississippi, is the longest river system in the world. The Missouri River has a drainage area of 529,000 square miles. The maximum, mean, and minimum discharges at the mouth are, respectively, 900,000, 96,000, and 12,500 cubic feet per second. The total fall of the river from source to mouth is 3.630 feet.

The Missouri River flows through the States of Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Missouri and borders the States of Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas, thus bringing seven States within immediate proximity to whatever benefits may be derived from the development of this river system.

These States have a population of 14,000,000 people, and the area is the heart of the Agricultural Belt of the United States. In this area, including Minnesota (easily reached by power development), there is produced normally the following percentages of the Nation's principal food crops:

Pe	rcent
Spring wheat	76
Durham wheat	100
Rye	70
Corn	50
Hogs	50

Fully 85 percent of all these crops are marketed east of the Mississippi River. These States constitute the heart of the land-locked empire of the United States. Freight rates are exorbitant for the reason that there is no competition in this area either actual or actively potential. A few tables will illustrate the unfairness in railroad rates:

Salina, Kans., to Chicago by rail, 1 bushel of wheat, 641

miles	$0.21.5
Chicago to Buffalo by water, 1 bushel of wheat, 900 miles_	1.5
Barge rate per bushel from Kansas City to St. Louis	2.4
Rail rate per bushel from Kansas City to St. Louis	6.6
Barge rate from Kansas City to Chicago per bushel	4.8
Rail rate from Kansas City to Chicago per bushel	9.0
From this area to New York, 100 pounds of milk by rail	1.10
Milk from Pacific coast to New York by water	. 45

Of far greater importance comes the regulation of rates on electricity. The use of electricity in this area is extremely limited, and the agricultural area is wholly undeveloped as to the use and conveniences of electricity. Those who do use electricity are paying unjust rates and will continue to do so for all time unless some standard is set by which rates can be set. Using the T. V. A. yardstick on costs of generation and distribution of electricity, the people of these States are paying in excess of what a just rate would be the following sums annually:

Kansas	$9, 174, 000
Iowa	12, 480, 000
Minnesota	14, 460, 000
Missouri	21,068,000
North Dakota	2, 184, 000
South Dakota	2, 480, 000
Nebraska	7, 156, 000
Montana-Utah	6, 546, 000

A total annual overcharge for these States in the Missouri River Valley system of $75,548,000.

A 9-foot channel from Yankton to St. Louis could be assured for an expenditure of $170,000,000. This whole gigantic river improvement could be paid for in 28 months by the people who use electricity in this area if their electric rate were reduced to a rate measured by the T. V. A. rates.

From 1803, when the United States purchased this great area from Spain upon the demand of Napoleon, until 1866, this great river was the only transportation system known to this immense area outside of the wagon and Indian travois.

With the coming of the Union Pacific, the Northern Pacific, and the Great Northern this great river system remained only as a part of the history of the West so far as transportation was concerned. In the meantime an empire has been carved out of the fertile West and lost to the generation that built it and to their sons and daughters, and the principal single cause has been the discriminative freight rates which these people have been compelled to pay, because there has been no competition. The great power of competition, the great power to substitute easier, better, and cheaper transportation has lain dormant for over a half century, but at all times open and accessible to the inhabitants to free them and emancipate them from this landlocked empire. It will take only the united public opinion of the people living in this area to grasp the opportunities of the use of this great water system, which will provide competition in transportation rates, furnish them with cheap electric energy, increase the fertility of the soil, prevent the untold loss of property and suffering occasioned by floods along its course and prevent 50,000 acres from being washed away annually.

Our receded lakes will be restored and the old western paradise, with its flowers, trees, song and game birds, will be a living likeness of God's own handiwork.

For the relief of people, North and South, no program of equal proportions has been suggested in Congress for a generation. To the administration that will drive ahead with this all-important program will go the credit of doing more for this great western empire than any single accomplishment since the Government began.

The vision of our engineers and statesmen who were responsible for the creation of the Tennessee Valley Authority for the benefit of all the people, and the elimination of private profit, has awakened the sleeping West to the great opportunities that lie before it. Senator Norris, Congressman Rankin, and Governor Weaver, and other great leaders have focused the attention of the people of the West on the question of their natural right to use the benefits bestowed by Providence. This great area has become power conscious; they realize now that immediately before them lies the means by which they can live and prosper. There will be no turning back now, and the railroads and the private power companies who have sapped the life of the people of this area through unconscionable rates, unrestrained by competition, have been notified that their reign over a free people has now been guestioned.

In order to equalize prosperity throughout the Nation there must be a diffusion of manufacturing, and so far in its history this great landlocked empire has been discriminated against. Excessive rail rates, on raw material in and on finished products out, have kept the West strangled industrially.

The census reports indicate that in the period from 1920 to 1930, 14½ percent of the area of the United States had an increase in population of 67.7 percent of the Nation's total increase. This 14½ percent of the area was territory within 50 miles of the seaboard, Lakes, and the Gulf, and here the population increased eleven and one-half millions. The reason is plain, for here in this strip of territory the principal industries of the Nation are located.

The West is still unsettled, and there is land enough in this area to provide homes for the millions who are unemployed and those other millions who are living on public and private charity. The West does not ask any special favors or any special privilege; all it asks is an equal chance with the rest of the country. Let its natural industries survive and grow and the whole Nation will be benefited. Railroads cannot complain, because with more people coming into the territory more needs must be satisfied. This brings increased business in transportation. Small business at high rates cannot be compared in economic soundness to reduced rates and enough business.

IMPEACHMENT PROCEDURE-NOTICE BY SENATOR M'ADOO

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I should like to give notice that on Thursday next, as soon as it may be convenient after the Senate convenes, and when I can secure recognition, I wish to address the Senate on the subject of impeachments, and to discuss in that address an alternative method for trying judges of the inferior Federal courts for misbehavior within the meaning of the Constitution by some method other than impeachment.

OPINIONS OF SENATORS IN IMPEACHMENT CASE OF HALSTED L. RITTER

Pursuant to the order entered on the calendar day Thursday, April 16, 1936, allowing each Senator 4 days after final vote on the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, within which to file his individual opinion, the following opinions, one signed by Mr. Borah, Mr. La Fol-LETTE, Mr. FRAZIER, and Mr. SHIPSTEAD, and one signed by Mr. Thomas of Utah, were filed and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I offer for the RECORD a statement touching the impeachment case on which the Senate voted last week, the statement being signed by myself as well as the Senator from Wisconsin IMr. La For-LETTE], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD].

STATEMENT OF SENATORS BORAH, LA POLLETTE, FRAZIER, AND SHIPSTEAD IN THE MATTER OF THE IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

The Constitution of the United States provides:

The Constitution of the United States provides:

"The President, the Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors" (art. II, sec. 4).

"The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall at stated times received for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office" (art. III, sec. 1).

As early as 1688 the good-behavior standard for the judiciary was adopted by the English Parliament, nearly 100 years prior to the adoption of our Constitution. And as early as 1693 the English courts construed the meaning of good behavior in relation to its effect on the tenure of office of a judge.

In one of these decisions may be found the following language: "It is an estate for life determinable upon misbehavior; for 'during good behavior' is during life; it is so long as he doth behave ing good behavior' is during life; it is so long as he doth behave himself well; i. e., if he behaves himself well in it so long as he lives he is to have it so long as he lives, during life and during good demeanor.

This principle was adopted by the framers of the Constitution, and is found is section 1, article III.

It is our view that a Federal judge may be removed from office if it is shown that he is wanting in that "good behavior" designated as a condition of his tenure of office by the Constitution, although such acts as disclose his want of "good behavior" may not amount to a crime.

Our Federal judges are appointed for life, conditioned upon their good behavior, and if they fail in this respect they may be impeached and removed from office. This, we feel, is a wise provision of the Constitution and that its enforcement is necessary in order to maintain respect for and the integrity of our courts. If a judge is guilty of such conduct as brings the court into disrepute, he is not to be exempt from removal simply because his conduct does not amount to a crime.

We therefore did not, in passing upon the facts presented to us in the matter of the impeachment proceedings against Judge Halsted L. Ritter, seek to satisfy ourselves as to whether technically a crime or crimes had been committed, or as to whether the acts charged and proved disclosed criminal intent or corrupt motive; we sought only to ascertain from these facts whether his conduct had been such as to amount to misbehavior, misconduct—as to whether he had conducted himself in a way that was calculated to undermine public confidence in the courts and to create sense of scandal.

There are a great many things which one must readily admit would be wholly unbecoming, wholly intolerable, in the conduct of a judge, and yet these things might not amount to a crime.

If judges could not be removed from office for misbehavior or misconduct or the want of "good behavior", then, notwithstanding such conduct upon the part of the judge, he could continue indefinitely if he succeeded in avoiding those things which would amount to a crime, although the things less than a crime might make the administration of justice a matter of universal distrust. make the administration of justice a matter of universal distrust.

Believing, therefore, that the evidence established beyond doubt the want of "good behavior", we felt constrained to so vote, without passing upon the question of whether his acts constituted a crime or crimes.

WM. E. BORAH. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr. LYNN J. FRAZIER. HENRIK SHIPSTEAD.

MEMORANDUM OPINION IN THE IMPEACHMENT TRIAL OF JUDGE HALSTED L. RITTER-SUBMITTED BY SENATOR ELBERT D. THOMAS

L. RITTER—SUBMITTED BY SENATOR ELBERT D. THOMAS

I disagree with those who maintain that the phrase "During good behavior" refers only to tenure. The phrase is not synonymous with "for life." Its expanded meaning is that a judge may serve for life, providing his behavior is good. Misbehavior, therefore, is a cause for removal, and in an impeachment trial that is all that need be proved, for conviction calls for only removal from office, which in turn may lead to a bar from future office holding. That is not a punishment for wrongdoing in the ordinary sense but mere removal from office because of unfitness. This is the only conclusion proper when one reads further in the Constitution that "The party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law."

Fitness for office is the test, tenure for life is the result. Life tenure follows in the wake of good behavior. The aim of the fathers in setting up the Constitution was to create a Government by law; therefore those who were to be the custodians of the law, the judges, were to be granted every safeguard. Their compensaby law; therefore those who were to be the custodians of the law, the judges, were to be granted every safeguard. Their compensation was not to be diminished, and later, by the interpretation of the judges themselves, not to be diminished even by an income tax. The guaranteed continued compensation was given that they might be free from the worries of ordinary citizens and other governmental officials as far as the world's goods were concerned and therefore economically independent of their fellow men. Their very appointment presupposed their fitness as to knowledge, ability, and civic virtue. Under our Constitution the judge is set apart in a class by himself with a tenure that is denied all other officials. But this tenure is not "for life"; it is "during good behavior." Tenure during good behavior means, so far as life is concerned, only that it may extend through the period of the incumbent's lieftime. It is in no sense a guaranty of a life job, and misbehavior in the ordinary, dictionary sense of the term will cause it to be cut short on the vote, under special oath, of two-thirds of the Senate, if charges are first brought by the House of Representatives.

Can anyone imagine that the framers of the Constitution thought for a minute of giving anyone under the American system a life tenure as such? It must never be forgotten that the influences of Harrington and his theories about office holding, especially the theory of rotation, as expressed in his Oceana, were constantly in the minds of those who wrote our Constitution. The most casual study of the history of the fears of the founders of the new Government fears of expressive fears of projects of these fears of princes. ment, fears of aristocracy, fears of heredity, fears of princes, fears of title, fears of life tenure, is convincing in this respect. The founders of this Government condemned the life idea, did they not? Did they not provide specifically that a republican form of government should be guaranteed to all the States? The whole theory of The whole theory of law but also from colonial experience.

To assume that good behavior means anything but good behavior would be to cast a reflection upon the ability of the fathers to express themselves in understandable language. Moreover, historically there can be no doubt of what the words "good" behavior" meant in the minds of the framers of our Constitution, because historically they had the phrase not only from English law but also from colonial experience.

Under our Constitution, all civil officers may be impeached. If the aim is to remove from office because of infidelity to trust or to the oath of office, the standard of judgment is not the same in all cases. With administrative officers the idea of discretion may be very wide. Usually these are subject to removal by order of the Executive, who has himself a limited, definite term. In Congress each House is judge of its own Members, so the question as to whether a Senator or Representative is a "civil officer", as used in relation to impeachment, need not be raised. The Constitution prescribes quite clearly the method to be employed where a member of the judgiary holding tenure "during good behavior". a member of the judiciary, holding tenure "during good behavior", is concerned. The standard here is good behavior. It was no doubt felt that anything less than good behavior from one charged with upholding the sanctity of the bench is reprehensible, impeachable, and, yes, criminal if you will.

As there is no appeal from a conviction after impeachment, the House of Representatives has wide latitude in selection of reasons for impeachment. The Senate, too, makes its own rules, and the individual Senator votes in accordance with his own opinion, without instruction from the Court in the sense that an ordinary jury receives instructions. These provisions, too, stress the theory that the real question before the Senate in the trial of judges is their fitness to maintain the trust which the people must have

In the case just considered a defense for an act in allowing a fee was advanced that as the fee was satisfactory to the attorneys for all parties concerned, that the judge felt that he need not be for all parties concerned, that the judge felt that he need not be further interested. A judge is not a mere referee between litigants; he has a responsibility to the State and to the people. Thus we see that an attitude may constitute a serious misbehavior. Civic virtue may be assumed as a qualification for all office-holders, the theory that public office is a public trust is universal, but in the case of judges it is made a matter of emphasis in written law by the use of the phrase "good behavior."

In a recent opinion of the Supreme Court, these words are used: "Arbitrary power and the rule of the Constitution cannot both exist. They are antagonistic and incompatible forces, and one or the other must of necessity perish wherever they are brought into exist. They are antagonistic and incompatible forces, and one or the other must of necessity perish wherever they are brought into conflict." Accepting this theory of our Constitution, the high Court struck down the action of an administrative officer. If arbitrariness, which is merely a characteristic of behavior, is fatal to our Constitution when exercised by an administrative officer, who can be removed from office by his superior, how much more fatal would it be to our Constitution if exercised by a judge who is protected from removal excepting upon conviction after impeachment. If arbitrariness in an administrative officer is incompatible with the Constitution and citizens are to be protected from it by the judges, the arbitrariness on the part of a judge from it by the judges, the arbitrariness on the part of a judge must be considered doubly reprehensible. Incompatible with the Constitution and also reprehensible, yet it could hardly be called criminal in the legal sense. Thus misbehavior must be considered as a justifiable reason for conviction after impeachment.

The constitutional expression, "shall be removed from office impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors", gives rise to the theory that conviction should follow only after proof of crime committed. The expression quoted seems to be a limitation upon the phrase, "during good behavior." But this does not follow. Crime is a matter degree. Crime, too, depends upon time, place, circumstance, of degree. Crime, too, depends upon time, place, circumstance, effect, and the persons party to it. Conspiracy is always hard of proof. In a judge, a nod from the bench or a gesture in the chamber may constitute a crime. Crime by those who are the guardians of the law need not be measured on the score of indictability. Furthermore, in the case of judges an impeachable crime need not be an indictable one.

Impeachment, though, must be considered as a criminal pro-eding. Under the American Constitution an impeachment trial comes only after long investigation, condemnation, and after formal vote of the House of Representatives. Serious as is the impeachment and the consequent trial there are definite limitations upon the Senate's power to punish after guilt has been established. Thus while the proceeding is criminal the decision does not have the usual resultant punishment which ordinarily

peached to continue in office.

Impeachment is by definition a criminal accusation brought in a legislative body. The idea is old. It was used in the Greek city states, where a Greek citizen could be impeached before a political assembly, and public officers were in this way tried for misconduct in public service. Impeachment, though, as we know it today, is a modern institution. While its use is not general, provisions for its use are found in the constitutions of several European states and in most of those of Latin America. That it is still considered an effective institution is proved by the fact that it found a place in the Weimar Constitution of Germany in 1919.

Impeachment as we have it in our American Constitution is Impeachment as we have it in our American Constitution is American in origin. One need not go outside the constitutional experiences of our own land for an interpretation of the intents of the fathers in inserting the impeachment provision in the Constitution. Impeachment in America is limited to the President, the fathers in inserting the impeachment provision in the Constitution. Impeachment in America is limited to the President, Vice President, and civil officers of the United States. In England, according to English law at the time our Constitution was brought into being, "All the King's subjects were liable to impeachment, whether officials or not, and for any offense." (See Thomas, The Law of Impeachment in the United States, American Political Science Review, vol. 2, p. 378.) The history of impeachment in England, though, shows that it was used mostly to enforce the theory of the responsibility of the higher officers of the Crown to Parliament. Its use as we have it expressed in the American Constitution had become discredited and almost discontinued in England at the time become discredited and almost discontinued in England at the our Constitution was formulated. That American impeachment theory had its origin in America need not be questioned. To illustrate, we find the immediate antecedents to the theory of im-peachment as we have it in the Constitution in Thomas Jefferson's proposal in 1783 for the constitution of Virginia: "There shall be proposal in 1783 for the constitution of Virginia; "There shall be a court of impeachments * * . Before this court any member of the three branches of government * * may be impeached * * for such misbehavior in office as would be sufficient to remove him therefrom; and the only sentence they shall have authority to pass shall be that of deprivation and future incapacity of office, * two-thirds of those present must concur in the sentence * * ." That impeachment of officials to correct their misbehavior was the prevailing American thought is reflected in another quotation from Jefferson written in the same year as the Declaration of Independence, "For misbehavior, the grand inquest of the Colony, the House of Representatives, should impeach them before the Governor and the council * * and impeach them before the Governor and the council * * and if convicted, should be removed from their offices" (from a letter to George Wythe written in 1776).

That good behavior should be the prevailing test of fitness is questioned by those who claim that if the charges are not specifically for "treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors" impeachment might be used for political purposes. If the English thought had been the prevailing one in America in 1787, this might be a proper deduction. For British law made it possible to impeach a minister for heing suility of had judgment in that he had be a proper deduction. For British law made it possible to impeach a minister for being guilty of bad judgment in that he had ill-advised his King. But, as stated above, the Constitution makers did not follow English law; they followed American theory, and it was proper that they should, for such British text writers as Blackstone and Woodeson, who were both extensively read by the Colonists, had taken stands in advance of English law and even then maintained that impeachment proceedings must be for serious offenses and the trial in the nature of criminal proceedings, and not for political purposes. In the American Constitution the two-thirds vote required for conviction is a sufficient safeguard against a political abuse.

American history has proved this to be true in that the inability to obtain an impeachment conviction even for serious offense caused Americans in the first quarter of the nineteenth century to assert that, so far as the judges were concerned, "impeachment is scarcely a scarecrow." a scarecrow.

a scarecrow."

That Americans considered the institution of impeachment as being an insufficient protection, especially against misbehavior of judges is proved by their State constitutional provisions in regard to the tenure of judges. As a result American State constitutional writers turned from the theory of indefinite terms during good behavior to short terms of definite limits. Had the early tendencies in impeachment trials not proved the extreme difficulty in gaining conviction, the "scarecrow" criticism would not have developed, and the appointment of judges for indefinite tenure might have become the common practice as newly created States were set up and their constitutions adopted. and their constitutions adopted.

REPORTS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATION OF MUNITIONS INDUSTRY

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask leave to submit a report from the Special Committee on Investigation of the Munitions Industry (Rept. No. 944, pt. 3). After extended hearings the committee is in process of completing its report for submission to the Senate. Two reports already have been made to the Senate, one concerning war profits and the second relating to the shipbuilding industry. I am about to submit a report on the munitions industry generally. There will be immediately forthcoming from the committee two additional reports, one concerning the War Department legislation dealing, of course, with embargoes and neutrality. The committee will hope to have before the Senate not later than the end of this month three additional reports. These three reports will deal, first, with banking relationships; a second report will cover the question of cost nationalization, and a final report will be in the form of a summary of all the foregoing reports.

There has been, Mr. President, a tremendous request for copies of these reports when they shall be printed. The committee thought it advisable to make inquiry of every Member of Congress concerning the demands which were upon them for copies of the reports.

The response by Members of Congress has been rather amazing, revealing requests from Members of the House of Representatives for 18,000 copies, and from Members of the Senate for something over 13,000 copies. This means a total of at least 31,000 copies. Additional requests are coming in each morning. Obviously there will need to be action by joint resolution to accomplish the printing of the large number of copies which is going to be necessary to meet this demand. As soon as it shall have been ascertained what the cost of the additional printing will be a joint resolution to accomplish the purpose will be introduced.

Mr. President, I ask leave to report to the Senate at this time the findings of the committee on the munitions industry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and printed, with illustrations.

EXPANSION OF FOREIGN TRADE-LETTERS FROM SECRETARY HULL

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present for publication in the Record two letters addressed to me by the Secretary of State on the subject of the measure for a Federal board of foreign trade, and ask that they be inserted in the RECORD at this point and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the letters were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 11, 1936.

The Honorable Morris SHEPPARD,

United States Senate.

My Dear Senator Sheppard: In my letter dated March 10, I endeavored to indicate the steps which the administration has taken under the direction of the President to protect and promote the national interest in the expansion of our foreign trade, and I the national interest in the expansion of our foreign trade, and I also pointed out the success which has followed this policy and the unqualified nature of the endorsement given to it by the organization primarily interested in the expansion of our foreign trade, the National Foreign Trade Council, at its convention at Houston, Tex., in November last.

In response to your request, I now make the following comment concerning the list of Government offices interested in foreign trade included in the report of the Senate Committee on Evreign Rela-included in the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, which accompanies Senate bill 3393, creating a Federal board of foreign trade.

First, let me invite your attention to the list contained in the report of the Senate committee of the Government offices alleged to report of the Senate committee of the Government offices alleged to be interested in foreign trade as of January 25, 1935. Although it appears from the report of the Foreign Relations Committee that this list was prepared by the Department of Commerce, it would seem to be reiteration of a statement made by George N. Peek, then special adviser to the President on foreign trade, in an address which he made at the Twenty-first National Foreign Trade Convention on November 2, 1934, in which he repeated certain recommendations made in his Chicago speech of October 17, 1934, the second of which reads as follows:

"That in order to develop consistent and effective foreign-trade policies, the present 50 or more independent jurisdictions over foreign trade activities in our governmental set-up should be tied together and should function under unified direction."

Adverting, therefore, to the list of the 50 or more Government offices interested in foreign trade-included in the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, it would appear that a high degree of confusion exists in this list, since no attempt is made to discriminate between subordinate organizations having incidental knowledge or administrative functions in connection with foreign commerce and those Cabinet executives who are rewith foreign commerce and those Cabinet executives who are responsible for and with the President shape our national policy in the expansion of our foreign commerce. I may illustrate this by stating that under the Secretary of State 18 separate organizations are listed as having independent authority in connection with foreign trade. This, of course, is erroneous. The various divisions and organizations of the Department of State, insofar as their activities may touch upon our foreign trade, function as a part of a coordinated whole under the authority and direction of the Secretary of State. These separate geographic divisions and other integral parts of his organization have in themselves no direct authority in connection with foreign trade policy, and it is the Secretary ity in connection with foreign trade policy, and it is the Secretary of State only who speaks for the Department of State in foreign-

This confusion as to policy-making organizations and subordinate administrative bodies that may deal with foreign trade in some of its ramifications is further apparent when note is taken of the inclusion of the Bureau of Narcotics under the Treasury Department. It is submitted that the Bureau of Narcotics has purely a negative function in connection with restraining illicit narcotic trade. Its primary purpose is to present the symptomic of parnegative function in connection with restraining illicit narcotic trade. Its primary purpose is to prevent the smuggling of narcotics into the United States in order to protect the health and habits of our people. The same comment is pertinent with regard to the Bureau of Public Health Service; and the Bureau of Customs is purely an administrative unit whose primary function is the collection of revenue from imports into the United States.

When we examine the organizations listed under the War Department, it is difficult to see what relation the Quartermaster Corps of the Army has to do with foreign-trade policy unless from time to time it may purchase some foreign merchandise. In any event, these activities would not involve any control of policy relating to our foreign commerce.

Again, this confusion between administrative organizations of the Government, dealing only remotely with foreign trade, and the Cabinet officers responsible for the shaping of policy, is obvious when the Department of Justice is considered; the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy Department; the Bureau of Plant Quarantine of the Department of Agriculture; the Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce; the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor; and the Federal Communications Commission. The Agricultural Adjustment Administration of the Department of Agriculture and the various organizations listed as a part of the National Recovery Administration are not considered at this time in the light of decisions of the Supreme Court

It would therefore seem that the organizations listed in the President's letter of November 11, 1933, and confirmed subsequently in the Executive orders of March 27, 1934, and December 31, 1935, constitute those governmental bodies that by their very nature are equipped and properly competent to initiate policy in respect to the national interest in foreign trade.

I think it is also important to invite your attention to the letter of Mr. E. P. Thomas, president, the National Foreign Trade Council, included in the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, since it is obvious that the National Foreign Trade Council by the action taken at its twenty-second annual convention in Houston, Tex., on November 18, 19, and 20, 1935, indicated in the most striking manner its unqualified endorsement of the present policy of the administration relating to foreign trade and departed from the position announced by Mr. Thomas in his letter of August 20, 1935, as will be seen by the following statement from the final declaration of the convention:

"Effective coordination of the different governmental agencies concerned with foreign trade has been necessary to the success of the reciprocal trade agreement program. Similar unified endeavor should be permanently maintained in all other phases of the Government's foreign-trade promotion. The convention recommends that such steps be taken by the interested department under the guidance, particularly, of the Department of State and the Department of Commerce, as will assure that the coordinated foreign commercial services of the Government may contribute in the fullest measure to the work of exporters and importers."

measure to the work of exporters and importers."

To summarize: First, in view of the many inexactitudes in the list under comment, the last of proportion or discrimination in the analysis of the duties and powers of each organization that is mentioned, and the absence of apparent understanding as to which of these agencies are merely administrative agencies in limited fields and which are policy-making agencies, I suggest that the list gives a wholly misleading picture; second, the actual governmental organizations having the duty and power to shape policies in this field are few, and they are represented upon the executive committee on commercial policy. Through that committee they are in active and constant consultation with each other, and in that committee a habitual satisfactory procedure of consultation has develmittee a habitual satisfactory procedure of consultation has developed. I therefore suggest that this is an adequate agency for effecting the purposes of the bill, and may be trusted to continue to develop that work.

I am, of course, sending a copy of this letter to Senator Pittman, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, for his information. Sincerely yours,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE Washington, March 26, 1936.

The Honorable Morris Sheppard, United States Senate.

My Dear Senator Sheppard: I believe it may be helpful, in continuance of the discussion begun in my letter of March 10, 1936, and in further reference to the bill (S. 3393) to create a Federal Board of Foreign Trade, which you introduced on July 29, 1935, to give you this somewhat more extensive statement regarding what has already been done, at the direction of the President, to coordinate the Government activities in relation to foreign-trade policies nate the Government activities in relation to foreign-trade policies from the point of view of our international interest.

In a letter of November 11, 1933, to the heads of several branches of the Government having to do with foreign-trade policy, the President called attention to the changing policies of other governments and the changing methods of regulating international trade which have greatly complicated the Government's task of proper direction of American trade and directed that an officer of the Department of State should carry the primary responsibility of supervising the international commercial policy of this Government into a coherent whole and should be the chairman of an executive committee for the coordination of commercial policy and the necommittee for the coordination of commercial policy and the ne-gotiation of commercial treaties and trade agreements. This was confirmed in Executive Order No. 6656, dated March 27, 1934, and again in Executive Order No. 7260, dated December 31, 1935. In the latter order the President directed:

(1) The permanent membership of the executive committee on commercial policy shall be composed of representatives of each of the following member departments and agencies: The Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Commerce, the United States Tariff Commission, and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

The committee may, with the approval of the President, from time to time add representatives of other governmental departments or agencies to its membership for such periods and purposes and with such rights and privileges as to the committee seem desirable.

(2) The chairman of the committee shall be a representative of the Department of State, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of State. The representatives of the member departments and agencies shall be designated by the respective heads of such departments and agencies.

(3) The committee shall continue to exercise its present func-tions for the purpose of coordinating the commercial policy of the United States.

The practical effect of these Executive orders has been to set up a working organization which has operated smoothly for over 2 years and fulfills the following functions:

(1) Centralizing in the hands of one agency supervision of all governmental activities affecting our export and import trade and, through exchanges of views, coordinating the policy between the various departments and agencies:

various departments and agencies;
(2) Studying the prospects for improving foreign trade, especially through the negotiation of reciprocal-trade agreements with other countries as authorized by the Trade Agreements Act of June 12, 1934, which has for its primary object the expansion of foreign markets for products of the United States; and clearing on matters of policy which arise at all stages of the work of the other interdepartmental committees engaged in the preparation for the negotiation of such agreements.

(3) Acting in an advisory capacity to the President on matters of commercial policy, preparing or directing the preparation of factual reports and opinions upon matters referred to the committee for advice by the President and reporting to the President the committee's analyses and recommendations concerning problems and suggestions which have come to the attention of the committee through its contacts with all sections of the Government dealing with commercial relations.

The executive committee on commercial policy holds meetings

The executive committee on commercial policy holds meetings weekly or as frequently as necessary and appears to me to attain with a high degree of success the objective which was the purpose of the bill, S. 3393. So far as I am aware, the arrangement is entirely satisfactory to all of the departments having in any way to do with foreign trade and it has the desirable quality of elasticity which the bill does not appear to possess.

You may be interested in some of the typical activities of the committee under each of the foregoing functions.

1. The executive committee on commercial policy has given frequent attention to problems arising in connection with foreign exchange and the financing and payment for commodities enter-The executive committee on commercial policy holds meetings

In addition to the consideration which it gives to important matters of policy relating to the trade-agreements program, the committee has directed the preparation of special studies and has given frequent consideration to other existing or proposed means of controlling or directing the course of international trade, such as tariffs, quotas, subsidies, and bounties. It has considered broad aspects of the policy of the Government concerning merchant shipping. It has studied also the effect upon cerning merchant shipping. It has studied also the effect upon the interests of the United States of international agreements for the control of the production and marketing of certain commodities and has given consideration to the safeguarding of supplies of commodities and materials of strategic importance in connection with preparedness for national emergencies.

other agencies of the Government upon proposed legislation before Congress have been cleared through the executive committee on commercial policy. The committee also is kept informed by the various departments and agencies of the Government of action or contemplated action affecting or relating to commercial policy, including the administration of laws and the preparation and publication of statistical material and other factual information. A number of standing and special interdepartmental subcommittees of experts function under and at the direction of the executive committee on commercial policy.

2. As you are undoubtedly aware, in the process of carrying out the purposes of the Trade Agreements Act of June 12, 1934, every step, from the preliminary study to the final recommendation to the President of terms to be requested and granted, is taken by interdepartmental action through the committee for reciprocity information, the trade-agreements committee, and its subcom-information, the trade-agreements committee for reciprocity information, the trade-agreements committee, and its subcommittees. The executive committee on commercial policy does not participate directly in these stages, but it does keep constant contact with the progress of the various agreements and the initiation of negotiations, and throughout all these proceedings initiation of negotiations, and throughout all these proceedings important matters of policy are discussed by and cleared through this committee. In addition, the committee conducts many studies on the relation of other activities and policies of the Government to the trade-agreements program. Among these may be mentioned an extensive study of the relation of the trade-agreements program to the balance of international payments of the United States and the bearing of the program on agriculture.

3. Upon the request of the President, the executive committee on commercial policy frequently considers and recommends action to be taken upon reports rendered to the President by individual agencies of the Government, either with respect to the administration of provisions of law or concerning changes in policy or the initiation of action by the Executive. The committee also serves as a channel for the discussion of new and pressing problems in the field of commercial policy and recommends action to the appropriate agencies. For example, the committee has concerned itself with problems arising out of the competition in the United States of certain commodities imported from Japan and has recommended means of dealing with these problems.

I believe that the foregoing sample of the activities of the committee will indicate that the committee is functioning in a manner which insures that there will be a high degree of consistency and coordination in the executive branch of the Government in activities affecting the foreign commercial policy of the United States, and does, I believe, attain the object of the bill, S. 3393. I am sending a copy of this letter to Senator PITTMAN, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, for his information. Sincerely yours.

REGISTRATION OF VOTERS IN PITTSBURGH, PA.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, for the information of my colleague, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis] and also for the benefit of other Members of the Senate. I should like to have introduced into the RECORD a clipping from the Pittsburgh Press of last Tuesday, showing that the Democratic Party is now the majority party in the city of Pittsburgh for the first time since the Civil War. It also shows that in Allegheny County how the Republican lead in registration has been reduced to 50,000 and that during the last 4 years the registration of Democratic voters has increased from 49,000 to 275,000.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HUGE GAIN MADE

The Democratic registration of 1932 in Pittsburgh, the year President Roosevelt was elected, was only 19,702. The Republican registration was 203,161 in that year.

Democrats, therefore, have gained 110,583 in Pittsburgh registration in 4 years and Republicans have lost 82,049.

The Republican lead in registration in the entire county has been cut to 50,906. Four years ago Republicans topped the Democrats by 375,467. County registrations then were: Republicans, 425,121; Democratic, 49,654.

The registration for the entire county now is divided as follows: Republican, 325,964; Democratic, 275,058.

ADDRESS BY HON. JAMES A. FARLEY BEFORE DEMOCRATIC STATE COMMITTEE AT ALBANY, N. Y.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address delivered by the Honorable James A. Farley, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, at a meeting of the Democratic State committee held at Albany, N. Y., on April 15, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I am very happy, indeed, to be back here in Albany and to greet once more so many of my old friends. We meet in a spirit of fine achievement, both in the State and the Nation. As a party, we have been given the trust and confidence of the people, and we have fulfilled that trust.

have fulfilled that trust.

Anyone can be a member of an opposition party. All that requires is the ability to criticize. But when, as in our case, overwhelming support at the polls has imposed upon us the greater tasks of government, the weight of responsibility is very great. We have assumed that obligation and we have discharged it with efficiency, with courage, and with a progressive sense of the changing needs of the people. Loyal party teamwork has played no small part in this task, and for what you have done I thank you. In the State of New York we have been fortunate in having in our chief executive leadership of the highest order. For business ability, for devotion to the pressing duties of public office, for a sense of the humane values in government, and for courage in putting humane ideals into practice, the State of New York owes r debt of immeasurable gratitude to its devoted and beloved Governor, Herbert H. Lehman.

Governor, Herbert H. Lehman. The people of this State recognize these qualities and they await the opportunity to express their endorsement at the polls. In the face of the popularity of Governor Lehman and his Democratic administration, the Republicans are finding it no easy task to find another victim to lead to the slaughter. Looking back over the past, they are not anxious to join that growing club of forgotten men, the ancient order of defeated Republican candidates for Governor of New York for Governor of New York.

Meanwhile in the Nation overwhelming evidence is piling up that President Roosevelt will be reelected. Impartial observers, honest and fair polls of sentiment, all tell the same story. His popularity has grown by leaps and bounds. Unfriendly critics have been telling us of the dreadful things that were going to happen this winter, that this or that or the other of the measures constituting the New Deal would collapse. They even said at times that the New Deal had collapsed, that business could not recover under his administration. But the irresistible march of facts has continued without interruption; recovery has proceeded, and at a pace unparalleled in history. In the Nation, as in New York, the voters are waiting for the chance to say in November, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

With this challenging situation before them, Republican leaders have decided that maybe the New Deal is all right after all. Having decided that they cannot fight the principles behind the New Deal, they have decided to accept them. That is always the way when an adversary is confronted that cannot be overthrown. If you cannot beat him, join him! And so, one by one, the principles and policies of the Roosevelt administration are being embraced by leaders of the opposition.

First, Mr. Hoover, in his farm speech, practically accepted the have been telling us of the dreadful things that were going to embraced by leaders of the opposition.

First, Mr. Hoover, in his farm speech, practically accepted the principles of the Democratic farm program. He had said for many years that certain things could not be done in sustaining farm prices. Now he says they can be done. To hear his discussion of how agricultural surpluses can be controlled, one would think that he had invented our program. In fact, he said at Fort Wayne that he did invent it. But the hard fact is that he fought it with all his might for 12 years. A little later, Governor Landon accepted and adopted as his own the principles of the Democratic farm program. He even implied that the Democrats had not gone far enough in raising farm prices. This is a virtual acceptance of the principles upon which Mr. Roosevelt conducted his campaign in 1932. These converts to Democratic principles are coming late in life, but we will, in the spirit of charity, be glad to take them in.

While there is much discussion about sound money and the

While there is much discussion about sound money and the danger of inflation, Republicans everywhere are maintaining a strict silence as to the monetary program of this administration. No one dares to claim that the policies pursued in the early days of this administration to restore our monetary system to a sound and healthy condition have not had a sound and salutary influence upon the revival of business and trade. With respect to banking no one would have us go back to the old unstable days before 1933. Under the policies pursued by this Democratic administration, the banking system has been restored; and if any of the Republican candidates would suggest that these salutary laws should be repealed, they have not yet had the courage to state their purpose. In the industrial field the efforts of this administration toward the protection of workmen in their right to bargain collectively and its efforts to stamp out child labor and sweatshop wages have not been questioned. Not a word of criticism is uttered against the Securities Act and the Securities Exchange Act, which have brought order into the securities' markets of this country and have gone so far to protect honest dealing in this great field. Republicans are not claiming that farmers should not have been saved from foreclosures and bankruptcy by the agricultural credit administration, and that small-home owners should not have been protected in their homes.

If the party that was in power in 1932 was right in saving that While there is much discussion about sound money and the small-home owners should not have been protected in their homes.

If the party that was in power in 1932 was right in saying that such things should not and could not be done, then why are they willing to accept them now? If they were right then, they are wrong now. The trouble with the Republicans is that when they have a good idea they are afraid to act upon it, and when they do act it is upon something they haven't thought through.

We advocated these policies in 1932 and we were right. We have put these measures into effect and we were right in doing so. We stand on the record of these accomplishments—and we are still right and we are still consistent.

These Republican leaders are, in effect, like the men who stood on the sidelines 30 or 40 years ago and told the early automobile manufacturers that they could not build an automobile. Then, when they saw the automobile being built, they said it would not run when it was finished. But after it had been built and proved that it would run, and after it had revolutionized the lives of those for whom it had been built, these men were willing to accept it, to utilize it, and to enjoy its benefits. These people lived and learned. But our critics have just lived—they have not learned. In 1932 they said that their old "horse and cart" method of government was the only one that would work. Then the Democratic Party came into power and began to build a better kind of governmental machine. And again these critics said that it could not be built. Then, when it was built, they said it would not run. And when it did run, they said it would stop. Finally, when it did not stop, they said that they ought to be permitted to run it themselves.

Now, that is about as absurd an argument as can be imagined. themselves themselves.

Now, that is about as absurd an argument as can be imagined. Certainly the people of the United States are quite able to see the absurdity of it. The Republicans would tell us that they, who have been wrong at every stage in the process of recovery, should, when recovery is well on the way, be brought back into power and trusted with the administration of the very policies they attempted to destroy.

The trouble is that there is not a real Republican Party. Those who call themselves the leaders of the Republican Party are just a group of discredited and disappointed men. They cannot agree upon what they want, or whom they want as leaders. One group cries out that it is the authentic Republican Party; another group, with an equal record of voting the Republican ticket, claims that it is the Republican Party. Each says that the other group is false, a counterfeit of the party. With this situation before us, it is hard to see how we can recognize or even find our opposition. We cannot fight with a ghost, and the Republican Party is the nearest thing to a ghost that we have seen since Shakespeare wrote Hamlet. Anyway, I think this particular ghost is going west in November 1936.

November 1936.

On the other hand, we have had opposition and criticism from a little group of selfish and disappointed men who formed a new political party and called it the American Liberty League, now known as the Cellophane League. This group is loud in its assertions that it is an educational institution, that it is nonpartisan, and that it bears no real ill will toward either party. Well, if it is not a political party, then it is the strangest educational institution that this country has ever seen since the Anti-Saloon League. I don't believe the board of rezents would recognize it as a school.

tion that this country has ever seen since the Anti-Saloon League. I don't believe the board of regents would recognize it as a school. Of course, no one has ever believed that the American Liberty League was an educational institution. They must have had a poor idea of American intelligence if they expected us to believe that one.

The league was organized for the purpose of fighting President Roosevelt and the Democratic Congress. But the harder it fought and the louder its leaders talked, the more their motives were suspected. And now that they have found they cannot much longer carry on by themselves, they want to hitchhike on the Republican band wagon. But the Republican leaders seem very cold to them, for they realize that if they are found consorting with the American Liberty League the American people will think even less of the Republicans than they do now. And so the American Liberty League is making it more embarrassing for the Republicans every day. Republican leaders are asking each other how they can get rid of the American Liberty League. They do not dare to repudiate it because they probably want the support of large contributors who have given money to the Liberty League. They cannot take over the league because that would be a repudiation of everything the league has pretended to do. And they cannot ignore the league because they will apparently have to depend on the ideas the league has developed for them. The fact is that whether they like it or not, the Republican leaders represent the same forces of reaction that the American Liberty League represents. They would go back to the Old Deal and let those people run the country who presided over its downfall.

As we turn from this dark picture of the opposition to the adits downfall.

Old Deal and let those people run the country who presided over its downfall.

As we turn from this dark picture of the opposition to the administration that is responsible for the government of this country the contrast is sharp and inspiring. Three years have passed since, in the dark days of March 1933, President Roosevelt assumed the great office to which he had been elected. A former President, who is speaking often these days, would have you believe a most extraordinary thing. He says that the economic collapse that continued through 1932 and ended in March 1933 was brought about by the Democrats, and that the recovery which took place after 1933 was due to the Republicans. This is strange reasoning, indeed, but it is Hoover reasoning and it is no worse than the kind of reasoning that he used in governing the country when he was President. He says that while he was President the Democrats did not help him, and for that reason he failed; that after the Democrats took over the country they did everything they could to injure business, but that business recovered despite them. He then goes on to say that the country ought to return the Republicans to power. This, again, is strange reasoning. But Mr. Hoover must think that in political campaigns people lose the habit of reasoning or of listening to reason. to reason.

Many people have noted various improvements in Mr. Hoover's speeches. He is becoming much more light-hearted. He even inserts gentle little jokes into his utterances. The only explanation that I can give for this proposition he is making to the American people is that he has gone so far in becoming a master of humorous writings that the whole thing is a joke. And I want to compliment him on it, because as a maker of jokes he is apparently much better than as a guide of the economic destiny of this Nation.

But, leaving aside Mr. Hoover and his jokes, let us turn to the realities of the past 3 years. Reduced to simple terms, President Roosevelt's policies conceived of this country as a great unit. He set out to help not just a few in the hope that the prosperity of these few would help others, but to help all groups and all interests—agriculture, labor, industry, finance. He is a great American and his policies were American in scope.

I shall not repeat the long story of how President Roosevelt's policies have achieved the measure of improvement that we all now see. We are not going to be judged by our explanation of why or how we did this or that. We are going to be judged by results. Have we made this Nation a better place for the average man? Have we increased his material well-being? Have we protected his rights, added to his security, increased his happiness? I believe that we have, and in expressing this belief I merely echo the belief of millions of others. of millions of others.

Let us look at the results of President Roosevelt's policies from two points of view: First, as to material values; second, as to human values. In the last analysis these two depend upon each other, for where the weak are exploited, prosperity cannot long endure for anyone. But for the moment let us look at the two separately.

On the material side there has been improvement in every line of activity. The banks are stronger than they ever were before. Our monetary system is the strongest in the world. Our national credit is sure and certain. The issuance and marketing of securities are on a higher plane of soundness and honesty than ever in our history. Industry is finding a growing market for its products. Agriculture has been saved from ruin. The burden of debt upon all groups has been relieved.

All of this is reflected in the vast improvement of business conditions that we see on every side. Every financial journal, every newspaper, every economic service tells us the same story. I need not repeat what you all know.

And now for the human values, so important to a sound and healthy nation. We have, despite criticism and despite occasional mistakes, courageously fulfilled the obligation to relieve the needy and support the weak in this great depression. We have insisted upon the rights of honest labor, the right of a living wage, fair hours, collective bargaining, and the freedom of children from premature employment. We have enacted the first genuine social-security system in our history, building toward sound and adequate protection for old age and for the unemployed. ployed

We have freed the Nation from the curse of a million spies and an army of corruptionists by destroying the unsound and un-workable eighteenth amendment. We have made America a safer place, a saner place, a more humane place in which to live our lives

All of this achievement was possible only because of the enlight-ened leadership of one man. The world is full of ideas and full of possibilities for improvement. But courage is necessary to give these ideas life and meaning. It is that kind of courage that President Roosevelt has shown. For 3 hard years he has faced problems more trying than any of us can imagine. But he has never faltered in his courage, never doubted the wisdom of the American people, never lost his sense of responsibility to the average man and woman.

With that leadership we face the coming months with confidence. The American people will not and cannot retreat.

THE SUPREME COURT-ADDRESS BY HON. SIMEON D. FESS

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered at Harrisburg, Pa., on February 13 last, by Hon. Simeon D. Fess, former United States Senator from Ohio. The subject of the address is the Supreme Court and the attacks made on it.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SUPREME COURT UNDER FIRE OF BIG GUNS

While the Constitution, the supreme law of the land, has been assaulted at other times, at no time has it come in for the sharp firing of the last 9 months.

The N. R. A. decision provoked the President to charge that the Court was taking the country back to the "horse and buggy" days. The A. A. decision was attacked by a Cabinet officer as "the greatest legalized steal in history."

Senator Norms proposes by an amendment to compel minority control of the Court in the interest of progressive legislation. The head of the American Federation of Labor and the president of the United Mine Workers call for a curb upon the Court. The president of an important farm organization demands modernization that the Court is the constitution. president of an important farm organization demands modernizing the Constitution. These cumulating attacks are due to the sweeping decisions of the Court upon the New Deal legislation, in which two or three of the major items of the program thus far considered are already invalidated, one by unanimous and the other by a two-thirds decision, with prospect of others which may soon follow the same course. The most recent attack is by the Democratic leader of the Senate, Joseph Robinson.

This is not the first time the Court's power has been attacked. The opposition first arose after successive decisions had been handed down by Chief Justice Marshall touching the validity mainly of State statutes. In 1819 the Court, in the famous McCullough against Maryland case, upheld the Federal statute creating the Second United States Bank. Two years later another decision, Cohen against Virginia, was handed down holding constitutional the statute authorizing writs of error to the judgments of State courts. Three years later by unanimous decision read by Marshall in the case of Gibbons against Ogden, the Court defined the term "commerce" so broad that Jefferson declared such decisions were tending to usurpation of power. His objection was not that the Court had not the authority, but rather he complained that it did not invalidate the Federal statutes that had confliced with State rights. This opposition took shape in pro-This is not the first time the Court's power has been attacked. confliced with State rights. This opposition took shape in proposed legislation to curb the power of the Supreme Court. Bills for this purpose were introduced in each year from 1823 to 1829, inclusive, except 1828. These proposals required more than a majority of the Court to hold a statute unconstitutional. It will be noted that the source of this contention was the failure of the Court to declare certain Federal statutes unconstitutional, statutes that had operated to invalidate the States statutes. That was the real basis of opposition voiced by Jefferson and his followers. This is clearly shown by Jefferson's contention against specific acts of Congress and especially in his correspondence from 1819 to 1826

Back in 1798, when the alien and sedition laws were enacted, Jefferson expressed keen disappointment and freely criticized the Supreme Court because it failed to hold these laws unconstitutional, as he declared them to be unlawful aggression. His uncompromising opposition to the bank recommended by Hamilton led him to look with hope to the Supreme Court to invalidate the law creating it by declaring it unconstitutional. As he criticized the Court in these cases for failure to invalidate Federal statutes, he was highly pleased over its decision holding the embargo acts of his administration as constitutional.

of his administration as constitutional.

A judiciary, and especially an independent judiciary, is necessary in a popular government where powers are limited by a written constitution. The American system of double sovereignty is unique. It is a central Government made up of confederated States. It is planned to insure in the central Government that power and authority necessary to secure law and order without a surrender of the rights of the States which were designed to insure necessary liberty and rights to citizen and State. The central Government is recognized as sovereign in those matters of central Government is recognized as sovereign in those matters of general interest to all people, while the State government is sov-ereign in those matters whose interests are limited to the State.

general interest to an people, while the State government is sovereign in those matters whose interests are limited to the State. For example, a currency system being of national interest, rather than State, would be under the sovereignty of the central Government. Likewise, commerce between the States, or interstate, would be under national authority; while commerce within the State, or intrastate commerce, would be under State authority.

A Government of 13 sovereignties, to be increased in time to 48 such sovereignties, the component parts of the National Government of one sovereignty over matters of general character, will inevitably be confronted with conflicts of authority between the two sovereignties—the Central Government, on the one hand, and the State government, on the other. The delegates of the Constitutional Convention were well aware of this situation. They freely discussed it; compromises were proposed and fully debated. It was finally decided that powers of the Central Government must be limited in whatever instrument to be adopted. Those delegates fearing too much aggression, with our experience with arbitrary government under George III fresh in their minds, admirably set out by Thomas Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence, were most insistent upon placing limits upon the power of the general Government.

The first article of the Constitution, therefore, limited the legis—of the general Government.

The first article of the Constitution, therefore, limited the legislative power by stating what the body could do. It is an article listing the legislative powers to be exercised by the Government. The second article lists the powers and duties as well as the limitations of the Executive, while the third article performs the same function for the judiciary. Article IV specifies what cannot be done by Congress, and article VI designates what is the supreme law of the land—the Constitution—and the laws made in pursuance thereof. Even with all these precautions to insure against Federal aggression over the rights of the States, such fear and determined opposition prevailed as to endanger ratification, the failure of which would have prevented the establishment of the great Republic; whereupon it was decided that a bill of rights, such as had been unsuccessfully urged in the Convention, to be a part of the organic law, should be submitted in the form of amendments, which, when ratified by the necessary number of States, should be made a part of the instrument. This was agreed to, and consequently the first 10 amendments constitute those rights which, taken together, are known as the national Bill of Rights. The first eight of these deal with individual rights. They include freedom of religion, of the press, of petition, trial by jury, due process of law, protection against unreasonable search and seizure, right to be represented by counsel when indicted, right to be confronted by witnesses, right of compulsory process to obtain witnesses, exemption from trial a second time for the same offense, etc. The ninth and tenth amendments refer to the rights of the States; the ninth states that enumeration of certain rights shall not be construed to deny other rights retained by the people: and The first article of the Constitution, therefore, limited the legisetc. The ninth and tenth amendments refer to the rights of the States; the ninth states that enumeration of certain rights shall not be construed to deny other rights retained by the people; and the tenth further limits Federal power by declaring "Powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States or to the people." Whatever else might be said about the purpose of the framers of the Constitution, it will not be denied that while it supplied the sanction for legislative enactment, it is strictly limited to the powers prescribed in the instrument proper and the Bill of Rights. The Supreme Court was made the final arbiter of questions arising out of these powers. out of these powers out of these powers.

Without this full understanding of the purpose, clearly conveyed by the words of the instrument, the Constitution would not and could not have been ratified. Even as it was, doubts and fears were expressed that the rights of the States and the liberties of individuals may be in jeopardy. This was the basis of the opposition in the ratifying conventions of the various States. It was the ground for Patrick Henry's intense opposition in the Virginia convention. It was the basis of Samuel Adams' opposition in Massachusetts; of the powerful resistance in New York. It was the reason why Mason and Randolph, of Virginia; Gerry, of Massachusetts; and possibly Lansing and Yates, of New York, refused to sign the Constitution.

Since it was inevitable that conflicts would arise between these to sign the Constitution.

Since it was inevitable that conflicts would arise between these two sovereignties, it was highly necessary to provide for adjustment. For this as the chief reason the Supreme Court was universally conceded to be the final arbiter, both by supporters of central authority and by the defenders of the liberties of the citizens and the rights of the States. This dual system of sovereignty made necessary the existence of an independent judiciary with power of final decision from which there was to be no appeal save to the people themselves. Were this dual sovereignty absent. save to the people themselves. Were this dual sovereignty absent, the necessity of such power might have largely been removed. England, for example, knows no such conflict between central authority and State authority, simply because there is no such division recognized in the English Government, hence no such thing in England proper as an unconstitutional law. Law in England remains the law until the power that made it unmakes it. Hence there is no independent judiciary such as we know it in our American system. In Australia, a component part of the British Empire, and a federated government somewhat like our own, the high court employs our practice of declaring the law of the central government unconstitutional if the legislation was within the sole powers of the States rather than the Federal Government; likewise in Canada, another country of double soveignty, our practice of disallowing laws prevails.

The authority of the American court to declare a law void if not within constitutional limits did not appear for the first time under the Constitution. It was well understood before 1789, having been exercised by the several States, most of which had adopted new constitutions soon after the adoption of the Declaration of Independence and before 1789. During the period of the Articles of Confederation, 1781 to 1789, prior to the inauguration of the National Government under the present Constitution, at least in seven different cases in as many different States acts of the State legislatures were declared unconstitutional by the State judiciary. This was done in Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, New Hampshire, New York, Massachusetts, and Connecticut. With this practice in the States the delegates of the Constitutional Convention were familiar, as evidenced by the numerous references to the judicial function and procedure by the delegates. In drafting the Constitution the delegates were conversant with the various State constitutions. In many cases, in fact, they adopted the precise language of some of the State condelegates. In drafting the Constitution the delegates were conversant with the various State constitutions. In many cases, in fact, they adopted the precise language of some of the State constitutions. At least half of these delegates had served their respective States either as Governors, judges, or legislators. The function and power of the Federal judiciary which they provided was not unlike that of their States, with which they were familiar. When they provided in article VI that the "Constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof" constituted the supreme law of the land, they had already provided for the agency with necessary authority headed by a supreme court to construe the laws, to ascertain whether they were in pursuance of the Constitution. In case they were not, such legislation would not be law but would be null and void, when so declared by that Court. This was in keeping with the practice of the various States from which the delegates came.

The record abounds in excerpts from speeches and letters of delegates showing this to be the understanding of the Convention when the Constitution was considered and adopted.

Many such utterances of statesmen outside of the Convention, Many such utterances of statesmen outside of the Convention, while these delegates were still alive, leave no doubt of the truth of this statement. The Federalist, the work of Hamilton, Madison, and Jay, pronounced by history "for comprehensiveness of design, strength, clearness, and simplicity, the book has no parallel among the writings of man, not even excepting or overlooking those of Montesquieu and Aristotle"—the Federalist leaves no doubt that the power and duty of the Supreme Court obliged it to hold Congress within the confines of powers delegated to it by the Constitution. Judge George Wythe, the great jurist and a former teacher Montesquieu and Aristotle"—the Federalist leaves no doubt that the power and duty of the Supreme Court obliged it to hold Congress within the confines of powers delegated to it by the Constitution. Judge George Wythe, the great jurist and a former teacher of Marshall, Madison, and later Henry Clay, said, referring to the power of the Court: "If the whole Legislature * * an event to be deprecated * * should attempt to overleap the boundaries prescribed to them by the people, I, in administering the justice of the country, will meet the united powers at my seat in this tribunal and, pointing to the Constitution, will say to them, 'Here is the limit of your authority, hither shall you go, but no further.'" Gouverneur Morris, a Member of the Constitutional Convention, said: "A law was once passed in New Jersey which the judges pronounced unconstitutional and, therefore, void. Such power in judges is dangerous; but unless it somewhere exists, the time employed in framing a bill of rights and form of government was money thrown away." Patrick Henry, a brilliant opponent of the Constitution, assured his hearers that if unconstitutional laws were enacted, the courts would oppose them. This was one source of his powerful opposition. Luther Martin, of Maryland, another opponent of the Constitution warned that acts of Congress not warranted by the Constitution rests with the courts, by whose determination every State must be bound. John Marshall, who in time became known as the country's greatest Chief Justice, said: "If Congress were to make a law not warranted by any of the powers enumerated, it would be considered by the judges as an infringement of the Constitution, which they are to guard. They would declare it void." Oliver Ellsworth said: "If they (United States Government) made a law which the Constitution does not authorize, it is void. The judges will declare it to be void." The Eliot Debates record the debates of the ratifying conventions of the States called for that purpose, and show unmistakably the understa among contemporary statesmen that the power of the courts extended to the invalidation of an unconstitutional law or a law not in pursuance of the Constitution. In Fletcher against Peck (1810) the Court said: "The question whether a law be void for its repugnance to the Constitution is at all times a question of much delicacy, which ought seldom, if ever, to be decided in the affirmative in a doubtful case. The opposition between the Constitution and the law should be such that the judge feels a clear and strong conviction of their incompatibility with each other."

conviction of their incompatibility with each other."

In the first 75 years of national existence under the Constitution only two Federal laws were pronounced unconstitutional—Marbury against Madison, in 1803, and the Dred Scott decision, in 1857, This was due to two facts: First, the early Congresses contained, both in the House and Senate, the greatest constitutional lawyers of the day. Down to comparatively recent date service in the House or Senate did not preclude practice at the bar. Upon the other hand, the greatest oratorical achievements of Senators were on constitutional issues that came before the Supreme Court, rather than upon the floor of the Senate. Likewise, Members of the House appeared before the Court, where many won great renown on constitutional issues. As before the Court, so in both Chambers of Congress the greatest oratorical efforts were on constitutional issues. Occasions like the Webster-Hayne debates of 1830 involved the nature and character of the Union under the Constitution.

Constitution.

History shows that the most brilliant forensic efforts in the annals of Congress down to and some years after the Civil War were on issues involving the constitutional authority of the proposal. The constitutional requirement of the oath and the signing of the Constitution by Members of Congress, as well as all officers of the Government, was not a mere form. It was a solemn pledge not only to support the Constitution, but to oppose any and all measures contrary to it. In those days no Member of either body would excuse his vote on a doubtful constitutional question on the ground that its constitutionality was a matter of the court and did not concern him. The oath to which he had subscribed and to which he had solemnly pledged himself "without reservation or purpose of evasion" forbade such an attitude toward the organic law.

Strict regard for the sanctity of the organic law by the legislative department is the basis of the rule of all judicial bodies to respect what Lord Haldane termed the "mind of the legislature", in which the court invariably considers what the lawmaking body had in mind when it enacted the statute.

Congress in the New Deal program attempted to meet this requirement. In each case it pronounced the proposal as emergency legislation and set it out in the preamble by a declaration that it is in the public interest.

in the public interest.

The emergency factor is borrowed from wartime legislation, where the law of necessity is given force, in spite of the Court's refusal to recognize emergency as an excuse for violation of the Constitution. The declaration of public interest is to meet the rule of the Court to ascertain the "mind of the legislature", by expressly declaring in the enacting clause the purpose and end of the legislation. Mere legislative declaration, however, does not waive constitutional limitation. tutional limitation.

While the Court weighs legislative purpose, it is not conclusive. The A. A. A. decision declared: "Congress has no power to enforce its commands on the farmer to the end sought by the Agricultural Adjustment Act. " " The act invades the reserved rights of The act invades the reserved rights of Adjustment Act. the States."

The lack of weight of congressional purpose in modern times is largely due to the trend to ignore the constitutionality of proposed legislation as indicated by official attitude both by the legislator and the Executive.

The advice of a responsible executive officer 20 years ago to a Member of the lawmaking body to vote for the pending measure "in spite of a reasonable doubt of its constitutionality" would have been an unpardonable offense that would not have escaped the

"in spite of a reasonable doubt of its constitutionality" would have been an unpardonable offense that would not have escaped the impeachment power of the House of Representatives. Contrast the position of Franklin Roosevelt with that of Abraham Lincoln, who, when urged on the slavery question, he said, "No one who has sworn to support the Constitution can conscientiously vote for what he understands to be an unconstitutional measure, however expedient he may think it."

The second reason why there were only two Federal laws pronounced unconstitutional in 75 years was that it was before the period of the multiplicity of laws. During that first three-quarters of a century of our history we had not yet reached the reign of the politician who proposes to cure all the ills, economic and human, by laws and Executive orders out of Washington. It was not until after the Civil War that Congress became the legislative mill to grind out new laws. Prior to that a single Congress would not enact more than about 100, including both private and public laws, and resolutions. In fact, during the three sessions of the First Congress, called upon to put the Constitution into effect, there were only 102 such laws and resolutions enacted, while in the Second there were less than 75 such laws. In contrast to that, in the Seventy-first Congress 17,073 bills were introduced, 2,946 reports received, and 1,009 public laws and 515 private laws were enacted. Such Congresses, like the Fifty-ninth, acted upon 6,940 laws and resolutions. In the last 3 years the new Government agencies, with powers to make and execute rules and orders with the force of law, have exhausted the permutations of the alphabet of three letters to the agency. The citizen is smothered under a maze of regulatory legislative law, bureau law, code law, and Executive orders that will number not less than 25,000, all of which are to be obeyed. In the face of such a situation there need be no surprise that the Supreme Court in a single day hands down four decisions invalidating laws and regulations deemed as important, while in 75 years, prior to the time we began to look to Washington, only two laws were found unconstitutional.

In the next 72 years there were 72 Federal laws invalidated by the Supreme Court. Ten of these went to the illegal administration rather than the legality of the enactment; so that the actual number of statutes declared unconstitutional in the latter period was 62. Of this number about one-third grew out of the new situations created by the Civil War. A study of these cases will show the importance of the stabilizing powers of the Supreme Court in times of stress and storm induced by war.

The historian of the Supreme Court lists the unconstitutional laws as declared by the Court, as follows: From 1789 to 1864, 2; from 1864 to 1886, 16; from 1836 to 1906, 13; from 1906 to 1924, 24; from 1924 to 1936, 19. During the 38 years from 1886 to 1924, 37 decisions were handed down, holding unconstitutional laws submitted for consideration. These generally grew out of the com-law as declared by the Court, as follows: From 1783 to 1804, 2; from 1864 to 1886, 16; from 1868 to 1804, 19. During the 38 years from 1868 to 1924, 24. Trom 1804 to 1936, 19. During the 38 years from 1868 to 1924, 37 decisions were handed down, holding unconstitutional laws submitted for consideration. These generally graw out of the commerce clause of the Constitution involving elements of what more recently has been termed "social justice." Some of the decisions grew out of what are termed the insular cases, in some of which labor rights were involved. These factors also figured in the 19 decisions handed down from 1924 to 1838, holding unconstitutional Federal enactments submitted for adjudication.

Of these 72 cases, the decisions were unanimous in at least 30; while in 11 cases there was the 5 to 4 decision. It is well to remember that in at least 17 cases where the statutes were declared constitutional, the decisions were 5 to 4. Other decisions were, some by one dissenting, others by two, and still others by three dissenting judges. Of the entire '4 laws invalidated by judicial decision, but a small fraction, only 15 cases, developed any public interest whatever. Those dealing with fraud, general principles of public policy, are not more than eight, as follows: Dred Scott, 1857; legal-tender case, 1870; the Monongahela case, 1893; the income-tax case, 1895; the stock-dividend case, 1920; the Schechter (N. R. A.) case, 1895; but have a substitution of the second of the eral Government, and of determining whether they are beyond the limits of power marked out for them, respectively, by the Constitution of the United States. This tribunal, therefore, should be the last to overstep the boundaries which limit its own jurisdiction; last to overstep the boundaries which limit its own jurisdiction; and it should always be ready to meet any question confided to it by the Constitution; it is equally its duty not to pass beyond its appropriate sphere of action and to take care not to involve itself in discussion which properly belong to other forums."

Not in the entire history of the Court has its decisions been dictated by political considerations. Twice such a charge has been made with some semblance of fact to support it; the Dred Scott and the Legal Tender cases; the former invalidated the Missouri compromise on which there had been a bitter political struggle; the latter grew out of the emergency of war, became a political issue, and later the basic plank in the platform of a new political compromise on which there had been a bitter political struggle; the latter grew out of the emergency of war, became a political issue, and later the basic plank in the platform of a new political party. Under such situation it would be natural to charge political influence in the Court, especially by the disappointed litigants. The deferring of the Scott decision until after the election was charged by Lincoln as yielding to the influence of Pierce, Douglass, Buchana, and Taney as against the urgency of McLean and Curtis, of the Court, and other Democratic leaders of the country. The decision declaring the Legal Tender Act, first, unconstitutional, and, later, constitutional, cannot rightly be regarded a political decision, if for no other reason than that the Chief Justice declaring it unconstitutional had, as Lincoln's Secretary of the Treasury, been the author of the act. He was joined in the decision by Nelson, Field, and Clifford, who dissented from the majority judges. The following facts will clearly show that the Court does not hand down decisions on partisan grounds or by a political classification. In the 34 years of Chief Justice Marshall, from 1801 to 1835, but one Federal act was pronounced unconstitutional. In the 29 years of Chief Justice Taney, from 1835 to 1864, but one act was invalidated by the Court. In the 10 years of Chief Justice Chase, from 1864 to 1874, 10 Federal acts were invalidated; 4 by unanimous, 2 by 5-to-4, 3 by 7-to-2, and 1 by an 8-to-1 decision. In the 14 years of Chief Justice Waite, 1874 to 1886, 8 acts were declared unconstitutional and void; 3 by unanimous, 2 by a 7-to-2, and 3 by an 8-to-1 vote. Nearly all of the judges sitting on the 18 cases mentioned were appointed by Republican Presidents who had favored the legislation. In the 22 years of Chief Justice Fuller, 1888 to 1910, 15 Federal acts were invalidated; 4 by unanimous, 3 by 5-to-4, 1 by 7-to-2, and 1 by an 8-to-1 vote. In the next 15 years 27 such acts were invalidated; 12 by unanimous, 3 by 5-to-4, 5 by 6-to-3, appointed by Harding; Hughes and Cardozo, appointed by Hoover; and Stone, appointed by Coolidge; all of these men handed down decisions, or voted on decisions, adverse to the views of the Presidents who appointed them. Some of them, such as Johnson, Story, and McLean, came into strained relations with their chiefs, but this freedom in the exercise of best judgment even in conflict with the President is the highest test of a valuable tribunal for the adjudication of disputed rights.

David Davis, the close personal friend of Lincoln, when deciding adversely to what he felt would have pleased his great chief, said: "We are not unconscious of the fact that the decision which we are obliged to make * * * attributes to our late lamented President the unlawful exercise of power, and, therefore, implies a certain degree of censure. * * If he exercised a power not given by the Constitution, he undoubtedly did so under a free conviction of its necessity in the extraordinary emergencies wherein he was called to act, but neither our honor for his memory nor our confidence in his honesty can be permitted to sway our judgment here. * * If, when our convictions are clear, we should hesitate to declare them without reference to what party it may please or what offend, we should betray the solemn trust which the people have committed to this Court and solemn trust which the people have committed to this Court and bring dishonor on the administration of justice."

The history of the Supreme Court shows that a court, the majority of which were appointed by Democratic Presidents, have decided against the wishes of the Democratic Party, while others where the majority were appointed by Republican Presidents, have decided against the wishes of the Republican Party. This is the one body in political America that is not influenced by partisan grounds. In fact it refuses to take jurisdiction of purely political issues and confines itself to judicial guestions. This has partisan grounds. In fact it refuses to take jurisdiction of purely political issues and confines itself to judicial questions. This has been true from the beginning. In the Constitutional Convention the proposal to give the Court a veto power with the President was four times rejected because that would have made it a quasilegislative body involving a political function instead of a purely judicial body limited to judicial functions.

The Court, therefore, does not reflect a political angle and does not raise the question of the goodness or badness of a law. In fact, it does not consider the merits at all. It leaves that to the Congress and to the people. Justice Roberts, in the recent decision upon the A. A. A. case, admirably stated the province of the Court: "There should be no misunderstanding of the function of this Court in such a case. It is sometimes said that the Court assumes the power to overrule or control the action of the people's assumes the power to overrule or control the action of the people's assumes the power to overrule or control the action of the people's representatives. This is a misconception. The Constitution is the supreme law of the people. All legislation must conform to the principles it lays down. When an act of Congress is appropriately challenged in the courts as not conforming to the constitutional mandate, the judicial branch of the Government has only one duty—to lay the article of the Constitution which is invoked beside the statute which is challenged, and to decide whether the latter squares with the former. All the Court does or can do is to announce its considered judgment upon the question. The only power it has, if such it may be called, is the power of judgment. This Court neither approves nor condemns any legislative policy. Its delicate and difficult office is to ascertain and declare whether the legislation is in accordance with or in contravention of the provisions of the Constitution; and having done that, its duty

Our history presents no other institution existing in the midst of turmoil and confusion arising out of bitter partisan strife and controversy whose duty is to render impartial judgment that has controversy whose duty is to render impartial judgment that has proceeded as free from political bias to build up a body of precedents dealing with rights under the law, made in pursuance of the Constitution, throughout the period of our national life, as has the Supreme Court of the United States. Its freedom from undue influence without regard to possible consequences is notable. Big business, designated by high authority as "entrenched wealth", has experienced the Court's freedom of powerful influence in such cases as the railroad rate case, the antitrust case, the Adamson law and numerous other cases in which great financial interests were involved.

Labor in its collective influence has likewise experienced the im-

Labor in its collective influence has likewise experienced the impotence of numbers to dictate decisions such as the numerous cases construing the Clayton and Sherman Acts, as well as other cases construing the Clayton and Sherman Acts, as well as other enactments involving the general principles of law, the several cases testing the constitutionality of both Federal and State laws. An analysis of about 100 such cases, one-fifth of which were invalidated, while the decisions of four-fifths were favorable to labor, shows the tendency to criticize the Court for the few adverse decisions rather than commend it for the large number favorable. However, criticism for or against, either of labor or of capital, power entered the decision of access, either of labor or of restrictions rather than commend it for the large humber favorable. However, criticism for or against, either of labor or of capital, never entered the decision of a case.

The Court finds against the N. R. A. by unanimous decision, with no reference to the New Deal interest, nor any anticipated dictum of the "horse and buggy" indictment. The same Court finds against the A. A. A. without taking care to consider the wishes of the proponents of a new philosophy, or time to count the number of farmers' votes that might be involved. It found against the original child-labor law in spite of the wide and militant interest of the women of America. The politician's basis of decision does not reach these chambers. History will pronounce this irresponsiveness to public clamor as the most important fact in the evolution of the Court. And yet, that fact is the one basis for the present attack upon the Supreme Court.

This opposition comes from many sources. There is the advocate of direct legislation, which is responsible for the initiative and referendum in the various States. This class, not insignificant in number, resents the suggestion that an appointive court be permitted to set aside an act of legislation. The second class, while it believes in representative government, would make the legislative body, which is responsive to the people, supreme. The third class believes in the coordination of independent departments, and denies the power of the judicial to invalidate the acts of the legislative department. Even though a highly controverted proposal, after an exhaustive discussion, or on the other hand a proposal of small interest with little concern should become a law by a majority of but one vote in House and Senate or both these advocates of curbing the Court declare otherwise, the independence of the departments is destroyed.

This opposition seems to be based upon error. The three departments under the Constitution are not independent of each pendence of the departments is destroyed.

This opposition seems to be based upon error. The three departments under the Constitution are not independent of each other in organization, but interdependent, as each has a check upon the other. The legislative is dependent upon the executive for signing or vetoing bills, enforcement of laws; and upon the judicial for interpretation of laws. The executive depends upon the legislative for financial support, removal by impeachment, confirmation or rejection of appointments, and treaties; and upon the judicial for setting aside unconstitutional acts. The judicial department is subject to the legislative and executive departments for its constitution, its financial support, and removal from office by impeachment.

partments for its constitution, its financial support, and removal from office by impeachment.

But in the exercise of the function of each, it is essential that freedom from interference by others must be assured. Each performs its duty within the Constitution, without the necessity of consulting with the others. As Congress does not, and should not, confer with the Court upon legislation, so the Court does not and should not confer with Congress upon interpretation. If the Court declared that Congress could not or should not enact laws short of a two-thirds or unanimous vote without first consulting the Court, Congress would ignore it as beyond the powers of the Court under the Constitution. So, likewise, if Congress enacts a law forbidding the Court, short of a unanimous or two-thirds vote, to declare void an act not within the Constitution, the Court would declare such law unconstitutional and void. Such drastic change could come only through the channel of constitutional amendment by the people. Such amendment would involve serious results growing out of minority control.

Suppose the N. R. A. had succeeded in its efforts to secure and enforce a code law to govern the press of the country. A unanimous requirement for Court review would make it law, though mous requirement for Court review would make it law, though eight of the nine judges declared it unconstitutional, giving to eight judges less power than to one whose vote was controlling. Such rulings would destroy the faith of our people in the institutions of government, and tend to the break-down of the law of the land.

Suppose upon some issue on which the Nation is keenly divided, such as the fugitive slave law of 1850, an antilynching law, the prohibition legislation, the resolution to join the League of Nations, or the adoption of the New Deal philosophy, and one or all of these reach the Supreme Court, where a unanimous vote is necessary, under the proposals to curb the Court, to declare a law unconstitutional, what effect upon the public mind would a rule have where the vote of one judge could overbalance the votes of eight judges? In which case the New Deal philosophy could be thrust upon the country by one vote of the Court against eight.

This criticism of the Court, it is alleged by the critics, is justified upon the ground that they are following, in this regard, Jackson and Lincoln. This is an error. Roger B. Taney, the Chief Justice appointed by Jackson, denies the charge against Jackson. He declared: "No intelligent man who reads the message can misunderstand the President". can misunderstand the President", referring to the charge that Jackson felt not bound to carry out a decision of the Court that the law is unconstitutional, if he believed it constitutional. Taney continued: "It is true that he may very probably yield up his preconceived opinion in deference to that of the Court, because it is the tribunal especially constituted to decide questions in all cases wherein it may arise, and from its organization and character is peculiarly fitted for such inquiries."

As to Lincoln's attitude on the Court, his utterances are the best evidence.

In 1856, a year before the Dred Scott decision, he said at Free-port, Ill.: "I grant you that an unconstitutional act is not law; but I do not ask and will not take your construction of the Con-stitution. The Supreme Court of the United States is the tribut I do not ask and will not take your construction of the Constitution. The Supreme Court of the United States is the tribunal to decide such questions, and we will submit to its decisions." Whatever influence the manner in which the Dred Scott decision was delayed until after the election had upon Lincoln, who had denounced the delay, his position on the Court's decisions was fully and clearly stated in his address at Springfield, Ill., June 26, 1857, when the public mind was at the height of excitement. He said: "We think its (Court) decisions on constitutional questions, when fully settled, should not only control the particular questions decided, but the general policy of the country subject to be disturbed only by amendments to the Constitution as provided in that instrument itself. More than this would be revolution." He added, "But we think the Dred Scott decision is erroneous. We know that the Court that made it has often overruled its own decisions, and we shall do what we can to overrule this. We offer no resistance to it." [In the first inaugural.] After declaring that the Court's decision must be binding in any case, he continued: "And while it is obviously possible that such decision may be erroneous in any given case, still the evil effect following it being limited to that particular case with the chance that it may be overridden and never become a precedent for other cases can better be borne than could the evils of the chance that it may be overridden and never become a precedent for other cases can better be borne than could the evils of a different practice." So spoke Lincoln, who has been quoted by advocates to curb the Supreme Court. Even in the campaign when public excitement was whipped into fury over the Dred Scott decision, he said we will not resist it. When he took the oath as President, he said an erroneous decision could better be borne than the evils of a different practice.

Whether the assaults against the Court are to deny the authority to invalidate an unconstitutional law, or merely to curb the Court was minority rule limiting the nower to decigne a law

Court by a minority rule, limiting the power, to declare a law unconstitutional, to a two-thirds vote or a unanimous decision, it would in either case be fatal, in that it would make Congress supreme. These advocates demand that the makers of illegal laws must be the interpreters of the legality of their own acts, a violation of the most elemental principle of a judicial system. In that light, suppose Congress should enact laws denying one or all of the rights specified in the Bill of Rights. Suppose it denies the freedom of speech, or the freedom of the press, or of religion; suppose it denies trial by jury, or the right to have counsel. Suppose it allows property to be taken without due process of law. Suppose it authorizes unreasonable search or seizure, or compels a citizen to be twice placed in jeopardy of life and limb. Suppose it denies all of these rights. Is the citizen to be refused his constitutional right specified in the Bill of Rights to take his case to a tribunal? That tribunal which interprets law under the Constitution which is the supreme law of the land? Is it proposed to deny him the authority of protection of his rights prescribed in the expressed words of the Constitution? That is the issue which the New Deal is about to submit to the American people. This attitude is in sharp contrast with the judgment of the historian: "The establishment of the Supreme Court of the United States was the crowning marvel of the wonders wrought by the statesmanship of America. The creation of the Supreme Court with its appellant powers was the greatest conception of the Constitution. No product of government, either here or elsewhere, has ever approached it in grandeur. Amid the din of conflict, between personal interests, and above the deep-mouthed thunder of the combat, between contending sovereignties, the calm tones of our great tribunal have been distinctively heard, commanding States as well as citizens to submit without the spilling of blood to a legal settlement of differences. In this respect the

KEYNOTE ADDRESS AT THE REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION OF VIRGINIA

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Mr. T. X. Parsons, of Roanoke, Va., before the Virginia Republican convention on the 11th instant.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

printed in the Record, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the convention, I first want to extend to you a few words of greeting and welcome from the Republicans of the city of Roanoke. We regard ourselves as extremely fortunate in having this opportunity to entertain what is perhaps the largest Republican convention that has ever been held in Virginia. We have long regarded Roanoke city as the Republican capital of Virginia, and we sincerely hope your stay with us will be a pleasant one, and that we will, at an early date, have an opportunity of again welcoming the Republicans from the various sections of the State to our city.

In beginning this speech I fully realize my limitations, and I believe that you appreciate the difficulties which face any speaker who undertakes to define the issues and principles on which our party should stand in the coming election.

During the past 3 years we have witnessed an almost unbelievable spectacle. It is doubtful if there is a person in the country outside of the inner circle of the so-called "brain trust" who would have dared predict what has taken place since the inauguration of Mr. Roosevelt in March 1933.

Roosevelt in March 1933.

It is unquestionably true that millions of citizens cast their votes for the Democratic nominee in 1932 without an inkling, or even the slightest intimation, of what the nominee of the Democratic Party intended to do once he assumed the roles of his office.

SOME OF PLEDGES

Some 23,000,000 people cast their votes for Mr. Roosevelt after he had solemnly promised to drastically reduce the cost of government—to abolish useless bureaus and offices, to take government ment—to abolish useless bureaus and offices, to take government out of business, to do away with the policies of restricting agricultural production, which had made some slight headway prior to his inauguration; to impartially enforce the antitrust laws, so as to prevent monopoly and unfair trade practices and to preserve a sound currency at all hazards.

And never in the history of our political parties has a candidate so unqualifiedly adopted the platform of this party as did Mr. Roosevelt during the summer and fall of 1932. Time and again he emphasized the fact that the platform of the party would be strictly adhered to and that he regarded it as a solemn covenant with the people. He specifically called attention to the fact be strictly adhered to and that he regarded it as a solemn covenant with the people. He specifically called attention to the fact that it had been the practice in the past for candidates for office to disregard the platform on which they were elected, once they had assumed their duties; and in 1932 he went so far as to publicly declare that before any man could enter his Cabinet he must first pledge absolute loyalty to the Democratic platform and especially the economy plank, and, second, he must pledge his complete cooperation with the President looking to economy and the reorganization of his department.

It would be interesting to know what Mr. Ickes and Mr. Wallace would say if they were now confronted with this statement.

TWO CHIEF PLANKS

Two of the outstanding planks in the Democratic platform, on which Mr. Roosevelt polled almost 23,000,000 votes, read as follows:

"An immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government; and we call upon the Democratic Party in the States to make a zealous effort to achieve a proportionate result.

"2. Maintenance of the national credit by a Federal Budget annually balanced on the basis of accurate executive estimates within revenues, raised by a system of taxation levied on the principle of ability to pay."

In discussing the economy plank in the platform, Mr. Roosevelt, in Pittsburgh, on October 29, 1932, said:

"I shall carry out the plain precept of our party, which is to reduce the cost of the current Federal Government operations by 25 percent. Of course, that means a complete realinement of the unprecedented bureaucracy that has assembled in Washington in the last 4 years."

In the same connection, at Sioux City, Iowa, on September 29,

"I accuse the present administration of being the greatest spending administration in peacetimes in all our history, and which has piled bureau on bureau, commission on commission, and has failed to anticipate the dire needs of reduced earning and has failed to anticipate the dire needs of reduced earning power of our people."

Merely to repeat the platform and some of Mr. Roosevelt's declarations during his candidacy for the Presidency, strikingly illustrates the manner in which, not only the country, but his own party has been betrayed. It seems hardly necessary to recount the many ways in which the platform has been violated, and the solemn promises of the candidate have been shamelessly disregarded. Instead of reducing the cost of Government by 25 percent, it has more than doubled in the short period of 3 years; instead of eliminating deficits, as he promised to do, we are facing the greatest deficit ever incurred by any government since the the greatest deficit ever incurred by any government since the beginning of recorded history, except during war times.

BUREAUS INCREASED

Instead of eliminating useless bureaus and commissions, they have been increased to such an extent that it is hardly an exaggeration to say that probably not a person in the Nation knows how many there are, or what they are for.

Instead of cutting down the pay roll, almost countless thousands have been added thereto, until it is estimated that at this time there are almost 9,000,000 people on the pay roll of the Federal Government, not counting the millions who are on relief.

Contrasted with the 23,000,000 votes received by Mr. Roosevelt, the Socialist candidate for the Presidency, Mr. Norman Thomas, received less than 1,000,000 votes, and yet an examination of the actions of the administration reveals the startling fact that the first 12 planks in the Socialist platform, upon which Mr. Thomas received 900,000 votes, have been put into effect almost word for word by this administration, and in calling attention to this fact, word by this administration, and in caring attention to this late, I am not doing so merely for the purpose of criticizing the philosophy of the Socialistic Party.

I hope the time will never come when American citizens may not cast their vote for the party of their choice—whether it be the Republican, the Democratic, the Socialistic, or any other party.

But I do condemn, and I think all right-thinking citizens should condemn the putting into practice of the policies of the Socialistic.

condemn, the putting into practice of the policies of the Socialist Party, until the people have, by a majority of votes cast, elected a Socialist President, running on a Socialist platform. The stunning betrayal of the Democratic Party—the oldest political party in this Nation, by the so-called New Dealers, has called forth not one word of excuse or explanation from Mr. Roosevelt or any of his subordinates his subordinates.

SPENDING BILLIONS

I think it fair to say that not a single citizen in the United States cast his vote for the N. R. A., the A. A. A., the N. Y. A., the T. V. A., and other alphabetical combinations which are spending billions of dollars of the hard-earned money and savings of the American people. No one even dreamed of the fact that an ex-American people. No one even dreamed of the lact that an ex-Army officer would be given the authority to promulgate 10,000 pages of laws—many of which provided fines and imprisonments for their violation. Not a farmer in the United States cast his vote for an agricultural policy which resulted in the destruction of 6,000,000 pigs; the taking out of cultivation of millions of acres of land, and the destruction of untold amounts of wheat and cotton.

Who, in 1932, ever imagined that in the short period of 3 years this country, long regarded as the granary of the world, would be annually importing hundreds of millions of dollars worth of foodstuff. Think of it, and at the same time, we spent a billion dollars to restrict the production of our own farm products. The absurdity of the whole agricultural policy is made apparent when it is realized that, when all of this was being done, there were other millions of dollars being spent for the purpose of reclaiming waste and submarginal lands. While the western farmer was plowing under his wheat and the southern planter was destroying his cotton, other agencies of the Federal Government were busy irrigating and reclaiming lands in Tennessee and Washington, and other States throughout the Union. The enormous amount of money that has been wasted is appalling to the millions of people who have struggled a lifetime to

The enormous amount of money that has been wasted is appalling to the millions of people who have struggled a lifetime to save a few hundred dollars to care for them in their old age.

Hardly giving the matter a second thought, the administration embarked on an undertaking in Florida which will eventually cost the taxpayers $200,000,000, building a canal from the Atlantic Ocean to the Gulf of Mexico. When this undertaking was started, every competent engineer who had made a study of it, condemned it as being impracticable. In Maine $36,000,000 is being spent to harness the tides of the Bay of Fundy, and in Washington, $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 are being spent for the purpose of building what is known as the Grand Coulee Dam, for the purpose of furnishing power in a region where they already have 50 percent more power than can be consumed.

ICKES GREAT SPENDER

ICKES GREAT SPENDER

ICKES GREAT SPENDER

Hardly a project of any consequence has been started that has received the approval of experienced engineers. Even Mr. Ickes, the great spender of the Department of the Interior, turned down a number of them as being wholly impractical. Some of them were so farfetched that no department of the Government would volunteer to undertake their construction, making it necessary to call upon the Army, whose engineers know only how to take orders.

And what have we gotten for all of this enormous expenditure of money? We still have 12,000,000 people walking the streets without employment, if the figures of the American Federation of Labor and the United States Department of Labor can be relied upon. We have over 20,000,000 people drawing relief from the Government, and the end is not in sight.

And we have the New Deal. And what a new deal it has turned out to be. For a moment let us examine its so-called accomplishments.

I suppose its first claim to fame is based on an alleged industrial recovery produced by the National Industrial Recovery Act. An impartial examination of the record fails to substantiate this claim, but on the contrary, the evidence is overwhelming to the effect that it actually hindered rather than helped recovery. It is true that there was a spurt of business and industrial recovery extending from April 1933 to August 1933, but this was under what the New Dealers choose to term the "old order", or what what the New Dealers choose to term the "old order", or what I would refer to as the American economic system. During this period prices of farm products and the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar went up, industrial employment, production, and wages increased, building construction increased, and freight-car loadings increased to a marked extent. All of this, however, was before the blue eagle had even left his nest. The N. R. A. did not go into effect until the latter part of July or the 1st of August, and it certainly had no material effect on business until the early fall. Beginning with September 1933 and continuing until June 1935, there was a decided business reaction throughout the country, and during this period every branch of the New Deal was in full bloom; the N. R. A. had reached its maximum of regimentation and the A. A. A. was putting into practice its theory of destruction as a means of attaining a condition of plenty. During this same time the Government entered into every conceivable field of private enterprise. It abandoned all pretense of attempting to reduce public expenditures, or even to keep them within reasonable bounds. Our sound currency was abandoned, and we began experimenting with the managed dollar.

SECOND RECOVERY

The next period of recovery began immediately after the Supreme Court had unanimously held the N. I. R. A. to be unconstitutional. Despite the fact that Mr. Roosevelt and all of his satellites had Despite the fact that Mr. Roosevelt and all of his satellites had made dire predictions as to what would happen as a result of the N. I. R. A. being held unconstitutional, business continued to pick up, and it is unquestionably true that our present era of recovery dates from May 27, 1935.

One of the outstanding economists of the country—Professor Cox, of the University of Chicago—after making a thorough study of employment, wages, and hours of labor as affected by the N. R. A., reported as follows:

"The Amonth drap which followed the introduction of the

"The 4-month drop which followed the introduction of the N. I. R. A. has never been equaled except in the panic collapses of 1893 and 1907. On the other hand, the advances which followed the United States Supreme Court decision against the N. I. R. A. is the broadest and most sustained rise to recovery to date.'

So much for the N. R. A. I suppose it is fair to say that the Agricultural Adjustment Act is the second accomplishment in the order of the importance of the new order. It was passed in the late summer of 1933, and had little, if any, effect on the crops produced and harvested in that year. And what has it accomplished in the short period of 2½ years? Assuming for the sake of argument that it has brought about a rise in the price of farm products, although most economists assert that the rise would have occurred as a consequence of the general improvement in business conditions regardless of the Triple A. But be that as it may, here is what has happened to agriculture, in the Nation that was at one time known as the to agriculture, in the Nation that was at one time known as the granary of the world. In 1933 we had an exportable surplus of 53,000,000 bushels of wheat, and imported none. In 1935 we had no exportable surplus, and imported 28,000,000 bushels. In 1933 we had an exportable surplus of 144,000,000 bushels of corn, and imported none. In 1935 we had no exportable surplus, and imported 34,000,000 bushels. In 1933 we had an exportable surplus of 1,800,000 bushels of rye, and imported none. In 1935 we had no exportable surplus, and imported 12,000,000 bushels. In 1933 we had an exportable surplus of 675,000,000 pounds of lard, and imported none. In 1935 we had no exportable surplus, and imported 12,000,000 pounds. In 1933 we had an exportable surplus of 300,000,000 pounds of pork, and imported none. In 1935 we had no exportable surplus of 300,000,000 pounds of pork, and imported 6,000,000 pounds.

MARKET DESTROYED

Thus 2½ years of the Triple A has not only destroyed our export market, but it has placed agriculture in such a position that it cannot supply the home demand, and it has cost us a billion dol-lars to bring this about. And who got the money. The average benefit payment throughout the United States has been something benefit payment throughout the United States has been something like $140 per person. But some of our citizens and corporations, and some foreign citizens and corporations, were much more fortunate. Senator Vandenberg recently called on Mr. Wallace to make a list of all persons who received more than $10,000 under the Triple A. He at first demurred, contending that it would require the undivided attention of the entire comptroller division for about 6 weeks. The Comptroller, however, who has a staff of 4,500, states that the list could be compiled by 10 operators working 17 days. Finally, however, a few figures were reluctantly given ing 17 days. Finally, however, a few figures were reluctantly given out. And this is what a startled country learned. One farmer out. And this is what a startled country learned. One farmer received $219,000 for not raising 14,000 hogs, and one cotton planter received $168,000 for not planting 7,000 acres of cotton. And on Wednesday of this week we received the very interesting news through the press that a British concern had received a Government check for $200,000 for restricting its cotton crop on some land which it owned in Mississippi.

And that isn't all. It has now developed that a New York bank financially interested in a Puerto Rican sugar property had received a benefit check in the sum of $705,000, while another Puerto Rican sugar company had received $961,000 for restricting its planting of sugarcane. I suppose these figures probably come under the head of the "More abundant life."

AGRICULTURAL TARIFFS

And here is some more of the "more abundant life." The tariff on agricultural products is necessarily closely linked with any agricultural policy which might be adopted. And Mr. KNUTSON recently stated in Congress that under what is known as the Cuban trade agreement, whereby the tariff on sugar was reduced from 2 cents per pound to nine-tenths of a cent per pound, the Cuban sugar interests, which are largely owned by National City Bank, the Chase National Bank, and Vincent Astor—the latter being a very dear friend of the President—received an outright annual gift of $42,000,000, and, in addition to this outright gift, the Cuban crowd raised the price of sugar 1 cent per pound, which amounted to an additional profit to this same group of $15,000,000 per year, or a grand total of $57,000,000. While all of this was going on, the President and all of his satellites were shedding tears for the "common man" and the "forgotten man", and the Government was spending money to restrict the production of beet sugar. And here is some more of the "more abundant life." The tariff

The next in order for which the New Deal claims credit comes the question of relief, which I shall now deal with briefly.

One of the most appalling aspects of the whole relief situation is the enormous increase in the cost of administering relief. During the last year of the Hoover administration a total of a little over $1,000,000,000 was spent on relief, and, if the prophets of the new order are to be believed, there was more unemployment then than there is now. And yet the last Congress appropriated $4,880,000,000 for the relief of the unemployed. What is the answer? Undoubtedly a great part of the increase is due to the fact that the administration has been more interested in building up a political machine than it has in relieving suffering. During the Hoover administration relief was administered almost entirely by local volunteer agencies, with only a scant 250 Federal emup a political machine than it has in relieving suffering. During the Hoover administration relief was administered almost entirely by local volunteer agencies, with only a scant 250 Federal employees, whose principal duty was to distribute the money to the various States and localities. Now we have a stupendous bureau, employing 140,000 people, a great majority of whom are not familiar with the location in which they work and are, therefore, not familiar with the needs and the problems of the beneficiaries of this relief. It is to the lasting credit of the Hoover administration that politics was completely eliminated from the work of administering relief. And, although during the latter part of the administration the Government had many new emergency tasks, the total number of all Government officials decreased by more than 10,000. All of us remember how it was handled in Virginia. The money was loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and it was placed directly in the hands of State and local officials, a great majority of whom were members of the opposite political party. Until this administration came into power, no one had ever claimed that a party was entitled to votes because of what it did to relieve persons in need and distress. The very idea was repugnant to every decent sense of Americanism.

But all of this was forgotten after March 4, 1933. The whole relief work was promptly centralized in Washington, and a paid bureaucracy was spread over the land, the result being too well known to merit further comment.

To illustrate what has happened let me read you a few figures known to merit further comment. To illustrate what has happened, let me read you a few figures that strikingly show how relief funds have been diverted from the needy into the pockets of machine-picked politicians, who make up the West Virginia relief organization:

And now, having considered some of the alleged accomplishments of the New Deal, let us see what it has cost us.

THRIFT DISAPPEARS

Besides the billions of dollars which have been thrown to the Besides the billions of dollars which have been thrown to the winds, we have lost something else which it will take generations to regain. The habit of thrift, taught most of us from childhood, is about to disappear from our national life. Our very system of constitutional government is in grave danger of extinction, and precious rights which have been established by centuries of suffering and sacrifice are threatened. In the short period of 150 years this Nation has grown from a few straggling Colonies, scattered along the Atlantic seaboard, to the position which it now occupies, as one of the greatest, if not the greatest nation, the world has ever known.

Certainly, under this system of government, a greater number

Certainly, under this system of government, a greater number of people have, for a greater length of time, enjoyed more pros-perity and more liberty than any government of which there is any record.

Class has been arrayed against class on a scale never before dreamed of in this country. The President of the United States has indirectly encouraged this, and a number of his subordinates— Hopkins, Tugwell, and Wallace—have openly advocated it. The dual weapons of fear and intimidation have been used unceasingly by the leaders of the administration to accomplish their

The civil service has been dealt a blow, the effects of which will be felt for half a century, and the land has been overrun with Government agents, many of whom don't know themselves for what they are employed. We are paying out hard-earned American dollars to people engaged in counting caterpillars and pulling jimsonweed. We are hiring people to teach esthetic dancing and paying for it in taxes collected from the American people. We are spending the Government's money on polo fields in Pennsylvania and in the sprinkling of golf courses in Florida. And last, but not least, this administration, striking at the very roots of our constitutional government, has seriously endangered our most precious liberties. most precious liberties

LIBERTIES IN JEOPARDY

The administration supporters seek to make light of the charge that the fundamental liberties of the people are in jeopardy; and, in attempting to answer this charge, they ask the question, "In what way have the people's liberties been jeopardized?" Let's not be misled in this respect, and let's not be deceived by false promises. The individual rights and liberties of the people have been destroyed since time immemorial in the same manner and by the same methods that are now being practiced by the leaders of the New Deal. The approach is always the same. Using an emergency as an excuse, a beginning in this direction is made, and, before the people realize what is taking place, our most cherished liberties are gone forever. We can easily, in a short space of 4 years, surrender rights which have taken 700 years of sacrifice and suffering to establish. A number of these rights are so commonplace that they are taken for granted; some of them which are today treated so lightly have been produced through the blood and the lives of thousands of men and women. Most of them are guaranteed to us today in the first 10 amendments to the Constitution, commonly called the Bill of Rights. We are frequently assured by the prophets of the new order that no attempt will be made to deprive the citizens of this country of their individual rights and liberties, but I say to you that if this administration will disregard one provision of the Constitution it will disregard another.

In the past 2 weeks we have witnessed a committee of the United.

another.

In the past 2 weeks we have witnessed a committee of the United States Senate flagrantly violating the fourth amendment to the Constitution, which guarantees to every individual protection against unreasonable search and seizure. It will probably be difficult to engender much sympathy for the persons and corporations now being investigated by this committee, but if the private papers and telegrams of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. can be seized without warrant of law, then your papers and my papers are no longer protected from the prying eyes of any congressional committee that might desire to seize them; and a man's home—which, for over 400 years, in all English-speaking countries, has been regarded as his castle—can be searched by officers of the law with utter impunity. with utter impunity.

OTHER RIGHTS

If this amendment to the Constitution can thus be destroyed. the administration can just as easily disregard the provision of the Constitution which guarantees to every citizen the right of trial by jury, and throw into the discard that provision of the Constitution which guarantees the freedom of the press. When this happens, our cherished liberties are gone forever.

Is there danger of this coming to pass? Our opponents say "No." Let us see what the President has to say in this connection. In his recent political broadcast in the halls of Congress, sometimes facetiously referred to as his speech on the state of the Nation—the latter being a duty imposed on him by law, Mr. Roosevelt said:

"They realize that in 34 months we have built up a new instru-

"They realize that in 34 months we have built up a new instrument of public power. In the hands of a people's Government this power is wholesome and proper. But in the hands of political puppets of an economic autocracy such a power would provide shackles for the liberties of the people."

Think of the implications contained in this statement. The President admits that during his administration there has been established the very thing that the Constitution was set up to guard against. This generation would not be true to its trust if it willingly, and without a struggle, surrendered their rights and liberties, regardless of the inducements held out by those in power. The least we can do is preserve what our ancestors bled and gave their lives for. The Constitution of the United States is the only written instrument in existence today guaranteeing to any citizen individual liberty. It must not be destroyed for the sake of temporary gain.

The least we can do is that which every President, from Washington to Roosevelt, has sworn to do—preserve, protect, and de-

THE SUPREME COURT

Closely related to the attacks which have been made on the Constitution are those aimed at the Supreme Court, and I wish to say at this point that every real American should thank his God for the Supreme Court of the United States.

God for the Supreme Court of the United States. An effort has recently been made to convince the people that the Supreme Court has no authority to declare a law of the United the Supreme Court has no authority to declare a law of the United States unconstitutional. Such a position is wholly untenable. It has been a well-recognized fact in every country which has ever had a written constitution that the constitution was the supreme law of the land and that any law passed by any legislative body in conflict therewith was null and void. This was recognized in America long before the Constitution was ever adopted. Hundreds of laws passed by the colonial legislatures and the Houses of Burgesses were held to be void and of no effect because they were in conflict with the charters of the various Colonies. This of Burgesses were held to be void and of no effect because they were in conflict with the charters of the various Colonies. This right has been recognized by every Justice who has ever sat on the Supreme Court bench, whether he be Democrat or Republican. To hold otherwise would be to nullify the Constitution itself.

One of the objects, and I might say the main object, of the Constitution is that it guarantees to the citizens certain inalienable rights which cannot be taken away from them by any body or group of citizens, whether they be executive, legislative, or judicial. I don't mean to say that the Supreme Court is sacred or that it should not be subject to criticism, but I do say in all sincerity that once that Court has placed its construction upon a law declaring it either constitutional or unconstitutional, that a law, declaring it either constitutional or unconstitutional, that then that construction becomes the law of the land, and it becomes the duty of every law-abiding citizen to abide by the decision.

HUMAN RIGHTS

It has been charged that the Supreme Court and the Constitution protect property rights as distinguished from human rights.
This charge is not true. The Constitution does protect property tution protect property rights as distinguished from human rights. This charge is not true. The Constitution does protect property rights, but it also protects human rights. In what other country of the world do the people enjoy free speech or a free press? Religious liberty—the right of trial by jury—and personal liberty—to the same extent as we enjoy it in this country, and they enjoy these rights, not because some benevolent ruler is kind enough to bestow them upon us, but because of a written Constitution which in plain words says that these rights shall not be abridged. And with reference to property rights, is not the right to acquire, own, and enjoy property a part of human rights? When the framers of our Constitution made property rights secure they also added immeasurably to human rights and to human liberty. If the Constitution is to be preserved we must also preserve the Supreme Court. It has been the refuge of both the low and the high from the very beginning of the Nation—whether it has been an ignorant and condemned Negro, charged with the most heinous crime, or the combined prestige of Congress and the Executive, exerting powers beyond the terms of the Conwith the most heinous crime, or the combined prestige of Congress and the Executive, exerting powers beyond the terms of the Constitution, the Supreme Court has been a tribunal to which a citizen, in his last appeal, has gone for that protection given him by the terms of the Constitution.

And now, just a word about the "old order", which the New Dealers profess to despise and hold in contempt. And in defending it, I make no contention that it is perfect or that reform and change is not advisable. I do think it well, however, to recall a few facts which we should think over carefully before deciding to discard the old for the new. In 1933, before the New Dealers had gotten started, our accomplishments were the marvel of the rest of the civilized world. Let me briefly call your attention to some statistics, which most strikingly illustrate what we had done before Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Tugwell, Mr. Ickes, Mr. Wallace, and Mr. Frankfurter appeared on the scene. All of these figures are matters of record and cannot be disputed:

PROGRESS IN PAST

With only 7 percent of the world's population we own 76 percent of the automobiles, 58 percent of the world's telephones, 32 percent of the railroads, and 36 percent of the developed water power; in 1933 this country spent three billions for education, more than all the rest of the world combined. We produced 60 percent of the world's supply of oil, 48 percent of the copper, 47 percent of the steel, and 58 percent of the corn. The people in America enjoy the highest standard of living in the world and consume one-half of the world's coffee, one-half of its rubber, one-half of its sugar, three-fourths of its silk, and two-thirds of its petroleum products. This country leads the world in the number of farmers who own their farms, the number of people who own their homes, the number and amount of savings accounts and the amount of ordinary their farms, the number of people who own their homes, the number and amount of savings accounts and the amount of ordinary life insurance in force. In the face of all this evidence, is it not a little ridiculous to insist that we need a new form of government and that the old system is worn out?

And to take the place of the system of government under which all of this has been accomplished we are asked to place our stamp of approval upon an administration which, without excuse or explanation, has violated its most solemn promises. We are asked to return to power an administration that has increased our national debt by over $10,000,000,000 and has in a period of 3 years, spent debt by over $10,000,000,000 and has in a period of 3 years, spent more money than has been spent by the Federal Government in the first 124 years of its existence.

We are asked to place our stamp of approval on a socialistic and a near-communistic policy, for which no one has ever cast his vote. We are asked to vote for a system of government which was bitterly described by Senator Glass of Virginia in the following words:

"The whole New Deal is not only a mistake, but it is a disgrace to the Nation, and the time is not far distant when we shall be ashamed of having wandered so far from the dictates of commonsense and of common honesty."

A PROPOSED PROGRAM

Critics of the New Deal are frequently asked what they would do and what they would propose to take the place of the New Deal.

In the first place the American electorate would be fully justified in turning out the present administration if no program of any kind was offered to take the place of the conglomeration of conflicting and contradictory laws which have been put on the statute books during the past 3 years.

If a person sees another about to run his outerally.

books during the past 3 years.

If a person sees another about to run his automobile over a cliff, he would not wait to warn the driver of another route he might take before calling his attention to the danger ahead. And to illustrate the point further—if you saw a child sawing up the furniture in your home, it would not be incumbent upon you to give him something else to saw on before you ordered him to stop destroying your furniture. However, a program will be offered the American people in the platform to be adopted in Cleveland, and I venture to say it will be a constructive one of which the great body of the American people will approve. Without attempting to forecast what the platform will be or what the platform to be adopted by this convention will contain. I will platform to be adopted by this convention will contain, I will venture to make a few suggestions, many of which were made by our distinguished fellow citizen, Col. Henry W. Anderson, in an address recently made at Richmond, Va., before the State committee and the State executive committee.

In the first place, we should wholly repudiate the entire social and economic theories of the New Deal; we should pledge ourselves to stop the concentration of power in the bureaucracy at Washington and to restore the American system of Federal Government based upon a constitutional union of independent States. The expenditures of the Federal Government should be and must be radically reduced. The hundreds of thousands of politicians who, without any regard to their fitness, have been given "boonwho, without any regard to their fitness, have been given boon-doggling" jobs within the past 2 years should be removed from the Federal pay roll. We should pledge ourselves to stop tampering with the currency and to place the fiscal affairs of the Government upon a sound basis. We should take constructive action ernment upon a sound basis. We should take constructive action to bring about economic equality between agriculture and industry, not by destroying wealth and reducing the supply of food and necessities, with resulting increase in the cost of living, but by the legitimate aid and diversification of farm activities and the development of our domestic and export markets. And in this connection we should stand foursquare for a tariff sufficiently high to protect all products which can be produced within the bounds of the United States.

ABOLISH MACHINE

We should immediately abolish the political machine which has been established for the purpose of administering relief throughout the Nation. I sincerely believe that if this were done, and the question of relief was turned back to the localities and the States, with the Federal Government providing the necessary financial assistance, not only would the cost of relief be cut in half but the beneficiaries thereof would be far better taken care of then they have been under the present system than they have been under the present system.

We should pledge ourselves to a sane and progressive policy with spect to social security, such as pensions and unemployment insurance insurance. We should pledge ourselves to protect the right of labor, in industry which is subject to Federal jurisdiction, to bargain collectively through agencies of its choice, and, finally, we should pledge ourselves to reestablish the principle which lies at the base of our entire constitutional system, that the Government, and those who conduct it, are agents and servants, not masters of the

We should unqualifiedly declare ourselves in favor of the complete separation and the complete independence each of the other of the three great divisions of our Government—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. We should affirm our faith in the Supreme Court and in the Constitution of the United States.

CONCLUSION

Supreme Court and in the Constitution of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The issues are clear-cut. The Republican Party should, with courage and without compromise, clearly place them before the American people. We have two roads to travel—one lies in the direction of constitutional government, and the other in the direction of dictatorship. In the last 3 years we have trod the same path by which 40,000,000 Italians, 66,000,000 Germans, and 180,000,000 Russians lost their liberty. It is idle to hope for a change in direction if the present administration is returned to power. We have learned, by bitter experience, that their promises cannot be relied upon. If Mr. Roosevelt is elected in November of this year, he will be justified in concluding that the American people have placed their stamp of approval upon what he has done, and he will naturally take his reelection as a mandate to continue on the road we are now traveling. By his reelection we will ratify the action of Congress in abdicating its constitutional powers to the Executive, and we will thus have taken a long step toward that absolute form of government against which English-speaking people have struggled for a thousand years. Our liberties will be lost in identically the same manner by which they have been lost in all of the other great democracles of the world since the early days of the Roman Republic. The first Caesar rose to power as a popular idol, as a representative of the "common people"; Napoleon gained his mastery first over France and then over Europe from a small and popular beginning as the "armed soldier of democracy"; Lenin set up his iron rule under the guise of the "rule of the proletariat"; Mussolini, once a Communist agitator, got his grip upon Italy under the cloak of a popular movement against monarchy; Hitler got his start by his promise to save the common people from their oppressors; and Roosevelt started on the same road by his demagogic appeal on behalf of the "forgotten man."

And now, in conclusion, what can we do: They Roosevert, because he has been sincere and conscientious in what he is trying to do. Our reply is that the sincerity of the President is not an issue in this campaign. The fate of one man is inconsequential, in comparison with the liberty and happiness of 130,000,000 people. Whether or not he has been sincere and conscientious in what he has done, is utterly immaterial. The sole question for the American people to decide is whether or not they are in favor of a continuation of his policies. continuation of his policies.

If the Republican Party voluntarily surrenders and refuses to fight to preserve what has been handed down to us by our ancestors, then we do not deserve the victory, and we should pass from the political stage, and let another party take our place. But I have too much faith in this great party of ours to believe for a moment that such a thing is going to happen. The Republican Party should, and I believe will, lead the way. It is the only instrumentality through which opposition to the New Deal can be made effective.

If we come out boldly for the right as we see it, without fear or compromise, and stand on the Constitution, victory assuredly will be ours. Let's make this fight without any hope or thought of selfish gain. Let us enter this battle, not for the sake of the Republican Party, and not for the purpose of destroying the Democratic Party, but for the purpose of saving America.

THE GULF-ATLANTIC SHIP CANAL ACROSS FLORIDA

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two editorials relating to the Gulf-Atlantic ship canal across Florida. One editorial is from the Winter Park Herald and the other from the Ocala Morning Banner.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Winter Park (Fla.) Herald of Apr. 17, 1936] MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING

Severe and unjustified criticism has been leveled against Florida's Severe and unjustified criticism has been leveled against Florida's senior Senator, Duncan U. Fletcher, because he has made an earnest and conscientious effort in behalf of the Gulf-Atlantic Ship Canal across Florida. Senator Fletcher has not done this to please any faction in the State. On the contrary, he has supported the project because he believes in its feasibility and that it will not work injury to the water supply of Florida. After exhaustive engineering and geological surveys, expert engineers and geologists in the Federal service have definitely stated that no harm will result, and the War Department Engineers, who are in sole charge of the and the War Department Engineers, who are in sole charge of the project, have stated that full protection will be afforded against any adverse effect upon the water supply of Florida.

Senator Fletcher has done his simple duty in working for a project which he believes will benefit a large portion of this State, just as he has conscientiously worked in the past to secure Federal appropriations for innumerable projects of a public nature in every section of Florida.

To some extent the President has been criticized because he advanced sufficient money from the public-works funds to start the project. His action was undoubtedly taken after careful study of the reports upon the project made by the Army Engineers and other Federal authorities. It was doubtless influenced to some degree by the additional fact that the project was one which would and did give employment to thousands of men over a considerable period of

It is true that Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan, regards the canal unfavorably and, through misunderstanding or misrepresentation, has temporarily checked a congressional appropriation for the project in the Senate. Senator Vandenberg, however, is one of the Republican candidates for President, and he may personally oppose President Roosevelt before the national electorate next November. Therefore his views and statements may be regarded with mild suspicion at least.

Another well-known Floridian who has been the butt of much Another well-known Floridian who has been the butt of much unfair criticism in connection with the project is George B. Hills, of the engineering firm of Hills & Youngberg. Lack of knowledge of the real facts and, probably, the fact that Hills lives in Jacksonville has resulted in his being bitterly criticized in some sections as an active canal proponent who has used his political influence in behalf of the project. His critics have even stated publicly that he has made an engineering survey for the canal, that he influenced the Federal engineers in making a favorable report, and that he had much to do with selecting a route that would carry the big waterway through Jacksonville. The following brief history indicates that there is not an lota of truth in the foregoing, and that Hills has not been involved personally, professionally, nor politically as stated:

The idea of a ship and barge canal across Florida is not new, nor did it originate in Jacksonville. An examination of such a project was first provided for by an act of Congress in March 1826. Again, in 1876, a United States Army officer made a report on a barge canal, and in 1880 the same officer submitted a further report to Congress on the subject. Advocation of a canal across the State in 1876, a United States Army officer made a report on a barge canal, and in 1880 the same officer submitted a further report to Congress on the subject. Advocation of a canal across the State has been practically continuous for the past 10 years. Finally, the Congress passed a river and harbor bill, and President Hoover signed it in July 1930. That bill contained not less than six separate items providing for the examination, by United States Army Engineers, of a waterway from one side of the Florida Peninsula to the other. That act was sponsored in Congress by the Florida delegation and by others from outside of the State. It included one item instructing an investigation by the United States War Department Engineers of a waterway across northern Florida to connect the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway with the proposed Gulf intracoastal waterway by the most practicable route.

Following its universal practice, the War Department called on local interests to submit data for its consideration in the study. As a means of securing the information requested by the War Department, the city of Jacksonville employed Hills and Youngberg, engineers, to make an analysis of the shipping which had moved in the Gulf trade in the latest available year and to determine whether a canal would be of benefit to such shipping. Their report on the subject was submitted in October 1931, during the administration of former President Hoover. It was exclusively an economic study. It was the only report concerning the canal ever made by Hills and Youngberg, and they did not then nor have they at any time since made engineering studies or plans or estimates of cost of the project, nor have they made any recommendation whatsoever as to the route or location of the canal. They did report that the potential benefits as found were sufficient to justify the United States in making a complete physical and economic survey to determine full facts bearing upon the possible construction of the project.

Hills' connection with the project ended with the filing of the re-canal project.

All subsequent studies, including physical surveys, preparation of plans and estimates of cost have been made by Federal agencies and the actual work of planning, locating, and supervising construction of the canal has been under the sole jurisdiction of the United States War Department. It may properly be added that no one, regardless of politics, can cause a favorable decision on any project from the United States War Department Engineers. They report facts as they find them, and that ends it. Incidentally, their investigations are more thorough and comprehensive than can usually be undertaken by State or local authorities for the War Department has available more thorough and comprehensive than can usually be undertaken by State or local authorities, for the War Department has available the funds with which to carry out the mandates of Congress and their work is supported by an extensive background of experience in engineering, geologic and economic research.

The foregoing, which is the result of our careful check, indicates that neither Senator Fletcher nor President Roosevelt has damaged Florida through their consideration of the canal, and that George B. Hills' identification with the project has been limited to the commercial analysis of Gulf trade shipping made by his firm in 1931.

If the canal opposition must put a finger on someone, let it be placed upon the War Department for reporting the project favorably after its searching investigation and studies. But then the War Department does things like that. It reports what it finds—not what people would like to have it find.

[From the Ocala (Fla.) Morning Banner, Apr. 19, 1936] BACKGROUND OF CANAL

Great undertakings demand extensive preparation. As the greatest construction job in history, it is to be expected that the engineering studies preceding the start of work on the Florida ship canal were exceedingly thorough and extensive. The Chief of Engineers, War Department, has expressed it thus: "This Department has realized from the inception of this examination that the magnitude of the project required a comprehensive study and its investigations undertaken over a period of 6 years were conducted in scope and detail sufficient to establish construction costs with reasonable accuracy." reasonable accuracy.

To supplement the surveys conducted by the Corps of Engineers since 1826, a special board of Army Engineers began in 1927 to examine 28 possible routes for the proposed waterway. Extensive subsurface explorations were carried out on the selected route, core drillings being made at 1-mile intervals, and some 400 wells, sinks, lakes, and drill holes being measured at regular intervals over a period of about 16 months. This is only an indication of the thoroughness with which the Army Engineers understood the job.

Further exhaustive studies were made of the economic aspects of the canal's construction. The United States Shipping Board Bureau and the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce assisted the Corps of Engineers in this work. In addition, the Transportation Division of the Department of Commerce undertook an independent economic survey which substantiated the findings of the special board.

In October 1933 the Engineering Division of the Public Works Administration reported that "the project covered herein constitutes a public necessity and is of real social value. The project will afford much employment to many classes of skilled and unskilled labor, that the design is in accord with sound engineering practice, and that the project is economically sound."

In 1934 an intensive examination of the engineering problems involved was made by the board of review, composed of picked representatives of the Corps of Engineers and the Public Works Administration plus an outstanding private consulting engineer. The plans and estimates submitted by this board, which had the benefit of all previous surveys, were adopted under the initial allotment for start of construction of the project.

The four railroads serving Florida had raised in 1933 the question of possible depletion of the State's water supplies by drainage through the canal. In order to determine the reasonableness of such fears the board of review investigated the question with the assistance of an expert water-supply engineer who has designed Further exhaustive studies were made of the economic aspects of such fears the board of review investigated the question with the assistance of an expert water-supply engineer who has designed extensive water systems for Florida cities. Their conclusion was that the canal's effect on the ground water reservoir would be negligible.

As this conclusion apparently failed to quiet the fears of certain sections of Florida, the chief engineer directed the appointment of a special board of engineers and geologists, who reported under date of December 18 that the effects of the sea-level canal on the underground water supply will not be serious, will be local in nature, and capable of control with reasonable expenditures for remodful works. remedial works.

When the Corps of Engineers, with an unblemished record of 150 years of efficient engineering practice in the public behalf, states that there is no necessity for fearing that Florida will be damaged in any way, and certain elements persist in their public wailing and in denunciation of the Corps for turning in a favorable report, it is reasonable to assume that something other than honest doubts are involved. The engineering background of the canal is one of the most extensive ever presented, and the conclusion unanimously reached by all investigatory bodies is that the canal is entirely feasible from an engineering standpoint. It would seem that such a preponderance of competent opinion is sufficient to determine conclusively the practicability of constructions of the western that the conclusively the practicability of constructions.

The board of review found that, based upon the economic survey of the special board of survey, which the board of review had before it, along with the report of the P. W. A. engineers, such a sea-level canal would be economically justified on a 4-percent basis up to a cost of $160,000,000.

The economic figures do not include any benefits resulting from stimulation from commerce and shipping, adjustment of freight rates and ship subsidies, reduction in hazards to shipping during the hurricane season, increased earning power of ships due to shorter time required to make the voyage, the very real value of the project as a factor in national defense, the advantage to large numbers of pleasure craft, the importance of having a link which will connect the inland varteeway systems of the United States. will connect the inland waterway systems of the United States.

May there be on the part of Florida and the National Congress the spirit of him who wrote, "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their party."

INTERNAL REVENUE COLLECTIONS BY STATES AND PER-CAPITA EXPENDITURES FOR FEDERAL AID

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD tabulations prepared for me by the Secretary of the Treasury showing per-capita internal-revenue collections by States and Territories as compared with per-capita expenditures for Federal aid by States and Territories for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935.

The report is also supplemented by a statement of the amount of internal revenue and customs receipts applicable to the State of Connecticut from 1926 to 1935.

(Note.—In presenting the tabulations I desire to point out the statement of the Treasury that data representing Federal tax collections in particular States have very serious limitations, and in the interest of accuracy great care must be exercised in their use. Receipts from customs and internal revenue collected in a particular State, for example, do not necessarily correspond with the amounts which the people of that State ultimately pay toward the expense of the Government. While the individual reporting income in a certain State is usually a resident of that State, his income is often derived from sources in another State. Also corporations, particularly the larger ones, pay their income taxes in the States in which their principal offices are maintained, although their physical properties may be located in other States or sections of the country, and the greater part of their profits may be derived from sales in many States. Customs duties are usually collected at the port of entry, regardless of the destination of the imported merchandise, the consumers of which ultimately pay a part or all of the duty.)

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the Washington Post on the neutralization of the Philippines and an article appearing in the New York Herald Tribune on home rule for the Moros.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> [From the Washington Post of Mar. 26, 1936] NEUTRALIZATION OF THE PHILIPPINES

To the Editor of the Post.

Sign: May a retired officer, for a decade a civil servant of the Philippine government when loaned for constabulary police work in all parts of the archipelago, say a word about the letter from a Filipino resident of Manila in the Post of the 24th instant?

Mr. De Los Reyes says that hundreds of Filipinos do not desire independence. He fears economic difficulties and apprehends Japanese annexation of the Philippines—after the 10-year interim. His plea is in effect one for a continuance of the present status. Mr. De Los Reyes expresses gratitude for what the United States has done for the Filipino people. I wonder if he realizes what further plea is in effect one for a continuance of the present status. Mr. De Los Reyes expresses gratitude for what the United States has done for the Filipino people. I wonder if he realizes what further sacrifices he asks of the American people.

Our Government would be responsible—single-handed—for the condition and the defense of the islands, while the autonomous Philippine government would have all power over local affairs and administration. This would involve a permanent division of our fleet—a weakness. We would be faced with a permanent extension of the annual expenditure of some $12,000,000 our people now bear for the cost of the American naval and military forces kept in the Philippines. Such a dominion status for a people 8,000 miles from a capital, who have been given complete autonomy, including the suffrage, habeas corpus, and so on, has existed only where the people were of the same race as those of the controlling state.

Where are the Filipino Patrick Henrys who fought two long wars against Spain and America for independence? I believe the masses in the Philippines earnestly desire the independence we promised them. There is no evidence that the Japanese Empire will destroy the Philippine Republic. For some decades to come the Japanese will have other fish to fry—will be fully occupied about Russia and matters in China. Japan would not take on tasks in the Philippines that would require a permanent division of her fleet.

Always free to settle in the Philippines, there are but 20,078 Japanese among the 12,000,000 Filipinos. The latest reports show a decrease in the Japanese in the islands of some 1,438 the last 5 years. The neutralization of the Philippines would be to the selfish or national interests of the six nations with great interests in the Far East. Therefore such a course as is prescribed in the independence act of our Congress would seem wise and practicable.

Far East. Therefore such a course as is prescribed in the independence act of our Congress would seem wise and practicable.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of Apr. 10, 1936] HOME RULE FOR MOROS SUGGESTED AS A MEANS OF ENDING TURBULENCE To the New York Herald Tribune:

Your interesting editorial article of the 5th instant is, I believe, a correct estimate of the principal cause of the continued trouble with the Moros in the south Philippines. You state that the Moropeople are unwilling to be Filipinized—or Americanized, or Christianized.

I feel that the Philippine Commonwealth government would be wise to follow a common practice in the rule of minorities of a different faith and grant home rule to the Moro Provinces. There might be some difficulties in such a course, as the Moros are at present unable to pay their own way. The Filipino people have defrayed the cost of their own government and of the sundry improvements carried out in the islands. They have also borne the larger share of the expense of government and education in the extreme southern islands. the extreme southern islands.

However, there would be no great difficulty involved in gradually giving the Moro Provinces at least a government by Moro officials, with a constabulary police force composed of Moro officers and Moro soldiers. Such a measure of home rule would stimulate Moroprogress and benefit the Commonwealth by decreasing the racial friction. It would also lower the cost of government in the southern Provinces. The American Government gave home rule to the Filipinos as soon as possible. The result was general good feeling and cooperation between the two peoples.

I served the Philippine government for a decade and resided in and worked in many parts of the Archipelago, including the Moro country.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER FLOOD CONTROL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3531) to amend the act entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes", approved May 15, 1928.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the Committee on Com-

When the Senate concluded its session on Friday last the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton] had the floor and had not concluded his remarks, the Record showing that he yielded to the Senator from Arkansas to move a recess. The Senator from Louisiana is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, when the Senate recessed Friday afternoon I had proceeded in the discussion of the pending bill to the point where I was presenting to the Senate what had been done under the adopted plan and the modifications thereto proposed in the Markham report. In yielding to various Senators who desired information, I discussed many phases of the bill perhaps out of their logical sequence. I was very glad to do so and shall be very glad this morning to yield to any Senator who desires information, because it is my desire, to the extent of my knowledge, to inform the Members of this body in respect to the pending bill and the plan to which it refers.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. OVERTON. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator was very generous in answering my questions Friday, and I submit but one more. Can the Senator tell me how much of the $272,000,000 estimated to be covered by the bill as a whole is involved in section 5, the White River project?

Mr. OVERTON. Twelve million dollars. Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire what part of the $272,153,424 heretofore appropriated has been expended upon the projects involved in the bill before us?

Mr. OVERTON. Practically all of that amount has been expended, or allocated, to meet contracts connected with the plan.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. OVERTON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is my information that there remains $50,000,000, or approximately that amount, which is available for expenditure under the proposed modification.

Mr. KING. At any rate, may I inquire, the $272,000,000 heretofore appropriated will all be expended, and, in addition, the $300,000,000 carried by the pending bill?

Mr. OVERTON. Permit me to correct the Senator. The $272,000,000 is the authorized appropriation carried by the pending bill. There was an authorization of $325,000,000 under the Flood Control Act of May 18, 1928.

Mr. KING. I presume the $325,000,000, instead of $272,-000,000 as I had assumed, either has been expended or has been contracted for?

Mr. OVERTON. Not all of the $325,000,000. That is the authorized appropriation, but something like $270,000,000-odd has been expended or contracted to be expended under the Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928.

Mr. KING. Is it anticipated that all of the $325,000,000 authorized will be expended?

Mr. OVERTON. That is my assumption.

Mr. KING. And in addition, then, there will be the $272,000,000 carried by the bill now before us?

Mr. OVERTON. That is correct.

Mr. KING. So there will be over $500,000,000 for the Louisiana project provided in the authorization of 1928 and the present bill?

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator is correct in stating that this bill provides for an increase in the authorized appropriations, but he is in error in assuming that the money is to be expended solely in Louisiana. The money which was appropriated heretofore and the money which is authorized to be appropriated under the pending bill is to be spent all the way up and down the Mississippi Valley from Cape Girardeau, Mo., to the Gulf of Mexico. It is to be expended in Missouri. It is to be expended in Arkansas. It is to be expended in Mississippi. It is to be expended in Louisiana. This is a mammoth project intended to protect adequately all of that great alluvial valley.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I submit a further inquiry?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. What part of the $325,000,000 authorized by the act of 1928 has been expended north of the northern boundary line of Louisiana?

Mr. OVERTON. I am sorry I have not that break-down; but the Senator, who has followed the discussion of the bill and my statement in reference to what has been done on the program, will readily understand that thus far there has been about an equal distribution of the amounts expended with respect to the different States taking into consideration the length of the levees which were constructed in each State. There has been an effort made to have a uniform system of levees through the different States and therefore there has been a more or less uniform expenditure in all the States within the valley.

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. OVERTON. Certainly.

Mrs. CARAWAY. Is it not true that the Army engineers have stated that most of the money heretofore appropriated has gone for the repair of breaks in the levees and there has not been a sufficient amount to raise the levees to a real protection height?

Mr. OVERTON. That is true with reference to the appropriations made prior to 1928. The Senator is correct in that regard. There has been very little, if any, breakage or crevassing in the levees since 1928.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield further to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. Perhaps the Senator intends to discuss later the statement contained in the report with respect to the amendments to the bill as to compensation?

Mr. OVERTON. I have already discussed that rather fully, as the Senator may recall.

Mr. KING. I was compelled to be out of the Chamber during a part of the presentation of the matter by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. I may conclude to submit additional observations when I reach the discussion of that particular section of the bill.

Mr. KING. Then I undedstand the Senator is not insisting, as the report seems to insist, upon just compensation in the sense that the property owners must go into court to secure payment of the full amount?

Mr. OVERTON. As I endeavored to explain last Friday, what the amendment now offered proposes to accomplish is that there shall be no construction on the Eudora floodway and its northern extension and on the Morganza floodway, until the Secretary of War shall have acquired, or else shall have obtained options or satisfactory assurances of options, to cover 75 percent of the estimated value of the flowage rights, at a cost for the 75 percent of not to exceed $20,000,000. Then if there are any property owners within the remaining 25 percent who are unwilling to grant flowage rights or who ask unreasonable prices for flowage rights, the Secretary of War will be authorized to proceed with condemnation proceedings. When condemnation proceedings are instituted and the court passes upon the value of Mr. A's or Mr. B's flowage rights, the court will follow the just-compensation rule provided by the Constitution of the United States.

When, however, the Secretary of War shall have acquired flowage rights to the extent of 75 percent of the estimated value at prices satisfactory to him, such acquisition will be very largely an establishment of the value of flowage rights throughout the territory embraced within the floodways; and I do not anticipate, nor does the Secretary of War now anticipate, nor does the Chief of Engineers anticipate, that there will be any unreasonable charges for the flowage rights, or any extravagant sums allowed by the courts in cases of condemnation.

The Senator from Utah will further bear in mind that when condemnation proceedings are instituted to acquire these flowage rights, the Secretary of War proceeds in the Federal courts, not in the State courts, and that an appraisement is made of the value of a flowage right by three commissioners appointed by the Federal court, whose award, when confirmed by the Federal court, is final. Therefore, every safeguard is thrown around the Public Fisc in the acquisition of these flowage rights.

Mr. President, on Friday afternoon I had proceeded in my march down the valley to a point opposite the mouth of the Arkansas River. I had shown what had been done in all the area extending from Cape Girardeau on down to the south bank of the Arkansas River, and the modifications proposed. I had discussed the Yazoo Valley, and also various features and provisions of the bill.

Beginning at the south bank of the Arkansas River, there appear upon the map broken lines which show the existence of what is known as a fuse-plug levee. The fuse-plug levee begins just south of the Arkansas and extends down to Luna Landing, a distance of approximately 65 miles. The fuse-plug levee is 3 feet or more lower than the 1928 grade and section levee. It has been left there by design, in order that the excess waters of the Mississippi River, in case of major floods, may spill over the fuse-plug levee and crevasse it. It was intended that the Boeuf floodway should take up that overflow and carry it on down safely into the Atchafalaya floodways, and thence on down to the Gulf of Mexico.

But, Mr. President, the Boeuf floodway has not yet been constructed. It is to be substituted by the Eudora floodway. In the meantime, the fuse-plug levee, left there for the intended purpose of being overtopped and of crevassing, stands as a menace to all southeastern Arkansas and to all eastern Louisiana on down into the Atchafalaya Basin. Under the plan recommended by General Markham, the fuse-plug levee is to be retained, but back of it is to be built a protection levee that will prevent the overflow of the rest of that basin; and toward the southern end of the fuse-plug levee there is to be constructed the Eudora floodway. The Eudora floodway will have a controlled intake. Its channel will be leveed on each side, so as to hold the water within the leveed channel of the floodway. That floodway remains to be constructed.

Going on down the river from the Eudora floodway to the Atchafalaya River the levees have been practically completed. There is some work still remaining to be done; but when we reach the Atchafalaya River we find a situation which is comparable with the situation which exists at the mouth of the Arkansas River. We find again that the leveed channel of the Mississippi River is utterly incapable of holding the water in major floods. The capacity of the leveed channel of the Mississippi River from the mouth of Red River and the source of the Atchafalaya River on down to the Gulf is approximately 1,500,000 cubic feet per second.

At that point the Atchafalaya River, which rises at Old River and at the mouth of Red River, has been, and still is, a natural relief outlet to the overcharged Mississippi River in times of high water. It has a drainage capacity of 500,000 cubic feet per second; but that is insufficient, because there must be diverted additionally from the Mississippi another 1,000,000 feet. So there is now being constructed on the west bank of the Atchafalaya River a floodway which will take care of 500,000 second-feet of this surplus water.

On the east bank of the Atchafalaya, General Jadwin in his report, and in the project he submitted which was adopted by Congress, provided another floodway. That floodway is to remain, but under the Markham plan it is to be relocated at a place where it will be more serviceable. It is now known as the Morganza floodway. It will have a carrying capacity of 500,000 cubic feet per second. Therefore at this point there will be relief outlets that will be capable of taking care of 1,500,000 cubic feet per second, and carrying that volume of water down to the Gulf of Mexico.

In the lower reaches of the Atchafalaya it is proposed to construct an outlet west of Berwick Bay that will give a quicker and shorter flowage of the Atchafalaya waters into the Gulf of Mexico, and which will have a carrying capacity of 500,000 cubic feet per second. That is known as the Clarenton outlet.

Leaving the Atchafalaya River, we find that on down toward New Orleans the levees have been practically completed. Just above New Orleans there has been constructed the Bonnet Carre spillway, which has a drainage capacity of 250,000 cubic feet per second.

Mr. President, I have now shown what has been done under the authorization of the Flood Control Act of 1928, and the modifications thereof proposed under the Markham plan, which are incorporated in the pending bill.

I wish to say that we are now dealing with the gravest and most stupendous flood problem in the United States.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Davis in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Can the Senator tell us what is the normal flow of the river below the mouth of the Arkansas?
Mr. OVERTON. The Senator means, I presume, between the leveed channels?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; within the normal channel of the river, including the levees.

Mr. OVERTON. Two million second-feet.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. And a million and a half second-feet of surplus?

Mr. OVERTON. A million feet will have to be diverted at that point, because the maximum predicted flood will bring into the Mississippi River, at the latitude corresponding to the mouth of the Arkansas River, 3,000,000 cubic feet per second. Therefore, there must be diverted 1,000,000 feet of this excess water, because the levees are being built as high as it is safe and economical and prudent to build them.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator, I believe, is a member of the Commerce Committee.

Mr. OVERTON. I am.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Has the committee considered the question of whether or not floods could be controlled farther up the Arkansas and Mississippi Rivers and their tributaries; or has the committee had any survey made to ascertain whether or not that could be done?

Mr. OVERTON. Such a survey has been made, and I went into the subject fully on Friday afternoon. Possibly the Senator from Minnesota was not present in the Chamber at the time I was discussing it; but, briefly, I may say to the Senator that in response to congressional mandate the Chief of Engineers and the Mississippi River Commission made a study of the control of flood waters in the Mississippi Valley by the location of reservoirs at the headwaters of the tributaries of the whole Mississippi River system. They reported that such reservoirs, in order to be effective, would have to be detention reservoirs, used solely for flood-control purposes; that they would cost $1,250,000,-000; and General Markham, testifying the other day before the Commerce Committee of the Senate, said that notwithstanding the construction of those reservoirs, it would still be necessary to have these levees on the Mississippi River, and to have floodways of the character suggested in the Jadwin and Markham plans.

I will say to the Senator that we down in the valley would welcome reservoirs, because they are additional factors of safety. But by reason of their stupendous cost I am not asking that they be incorporated in the pending bill, which relates exclusively to flood control in the lower valley, because the Markham-Jadwin plan is a complete plan in itself. If put into execution this plan will fully and adequately solve the flood-control problem in the lower Mississippi Valley.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, can the Senator tell us how many plans there have been in the last 50 or 60 or 100 years?

Mr. OVERTON. Down in the lower Mississippi Valley, up until 1928, in practice there was only one plan, and that was the construction of levees. The levees were built higher and broader from year to year, from decade to decade, and from generation to generation; but it was found that levees only would not solve the problem and something else had to be done. That something else which has to be done is taking care of surplus waters which the levee channels will not hold, and conveying them through artificial channels to the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. OVERTON. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Do the engineers seem to think that if the proposed work is done it will take care of the floods in the future?

Mr. OVERTON. Absolutely and unqualifiedly.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I hope their predictions are more reliable than they have been in the past on the question of floods in the lower Mississippi.

Mr. OVERTON. I do not think the Army Engineers have ever declared that without the creation of such floodways as are planned the lower Mississippi Valley would be safe. I will get to that in a moment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I will not interfere with the Senator.

Mr. OVERTON. I am very glad to yield to the Senator for any further question he may desire to ask. But I was undertaking to show now the character of the problem with which we have had to deal in the lower valley for over 200 years.

Let me say to the Senator from Minnesota that the first levee on the Mississippi River was constructed in 1717. It was built in order to protect the city of New Orleans. It was a small levee, but at that time it served at least as a modicum of protection to that then infant city.

Levees were originally undertaken by private enterprise. Royal grants of riparian lands in colonial days contained the provision that the beneficiaries of these grants would have to build levees on the Mississippi River in order to protect their property and the property of others. It was found, however, that private enterprise could not cope with this great problem. Then the police juries passed ordinances requiring every able-bodied man residing within an area of 7 miles from the Mississippi River to work upon the levees. It was found that that was an unsuccessful plan. The higher the levees were built, the higher the flood stages during the succeeding decades and generations.

Finally, levee districts were formed, and those levee districts proceeded to impose taxes, and to undertake, out of the current avails of those taxes, to build levees which would hold in the waters of the mighty Mississippi. It was found that they could not build levees big enough and strong enough out of the current avails of the taxes they imposed. They proceeded then to anticipate their revenues by issuing bonds, and bond issue after bond issue was floated, and taxes after taxes were imposed, and the avails of these bond issues were employed in building up the levees. The history of the valley shows that on an average of every 5 years we have a destructive flood, and those floods coming down the river have crevassed our levees and broken their lines. The people in the valley, however, with resolution and with courage, after each flood imposed higher taxes, rebuilt their destroyed homes, and undertook to build levees still higher and still broader so as to control the mad currents of the great Father of Waters.

Mr. President, I do not think there appears in the annals of American history an example of greater persistence and patience, of greater courage and fortitude, than that presented by the denizens of the lower Mississippi Valley in fighting floods. Up to 1927, they had contributed the stupendous sum of $292,000,000 for flood control and flood protection, and since the flood-control law of 1928 was enacted, there have been local contributions, according to a report submitted by the Mississippi River Commission last year, of $41,000,000 in addition.

The Federal Government, at an early date, realized what this problem was, and began to take an interest in it. Such eminent statesmen as John C. Calhoun, Henry Clay, Abraham Lincoln, Thomas H. Benton, and Horace Greeley, were advocates of participation by the United States in flood protection in the lower valley.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. As the Senator is so eloquently proceeding to discuss the devastation caused by the river, I was wondering whether there is any historical evidence showing that there has been an increase in the volume of floods during the past 150 or 200 years, and if so, whether that has been the result of the denuding of timberlands above, clear up to the headwaters of the Mississippi and the Missouri. In other words, is the flow now greater than it was back in the days of the battle of New Orleans?

Mr. OVERTON. I have no data to furnish to the Senator from Utah in answer to his query. I think, however, that beyond any question the floods have increased from decade to decade and generation to generation, and for the reason suggested by the eminent Senator from Utah.

The great Mississippi River system represents a tremendous drainage area, covering practically one-half of continental United States, and part of the Dominion of Canada. Before the white man set foot in America, that great drainage system was covered largely by forests, and the undergrowth and humas of those forests not only arrested the flow of the waters, but also permitted infiltration and absorption. The Great Plains out West which are drained by the Mississippi River were covered with wild grasses and other vegetation, and the roots of the coverage in the soil not only arrested the flow of water, but also permitted untrammelled the processes of absorption and filtration.

Then there were the great swamp reservoirs which existed at different places in the valley. But as time went on, as our pioneer fathers undertook the conquest of this continent, they proceeded to clear the woodlands in order to make way for the farms. The plains out West were subjected to the plow of the farmer. Drainage districts were established throughout the vast valley. Industry began its devastating work upon our forests by converting them into lumber, and the natural reservoirs to which I have just referred were drained and reclaimed.

The result was that there has been, to my way of thinking, and according to my theory about it, a constantly increasing flow and acceleration of the run-off from all of this vast fan-shaped drainage area, extending from the Alleghenies to the Rockies, and therefore the floodwaters have increased in volume and in acceleration as they have gone on down into the lower Mississippi Valley.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I take it that if the Government constructs the floodways, the Government will be expected to maintain them. Have we any figures as to the cost of maintenance of such floodways as the Senator now advocates?

Mr. OVERTON. There is no estimate of the cost, but presumably the cost of maintaining a floodway will be very small. To begin with, the Morganza floodway will not, within the contemplation of the engineers, be used oftener than once in 10 years. The Bonnet Carre spillway now fully completed, may be used once in 5 years, but that is a very short floodway. The Eudora floodway will be used on an average of once in 15 years. Those floodways are not to be dredged or canalized. They are created simply by constructing levees and through these confining levees the waters of the floodways pass, It will not be necessary to maintain on those floodways the mammoth levees that are constructed on the Mississippi River.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that; but there will be some flow of water through those floodways?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes; but what I wished to say, in addition to that, is that the burden of maintaining the levees after construction is upon the local governmental subdivisions and not upon the Federal Government.

Mr. FLETCHER. The levees along the floodways will be maintained by the local governments?

Mr. OVERTON. The levees along the floodways will be maintained by the local governments.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the local governments have charge of the operation of the floodways? Will they keep persons there who will open the gates or close the gates, as the case may be?

Mr. OVERTON. They will have charge, and they will have control of the intake, and they will maintain the intake and will keep it as high as may be desired and as low as may be desired. That is left to the discretion of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. FLETCHER. But not at the expense of the Federal Government?

Mr. OVERTON. Yes. The openings to the floodways will be controlled and maintained by the Federal Government, but the floodway levees and all the levees will be maintained at the expense of the local governments.

Mr. FLETCHER. Reference has been made to reservoirs. I take it that the maintenance of those reservoirs will involve a very considerable expense.

Mr. OVERTON. There is no provision made in my bill for reservoirs.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know; but some suggestion has been made that the situation might be cured by building reservoirs farther up the river for control purposes. In the case of those reservoirs, maintenance is quite an item; is it not?

Mr. OVERTON. It is an item, but not such a large item. After the reservoirs and flood-control works are constructed, the maintenance is not so heavy. I will say to the Senator that there are no reservoirs provided for in my bill. It provides solely for a system of levees and floodways.

Mr. President, I was making some observations with respect to the contributions which have been made by the Federal Government toward flood control in times past. Before the War between the States small appropriations were made in order to have surveys undertaken and reports made in respect to these surveys. The most important report was made in the year 1861, after 5 years' study of flood-control problems in the lower valley had been made by Army Engineers. No appropriation for flood-control work was made, however, until the year 1881. Then $1,000,000 was appropriated by the Federal Government. In 1882, $4,000,000 was appropriated, and after that there were annual appropriations.

In the beginning of this century the appropriations rose to the sum of $6,000,000 per annum, and along about 1916, according to my recollection, they were increased to $10,-000,000 per annum, but, as General Markham has stated, these appropriations were largely wasted, because an adequate and proper plan was not being put into effect. This money was used in repairing the broken lines of levees extending from Cape Girardeau to the Gulf. That is a distance of 1,100 miles, and therefore the double line of levees which has to be covered represents a distance of almost 2,000 miles. The appropriation was inadequate to undertake a permanent solution of this problem.

Then came the great flood of 1927, which excited more popular interest than any other flood in the lower valley. It was scores of miles in width and hundreds of miles in length. The records show that $200,000,000 of property was destroyed, over a hundred lives were lost, and 700,000 people placed in refugee camps, not only for days, not only for weeks, but for months. The national conscience was aroused, and the then President—Coolidge—called into requisition his Army Engineers and the Mississippi River Commission. He sent down into the valley Herbert Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce, and himself a great engineer. They studied this question for almost a year. They had back of them the benefit of the studies of the Mississippi River Commission, which had been created in 1879, and for half a century had devoted its time and attention to a consideration of this great problem. They also had back of them the experience of 200 years of fighting floods in the lower valley, and they came back with this plan, which was adopted by Congress, and it is a plan of levees and of floodways. It is, according to the Engineers, the only plan, a complete plan, that will solve our difficulties in the valley. It is this plan, with the modifications I have mentioned, the completion of which the bill undertakes to authorize.

Mr. President, I shall now take up the bill itself and present to the Senate each section. Section 1 of the bill adopts the engineering features of the Markham plan, which I have already discussed and presented.

Section 2 relates to the substitution of the Eudora floodway for the Boeuf floodway. I have gone into a thorough discussion of that phase of the bill.

Section 3 provides that the levees along the Mississippi River from the head of the Morganza floodway to the Atchafalaya River shall be raised and enlarged to 1928 grade and section. That is a mere incident of the Markham plan.

Section 4 relates to the Yazoo River and St. Francis River Basin projects, and I have discussed those projects with fair fullness.

Section 5 provides for the White River emergency reservoir. I discussed that last Friday afternoon.

Section 6 provides for drainage made necessary by the construction of floodway levees included in the modified project.

Section 7 is to be amended in accordance with an amendment suggested by the Chief of Army Engineers. The original bill provided that the United States shall construct at its own cost such railroad and highway crossings over the floodways provided for in the modified project as are deemed necessary by the Chief of Engineers for the convenience of the public, provided that the appropriate railroad or highway agencies agree to accept and maintain and operate these crossings without cost to the United States. The original bill left the discretion in the Engineers as to just what railroads and what highways should be elevated above the floodways.

The Chief of Engineers prefers to exercise his discretion now. In the proposed amendment to section 7 it is provided:

That the United States shall construct, at its own cost, one railroad and one highway crossing over the Eudora floodway and not to exceed three railway and two highway crossings over the Morganza floodway, and not to exceed one railway crossing (together with suitable physical connections therewith), and one highway crossing over the floodway west of the Atchafalaya River provided for in the modified project: Provided, That equitable agreements can be made with the railroad and highway authorities concerned, and that the appropriate railroad or highway agencies agree to accept and maintain and operate these crossings without cost to the United States: Provided further, That the railroads crossing the Morganza and West Atchafalaya floodways agree in consideration for the crossings constructed to waive all claims against the Government for any damages that may occur by reason of overflows in the Morganza and West Atchafalaya floodways: And provided further, That other railway and highway damages shall be adjusted as provided for in section 12.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. OVERTON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I wish to inquire whether the cost referred to in the amendment just read will come out of the $272,-000,000 now carried by the bill?

Mr. OVERTON. It is estimated that the $272,000,000 will be sufficient to cover the cost. I hope that that estimate is correct. If, however, I may say to the Senator from Utah, another million or two million may be required in future years and this body is honored with his presence, as I hope it will be, I am quite sure that he will not withhold an additional few million dollars in order to complete the project.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we are so prodigal in our expenditures, I have no doubt if it were ten or twenty million dollars more, if the able Senator from Louisiana would make the eloquent speech then that he is making now, it will be granted very quickly.

will be granted very quickly.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator for his very complimentary reference to my feeble effort.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. How long since the estimate of cost was made? When was it made?

Mr. OVERTON. The estimate of cost was made when the Markham plan was submitted last year, in 1935. There is a break-down of it in the hearings on page 35.

Then when the bill was submitted to the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, may I say to the Senator from Minnesota, reviewed the estimate and made his recommendation accordingly, as shown by the report of the Secretary of War on the pending bill.

Section 11 provides for the northern Eudora extension, which I have discussed.

Section 12 is to be revised by an amendment suggested by the Chief of Engineers and agreed to by myself and by the committee. That section provides for the acquisition of the flowage rights, and the proposed amendment has been thoroughly debated by myself and by other Senators.

Section 13 authorizes the appropriation of $272,000,000. It is contemplated that the program will require 6 years for its completion. The bill now has the approval of the Chief of Engineers, with the sole exception of section 5, and, consequently, the approval of the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War has declared in his report that it is in accord with the program of the President. Therefore I assume that it will receive Executive approval.

All I ask, Mr. President, in presenting this bill, and in closing, is that there be an authorization to complete this project upon which the Federal Government has already expended some two-hundred-and-seventy-odd million dollars, and the local interests some $41,000,000 in addition. If it is not done, it will represent, to a very large extent, a willful, woeful waste on the part of the Federal Government. The Mississippi Valley will remain unprotected. The completion of this plan is absolutely necessary to the protection of the valley.

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

Mr. OVERTON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator said, as I understood him, that section 5 does not have the approval of the War Department?

Mr. OVERTON. I so stated.

Mr. KING. I should be glad to have the comment of the Senator on that.

Mr. OVERTON. I shall do so briefly. I commented upon it last Friday afternoon.

Mr. KING. I regret I was not then present.

Mr. OVERTON. Section 5 is what might be said to be a mere incident in this whole plan, but a very important one, in my view. The project which it provides will cost $12,-000,000. It fits into the picture; it has been recommended by the Mississippi River Commission, and in my opinion it ought to be included.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Frazier in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Murray in the chair). Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the measure which is now before the Senate is of very great importance. Following a very disastrous flood which swept over a large portion of the central and lower Mississippi Basin in 1927, plans were initiated for protection against a recurrence of such disaster. The Mississippi River Commission and the engineering agencies of the Government concentrated their efforts, under instructions from the Congress or one or the other of the branches of Congress, on producing a comprehensive method of dealing with the subject.

It was not found practicable then to work out a plan or method in all its details which would provide for flood control in all the vast area of the Mississippi River Basin, particularly as the same is affected by the tributaries of the Mississippi; but surveys were entered upon and plans were suggested. However, the plan known as the Jadwin plan, so-called because General Jadwin was then Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, was enacted into law. Work under that plan proceeded. A material, indeed one might say the major, portion of the works was constructed.

As a vital part of that plan, regarded as indispensable by all the engineers, both those of the Mississippi River Commission and the Army Engineers, a floodway known as the Boeuf Basin floodway, with outlets just below the mouth of the Arkansas River and extending a distance of about 32 miles to the south, was authorized. Actually that floodway has an outlet of more than 60 miles, for the reason that the Engineers, in constructing the levees contemplated by the law, left a wider outlet than the law provided for as an additional measure of safety.

Of course, the theory of the Boeuf Basin floodway was that it constituted a natural area over which the surplus waters of the Mississippi, the waters which in floodtimes could not be carried between the levees, would find their way through crevasses in the levee system. As a result of the devotion of that vast area, something more than 1,125,000 acres, to the prospective floodway, serious consequences have resulted.

As stated during the address of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton] on one occasion when I interrupted him, the opposition of landowners and residents within the proposed Boeuf Basin floodway proved so great and the difficulties encountered in obtaining flowage rights appeared so insurmountable that no work on the floodway was done. At the instance of the people residing in the lower Mississippi Valley, resurveys were made and reviews were undertaken by representatives of the engineering departments of the Government. Those reviews and resurveys were comprehensive and were carried on in great detail.

As a result of the reviews to which I have referred, following the act of 1928, we have before us in the Overton bill what is known as the Markham plan, which contemplates substantial modifications of the Jadwin plan. It is believed to be an improvement on the Jadwin plan for two or more reasons. The first that I mention is that the area of the land to be devoted to floodway purposes is much less under the Eudora floodway than under the proposed Boeuf Basin floodway, the area of the Eudora floodway being approximately 850,000 acres, while the area of the Boeuf Basin floodway, as contemplated by the act of 1928, was approximately 1,125,000 acres.

That is one of the reasons for the substitution. Another reason for substituting the Eudora floodway for the Boeuf Basin floodway is found in the fact that the cost will be materially diminished. I do not think it is practicable to state with definiteness and accuracy how much will be saved, but all of the engineers agree on the fact that it will be considerably less costly to provide the Eudora floodway in lieu of the Boeuf Basin floodway.

There are other reasons. Among them are those which have relation to the state of mind of the residents of the areas within the respective floodways. All Senators will readily understand that one who has built and maintained his home in a place which is subject to occasional overflow is oftentimes unwilling to have the lands on which his home is located subjected not only to the waters which would naturally come there but to the waters which would be diverted there by lands are not located.

There was such violent opposition to the Boeuf Basin floodway that a review of the matter was made and a new floodway planned, with outlets lower down the Mississippi River for a considerable distance—I believe perhaps 100 miles as the river runs-below the upper side of the proposed Boeuf Basin floodway. The new floodway, which is embraced in the Markham plan and in the Overton bill, is the substitute which has been referred to during these remarks.

Early in 1934 the President, in a message addressed to the chairman of the Flood Control Committee of the House of Representatives, strongly endorsed the construction and completion of this project substantially as carried in the bill now before the Senate. He said, among other things:

This important undertaking must be completed. When the report on the review is submitted, I shall further communicate to the Congress with a recommendation for such additional authorization and legislative changes as may be necessary and to provide fair and equitable adjustment to the property owners and local interests affected by the execution of the project.

In explanation of the paragraph in the President's letter to the chairman of the Flood Control Committee, it is proper to state that General Jadwin, in some mysterious way-I mean mysterious to myself-interpreted the act of 1928, which expressly placed upon the United States the obligation of securing flowage rights for the floodway, as meaning that the language of the act did not contemplate any compensation to the landowners. As a lawyer, it has been utterly incomprehensible to me, and still is, how the great engineer reached the conclusion he did reach; and it was in reply to that conclusion, in part, at least, that the letter of the President from which I have quoted was written. The President stated that he would recommend-I quote again-

Such * * legislative changes as may be necessary and to provide for a fair and equitable adjustment to the property owners and local interests affected by the execution of the project.

From that time on it had been regarded as somewhat a closed question that when the work of completing the project authorized in 1928 should be undertaken in relation to the construction of the floodways, just compensation or fair compensation should be awarded to those whose lands were to be subjected to the additional usage of carrying in a new channel the waters accumulated from thirty-odd States-a channel artificially provided by the construction of back levees designed to force the waters to pass between the works.

The Overton bill was in process of formulation, the question relating to compensation proved one of the most difficult. The Engineers expressed the fear that the landowners would have an exorbitant view of the value of the flowage rights which it was necessary for them to grant to the Government, and that the result of condemnation proceedings would be the authorization of the payment of an immeasurable sum-a sum which, in its aggregate amount, could not be foreseen by anyone.

Of course, the Constitution provides for the measure of compensation; and, as was ably stated by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton] on Friday, Congress cannot take from, nor should it add to, the measure fixed in the Constitution. The difficulty was, however, in working out the amount of compensation in a practical way. The Chief of Engineers at first wished to require the States to buy all these rights and pay for them, and then, if he found the amount reasonable, the Federal Government should reimburse the States; but the States manifestly were not able to do that, nor were the local levee districts directly concerned in working out the project.

As a result, after prolonged discussion of the subject, the bill was introduced providing simply for just compensation, as the Constitution contemplates. Later, negotiations on the subject continued, and an agreement was reached which is embraced in the amendment which I understand is now the immediate subject before the Senate. It contemplates that the Government shall procure the flowage rights, but that the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may reason of plans for the protection of other areas in which his | employ as their agents local levee districts or other State authorities; and to escape the problem of excessive expenditure for flowage rights there is incorporated a provision to the effect that 75 percent of the area must be covered by grants or easements to the Federal Government within a maximum expenditure of $20,000,000, leaving, of course, 25 percent as the maximum concerning which the authorities may be required to proceed by methods of condemnation.

It is clear that the object of this amendment is to compel cooperation on the part of the landowners if they desire to have constructed the works contemplated by the bill. If the owners of more than 75 percent of the land should take an antagonistic view, and refuse to make grants within the aggregate limit of $20,000,000, we should still be in trouble. We should have another delay.

Most of the lands to be embraced within these flowage rights lie in the State of Louisiana. The farther one goes down the river, as a general proposition, the greater and more difficult becomes the problem of controlling Old Man River.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton] stated that with exceptions, which, of course, are notable, there is a substantial unanimity of sentiment in favor of this bill. In the State of Arkansas, which I have the honor in part to represent here, there is an area above the north side of the proposed floodway in which the residents at first objected to the Markham plan. They are thrown into what may, with propriety, be called a secondary floodway. This plan contemplates the building of a back levee from approximately the mouth of the Arkansas River, where the old Boeuf Basin floodway was to have begun, down to the mouth of the Eudora floodway; and when the waters of the great Mississippi become so voluminous and turbulent that they cannot be restrained and carried within the limits of the Mississippi River levees proper, the levee at the outlet in a part of this area being lower, it will result in an overflow of a section in certain counties, in the State of Arkansas, which would be normally protected by the main-stem levees of the Mississippi.

I visited there, and discussed the subject with the residents of the area in public meetings and privately; and they reached the conclusion that the Markham plan, which is the plan before us, is the soundest and the best plan, and that they were willing to make whatever sacrifices were required of them.

Within the area comprised between the backwater levee and the main-stem levee are towns of considerable importance. These will be protected by ring levees, so that it appears probable that within the limitations prescribed in the amendment to the bill the flowage rights can be procured, and the work, which has now been delayed for 8 years because of the difficulties I have gone to the trouble to explain in detail, will be promptly carried forward.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.
Mr. COOLIDGE. The Markham plan has been worked out largely during the last 8 years, has it?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; the Markham plan has been worked out since the Jadwin plan was authorized, and since complaints as to the Jadwin plan were asserted here and

Mr. COOLIDGE. I have had considerable to do at times with engineers, and I have noticed that it is very hard for one group of engineers, who come along a little later, to approve the plans of earlier engineers, and I wondered to what extent the present engineers were in accord on this plan.

Mr. ROBINSON. I can answer the Senator's question, I believe, with complete authority. All the engineers, not only the engineers connected with the Mississippi River Commission, but those also who are related to the Chief of Engineers' Office and, in addition, most of the great civil engineers who reside within the areas directly affected, have approved the Markham plan in its modifications of the Jadwin plan.

Mr. COOLIDGE. I see in section 13, on page 9, this language:

And all unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the prosecution of said flood-control project are hereby made available for the purposes of this act.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Is there a large unexpended balance? Mr. ROBINSON. There is an unexpended balance of about $50,000,000 under appropriations heretofore authorized.

There is a section in the bill which has not the approval of the Chief of Engineers. It is known as section 5. Many questions have been asked during the course of the debate concerning that section, and my purpose now is to justify section 5 by what I conceive to be every fair standard of reasoning applicable to legislation.

Section 5 relates to what is known as a backwater area between the mouth of the White River and the Mississippi River. This area comprises approximately 135,000 acres. It is fertile land. The owners of these lands from time to time have contributed, in round figures, $4,000,000 to the construction of levees on the Mississippi River.

The neck between the White and the Mississippi, immediately above their junction, is narrow. There are now outstanding on these lands bonds in excess of $750,000, which are in default by reason of the fact that the landowners have been unable to pay them, and in order that Senators may understand how difficult the situation is let me explain that these lands are virtually in a floodway now created by the works which have already been constructed for the protection of other lands.

The mouth of Cypress Creek was closed and levees were raised, resulting in a heightening of the high-flood stage at the mouth of the White River of more than 10 feet, attributable, as reliable engineering authorities say, to the works which these people have helped to pay for, but which have contributed little to their protection and have contributed to the protection of others.

The engineers' answer is that this is within a backwater area, that these people have spent their money and exhausted their ability to pay taxes by contributing to levees on the main stem of the Mississippi, and that their danger comes from waters which back down the Mississippi and out at the mouth or near the mouth of the White River.

It does not make any difference to the citizen whether the water which destroys his home, damages his property, and endangers his life comes through a levee he has strained every financial resource to build in front of him, if by building that levee in front of him and closing other natural outlets for the water it is made to pile up higher and higher, until it overflows, destroys his property, and threatens his life.

There is not a technical distinction which a layman can understand between the projects within the St. Francis Basin, and the Yazoo Basin on the other side of the river, and that involved in section 5. I have a statement of the Chief of Engineers as to the distinction which he thinks exists, and all I can read into it is that the St. Francis and the Yazoo are almost wholly within the alluvial valley, whereas the White has its headwaters in the mountains of southern Missouri and of northern Arkansas. The St. Francis and Yazoo projects are both designed, and properly designed, to give protection to vast backwater areas.

The fact that works have been constructed before which have not proven wholly effective does not, in my opinion, control the conclusion concerning the merits of the project in section 5. The real reason, and the only reason, asserted by the Chief of Engineers, for opposing section 5 is that it does not conform to the provision in the 1928 act which requires the owners of lands on tributaries to contribute one-third the cost of the works for the construction of the levees.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Do I understand that the only objection the Engineers have to the work contemplated in section 5 involves the degree of contribution?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the only objection that is asserted in the letter to which I have referred, in reply to a letter written by the Senator from Louisiana at my suggestion. The Chief of Engineers does say in the letter, as I have already explained, that the St. Francis and the Yazoo are almost wholly within the alluvial valley, whereas the other tributaries—he does not mention any particular tributary—are not exactly within that status. But if we take a map of the areas affected, we find that throughout southern Missouri and northern Arkansas, to its junction with the Mississippi River, the White River flows almost parallel with and equidistant from the St. Francis. The White, therefore, within the limits I have expressed, is within the alluvial valley, and the same rule might very well be applied as in the other case, of which, I think, a meritorious explanation has been given.

I do not wish to be understood to be in the attitude of one who, experiencing some difficulty in connection with one project, takes the questionable course of criticizing other projects which are meritorious. I think the Yazoo and the St. Francis projects are thoroughly justified, although the cost of the Yazoo is four times that contemplated by section 5 for the White.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The sentence which challenged my attention, and upon which I was seeking interpretation, is the sentence in the War Department letter of February 15 to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, in which, in discussing section 5, the Secretary of War says:

This work is not recommended in the report.

I was wondering if that referred to the project itself in addition to the general question of its financing.

Mr. ROBINSON. What he means is that the report on the original Markham plan did not recommend section 5. Section 5, as I said in the beginning, is in addition to the Markham plan. That is what the Secretary of War meant. It is true that he does not recommend it; but I propose to show that the principal ground upon which the adverse recommendation is made is one which in all fairness cannot be sustained.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is the Senator's view that the chief objection is the financing objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, yes; that is a well-known fact.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The engineering plan itself, as such, has the approval of the Chief of Engineers, has it?

Mr. ROBINSON. It has the approval of the Mississippi River Commission, and the Mississippi River Commission approved the provision as it is in the bill. They approve it, as I shall proceed to show, without regard to the fact relating to the criticism of the Engineers with respect to contributions

The Jadwin plan of 1928, as I have already stated, had a provision requiring interests on the tributaries to contribute one-third the cost of flood-control work. That plan has been disregarded as respects the Yazoo River and as respects the St. Francis River, because people within those areas have made enormous contributions to works which have not proved effective for their protection. The Yazoo project carries $48,000,000 for reservoirs and for other works, and the St. Francis project carries the necessary authorization. These projects are meritorious; but there is not any distinction in morals between the backwater regions in those two areas and the backwater regions which are comprehended by section 5. Of course, I wish to see the Yazoo and St. Francis projects retained. I also wish to see section 5 retained.

Let me now explain to Senators why it is, in my opinion, that no demand should be made for a contribution of one-third the cost of construction of work contemplated in section 5, and also why, in my opinion, the Mississippi River Commission is right in making the favorable recommendation on that point, rather than the Chief of Engineers.

I have already shown that these lands have contributed $4,000,000; but that is not the worst of it. By reason of the fuse-plug levee which exists there under previous acts of Congress, the values of the land have been reduced very greatly indeed. Farms as rich and productive as are to be found anywhere on earth have declined to such values that they can find no market at all, because they lie in the way of a possible flood diverted from the Mississippi, gathered in its volume from 30 States, being 41 percent of the territory of the United States. So the States and local interests issued bonds to construct these levees on the Mississippi River and paid them out until the time came when they could not pay. The people in the area in question having given the flowage rights and providing an emergency reservoir on their entire area, there is not anything to be accomplished by writing into the provision of this bill that which the Chief of Engineers suggested; namely, that these landowners shall pay one-fourth of the cost of construction. If they were required to do it, their lands in the present situation would not yield the amount which would be necessary to meet that additional burden for the protection which has been afforded them. It would be a physical impossibility. It may be an exaggeration to say that the lands, if sold, would not yield the amounts necessary, but they are being confiscated in a sense now to pay taxes levied for the payment of bonds for the construction of levees which have not actually benefited them.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. Before the Senator leaves the question of section 5 and the White River emergency reservoir, I hope he will comment upon how well this reservoir fits into the picture of flood control on the Mississippi River itself.

Mr. ROBINSON. I intend to do that. I thank the Senator; but that point will be reached a little later, if it suits his convenience.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President— Mr. ROBINSON. One moment; I wish to follow through a thought which has been in my mind for some time. If these lands were being given, by section 5, as full protection as lands in other areas, there might be some justification for making the demand, even though it would be a hard one and almost impossible of fulfillment, that the landowners pay one-third of the cost of construction. But, mark you, one of the primary purposes of section 5 is to provide, close to the Mississippi River, an emergency reservoir of 135,000 square acres, which in times of high flood will lower the flood level from six-tenths of a foot, estimated by some engineers, to 2 feet, as estimated by the engineer of the State of Louisiana. That constitutes an additional factor of safety for the whole system. The Mississippi River Commission recognize and make reference to that consideration in their favorable report on section 5. They say that there are reasons why section 5 should be approved.

First, Protection against all ordinary floods for a large and

First. Protection against all ordinary noods for a large and fertile area now exposed to frequent inundation.

Second. An increased factor of safety (for the Mississippi River flood-control system) by way of probable increase in freeboard below the Arkansas River in maximum flood.

It may or may not be necessary for me to explain to those who are listening so intently to what I am saying that the peril comes in time of extreme high flood water, when a thousand rivers have gathered their murky volumes from remote sources, and send them hurrying down into the main channel. The normal capacity of the Mississippi River between the levees that have been constructed in the middle and lower sections of the Mississippi River Valley is 2,000,000 cubic feet a second; but there come days and nights when the volume of that water is 3,000,000 cubic feet per second. Unless a floodway is provided no plan for holding that water above will prevent the breaking of the levees, and the washing away of the soil from hundreds of thousands, yea, millions of acres of land.

Some have said that since levees have not been made sufficiently strong to hold the streams in their turbulence and violence, perhaps levees are a failure as a method of flood control. We have been using levees on the lower Mississippi for more than 100 years. The Government at first left the problem entirely to the landowners. Through the passing of the years they came to regard it as one of such vital interest to the public that first the States and then the National Government assumed responsibility. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been expended for flood control on the lower Mississippi alone. "Well", it may be asked, "why not let the Mississippi go where it will? Why not leave its floods unrestrained?" Do those asking that question know what that would mean? It would mean that almost every year probably, certainly every year in time of high floods, an area of the richest lands known, equal to more than 30,000 square miles would be submerged; vast amounts of property would be destroyed; thousands of lives would be lost.

In 1927 one of the most inspiring tasks that was ever undertaken was performed by the Red Cross in connection with flood relief during that great flood which came to the Mississippi Valley. In spite of the fact that every boat that could be commandeered and every watch tower and tree top that could be used was used in the methods of relief which were employed, more than 200 lives were lost and in excess of $200,000,000 worth of property was destroyed. We cannot leave the floods to take their toll of life and property at the will of unrestrained natural forces.

As was implied in the question of the Senator from Utah [Mr. King], with the cutting away of the forests, the diminution of the grazing areas, and the lessening of the acres that are put to wild grass, with the disappearance of the shrubbery, and through natural causes, the flood-control problem is growing more difficult; and added to that is the fact that the drainage systems that have been put in operation have increased the flow of the waters so that they pile up and accumulate down and down the river as they pass in times of excessive general rainfalls.

Section 5 adds strength to the plan, and every engineer concedes it. The Mississippi River Commission, from whom I started to quote a few moments ago, had this to say on the particular phase of this subject concerning which I am now addressing the Senate:

Under existing law, the Government may construct tributary levees within the backwater influence of the Mississippi River, provided local interests pay one-third the construction cost, furnish all right-of-way, and agree to maintain the structures. normal effect of levee construction in the backwater areas is to complicate the flood problem on the main river. The instant case is unique in that the retention of the emergency reservoir privilege is unique in that the retention of the emergency reservoir privilege by the United States annuls the disadvantage usually inherent in backwater projects and confers a positive benefit to main-river flood control. In this case the public benefits are sufficiently ma-terial to warrant the Government's absorption of the one-third of construction cost usually contributed by local interests, provided the Government is definitely guaranteed the privilege of inun-dating the area, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, whenever flow at Arkansas City equals or exceeds that of 1916.

That is a quotation from the chairman of the Mississippi River Commission, General Ferguson, at page 55 of the hearings. The essential point is, it will be remembered in this connection, that the landowners have contributed $4,000,000 to the levees, and they still have the problem of flood control. They have exhausted their power to pay taxes. In addition to that, they are providing an emergency reservoir, which is a factor of great value in connection with safety on the main

Lastly, they are guaranteeing the flowage rights, all easements, and guaranteeing to protect the Government against any damage by reason of the construction of the works. They are not, however, getting complete protection. They are putting their property into the system of flood control in the lower valley, permitting the use, whenever the Secretary of War finds it necessary, of all their lands as an emergency reservoir, and the engineers say that this will result in lowering the stage level from six-tenths of a foot to 2 feet.

In view of those circumstances, Mr. President, I respectfully insist that section 5 is justified by every fair standard of reasoning, compared with other projects that occupy the same relationship to the general subject, projects which would not reduce the general high flood level of the river comparably with that which would result from the provision made in section 5. Taking into consideration all the elements which should appeal to fair-minded persons, there is no excuse for not authorizing this feature of the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President— Mr. HASTINGS. Does the Senator from Mississippi desire the floor?

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to make just a brief statement with reference to the pending bill, but I do not desire to interfere with anything the Senator from Delaware has to

Mr. HASTINGS. I am going to speak about a subject that is not directly related to the bill and, as I understand the Senator wishes to discuss the bill, I yield to him.

Mr. HARRISON. I will be very brief, I may say to the

Mr. President, my distinguished colleagues in the Senate, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton] and the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], have so fully discussed the pending bill, and are so familiar with its provisions, that it is unnecessary, in my opinion, to say anything further; but I am so much interested in the enactment of this proposed legislation, that I would feel untrue to myself and unfaithful to my people if I did not say something. So it is more with a desire to impress upon the Senate two or three features that have already been touched upon, and with no desire to impose upon the patience of the Senate through reiteration, that I am going to speak at all.

Few bills, Mr. President, coming before this body, carry greater import to the people of the lower Mississippi Valley, than does the pending measure. It provides for the expansion and enlargement of the Flood Control Act of 1928, substituting the Eudora floodway for the Boeuf floodway; and providing for the Atchafalaya floodway and flood-control works along the St. Francis and the Arkansas and the Yazoo Rivers.

None of the levees or other flood-control works constructed under the act of 1928, which were provided for under the recommendations of the so-called Markham Board of Army Engineers, are to be discarded; but all works done will be used and will be necessary in the modified project. Every dollar heretofore spent for the control act was wisely and economically spent, and the modifications carried in this measure, if enacted, will add to the safety and protection of the valley against loss of life and property.

It is an erroneous impression that levees along the lower Mississippi River have failed; they have not; but because of the enormous developments in the northern area drained by the Mississippi and its tributaries, such as soil conservation, and large utilization of lands, denuding of forests, inauguration of drainage districts, and innumerable other factors, the waters from the north, finding their way through many tributaries into the Mississippi, have caused the flood waters to move in larger volume and at accelerated speed, thereby making it necessary that levees in the lower valley be enlarged, heightened, and strengthened.

In the beginning, years ago, before the transformation took place in the upper valley, it was believed that smaller and lower levees would suffice; but they have been found to be inadequate, and engineers now all agree that, while adequate levees are necessary and imperative, other means of impounding the waters, such as reservoirs, must be provided in order to solve the whole problem. The corollary is true, that, no matter how many reservoirs might be built along the tributaries of the Mississippi, adequate levees are likewise imperative and necessary.

It must not be forgotten that in the great construction work in the lower Mississippi Valley, people of that section have made a heroic fight and have done their part to solve this problem. Long since it has been declared a national policy, but, as a matter of fact, local interests still provide rights-of-way for levees and must maintain them. item in itself requires large local taxes. Prior to 1928, the local levee boards, according to the Chief of Engineers, had expended $292,000,000 to build levees along the lower Mississippi River. Large amounts of bonds are now outstanding against these local levee boards, and taxes must continue to be levied for years to come in order to discharge the bonds.

In my own State, where there are two levee boards and about 4,125,000 acres of land in the Delta, there are now and have been for 75 years heavy taxes, amounting in the aggregate to more than $50,000,000, imposed upon the people for flood protection.

We have another problem there, which results from the hill waters of southern Tennessee and northern Mississippi flowing into the Mississippi Delta. The Yazoo-Tallahatchie-Coldwater Rivers System is about 520 miles long. It is navigable. More than 100 local drainage and levee districts have been constructed along this river system. According to the Chief of Engineers, $20,000,000 have been spent in that area alone. The results have been unsatisfactory. The Chief of Engineers recommends that the Yazoo River system, protecting one-half of the Delta, be included in the expansion of the program. He recommends seven reservoirs, as a cost of $48,000,000, to be constructed. The local interests will be required to maintain the reservoirs and to provide for road and highway relocations.

It may be stated in this connection that the Yazoo River in Mississippi and the St. Francis River in Arkansas are located in levee districts that have paid for flood-control works along the Mississippi River. They lie some distance away from the river, but notwithstanding that fact they have for 75 years borne a burden of very heavy taxes to maintain the levees along the Mississippi River. Substantially one-half of the Mississippi Delta is subject to overflow from the Yazoo-Tallahatchie-Coldwater Rivers system. These lands are being taxed for flood control along the Mississippi River, and in addition they have incurred an obligation of $20,000,000 for local levees.

That is not true with reference to other tributaries outside of the alluvial valley, and they do not pay taxes for protection from the Mississippi River.

The Mississippi River drains two-thirds of the States of the Union. Its watershed extends from New York to Montana. It is the drainage ditch of the Nation, and it is gratifying to those of us who come from that section now to realize that the people of every section recognize it no longer as a local but as a national problem.

The fuse plug, or Boeuf floodway, has never been satisfactory. This bill, when enacted into law, will cure that unsatisfactory condition by providing for the Eudora floodway, which will give more relief, provide a more definite floodway, and remove the uncertainties in connection with the Boeuf floodway. Of course, it carries with it compensation to the property owners for damages to their lands, as has been fully analyzed and discussed by the senior Senator from Arkansas.

As to the Eudora diversion, I may say that it will not increase the backwater levels of the Yazoo Basin but will give greater protection to the Yazoo Delta. The Mississippi River Commission closed the Cypress Creek area in the Boeuf division in 1921. In my opinion the Government made a mistake and it should reopen the diversion. The Chief of Engineers recommends the Eudora diversion.

Only a comprehensive plan such as suggested in this legislation will solve the flood-control problem in the lower Mississippi Valley. The Yazoo River is the principal tributary of the Mississippi on the east bank between Cairo and the Gulf of Mexico. It is affected by backwater. In 1933 excess headwater floods covered 600,000 acres of land. In 1932, 993,000 acres were overflowed. When the works are constructed under this proposed legislation the reservoirs constructed in my own State will reduce flood heights at Vicksburg on the Mississippi River about 6 inches.

It is not necessary for me to remind this body of the many people who will be affected by this proposed legislation. Fully two-thirds of the cost of the project is for labor, and the social safety and well-being of that great section of our country will be promoted thereby, and likewise in varying degree all along the river south of that

It is a well-conceived, thoroughly investigated, and wellworked-out general plan, and I sincerely hope that the measure can be speedily passed and enacted into law.

THE LIBERTY LEAGUE-OLD FRIENDSHIPS DESTROYED

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I shall request Senators not to interrupt me and ask me to yield, because I do not wish to prolong my speech; and I conceive it to be possible that it may create some controversy, because I am going to talk about the Liberty League—Old Friendships Destroyed.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the able Senator permit me to call attention to the fact that we have not order in the Senate? There is not any intentional disorder; but the speech of the Senator is one in which I am sure many will be interested.

I therefore make the point of order that the Senate is not in order, requesting the occupant of the chair to call the attention of the occupants of the galleries to the rules of the Senate, as the Senators themselves well understand them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. Under the rules of the Senate there must be no talking or disturbance of any kind in the galleries. The occupants of the galleries will please see that the rule is obeyed.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I think it may safely be said that the problem of the unemployed, and the relief of the unemployed, remains the most serious problem confronting the Nation today.

We are told by the American Federation of Labor that the number of unemployed is something like 12,626,000 persons. This is a shocking statement when we take into consideration the billions of dollars that have been spent by the Government in the effort to furnish relief, and other costly plans for what was once described as "priming the pump."

My recollection is that we were almost dumfounded when the President requested an appropriation of $3,300,000,000. We were shocked and confused when he asked for the $4,800,000,000 appropriation. This now is followed in another 12 months by a request for $1,500,000,000 more. It might be well to note also that in the last request made, no assurance is given that the amount will be sufficient for the next fiscal year; and we may very properly assume, from the language of the President's message, that the billion and a half, if appropriated by the Congress, will be expended before the end of this calendar year.

After some experience with the first huge appropriation which I have mentioned, I remember distinctly the applause that greeted the President in his annual message delivered before a joint session of the two Houses of Congress on January 4, 1935, when he said:

The Federal Government must and shall quit this business of relief.

I am not willing that the vitality of our people be further sapped by the giving of cash, of market baskets, of a few hours of weekly work cutting grass, raking leaves, or picking up papers in the public parks.

The President then told us that there were one and a half million persons unemployed who would have to be cared for "by States, by counties, by towns, by cities, by churches, and by private welfare agencies", as they were cared for before the depression.

The President then recommended a new program of emergency public employment, and said that among the first principles of such public employment must be that—

All work undertaken should be useful—not just for a day or a year, but useful in the sense that it creates future new wealth for the Nation.

What a miserable mess has been made in carrying out this

On February 25 last, in some remarks I made in the Senate about the punishment of General Hagood by this administration because, when testifying before a House committee, he criticized the ease with which W. P. A. money could be secured, I quoted from several newspapers serious criticism of the use of such funds.

On March 10 the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] made a speech in the Senate upon this subject, taking as his text published criticisms by the Republican National Committee and the American Liberty League.

The distinguished Senator in that speech not only defended "boondoggling" but he undertook to immortalize the word by tracing it to that sturdy American woodsman, Daniel Boone.

The distinguished Senator made an investigation of his own. He stated:

On the basis of this factual report from the Works Progress Administration, I now charge the Republican National Committee and the miscalled Liberty League with "playing politics with human misery" and with attempting to make a political football out of the unfortunate unemployed in this country. They aim at President Roosevelt, but in reality they hope to ridicule and drive back into the soup lines the great number of unemployed men and women who are simply asking an opportunity to earn a living for themselves and their families in the old-fashioned and respectable American way.

There has been so much criticism, much of it specific and convincing, alleging that those in charge of W. P. A. funds and relief funds in various parts of the country were "playing politics with human misery", that I assume the distinguished Senator from Arkansas found it quite necessary to try to turn the tables and make the same charge against two organizations which disagree with the present administration.

If it be true that a great job has been done in the various works programs and in the equitable contribution of money for relief; if it be as free from politics as the Senator from Arkansas says it is, then may I inquire what objection there can be to an honest investigation by a committee of the Senate, a majority of whom would certainly be selected from the Democratic side of the Senate? Such an investigation has been demanded by the constituents of many Senators. The distinguished senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] has been urging it. The junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Holf] has placed before the Senate such facts as would seem of themselves to make such an investigation necessary. The senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis] introduced such a resolution, asking for only a small sum of money, and it was referred to a committee and reported by that committee favorably.

This was not pleasing to the distinguished majority leader, and he immediately made some rapid and effective movements. In the first place, he had the report held up. He found that the small Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments had only two Democratic members, and that it also had two Republican members, and that there were two vacancies. He immediately appointed two of the most prominent organization Democrats in the Senate to fill those vacancies; and when we next saw that resolution, it was quite different. All of the "whereas" clauses had been stricken out, and, in addition to that, the dead Federal Emergency Relief Administration was included for investigation. The resolution was then referred to the Democratic-controlled Audit and Control Committee, where it remains, and we are informed that action upon it has been indefinitely postponed.

A great author has described the adroitness and cleverness of one of his characters by saying:

Accident might play whatever card it chose; he was there to trump it.

So it is with the distinguished leader of the majority. When he finds that he is about to lose the pot, he deliberately deals himself two aces. This is another illustration of what is meant by the New Deal.

During the Senator's speech of March 10 there were constant sarcastic references to the Liberty League. It will be observed that he describes it as "the miscalled Liberty League" "the Du Pont Liberty League." He refers to Mr. Shouse as—

The $50,000-a-year front man of the Liberty League. • • • The Du Pont brothers must have been shocked when Shouse showed them that classic example of undermining the moral fiber of children on relief.

Then he referred to-

The arrogance of the Liberty League in attacking and ridiculing needy men and women and children on relief.

And finally he got off the following wisecrack:

For the sake of keeping the record clear, I am going to adopt the language of a newspaper corespondent who, paraphrasing a famous expression, described Wilmington as "the city where the Raskobs speak only to Du Ponts and the Du Ponts speak only to God."

The distinguished junior Senator from Texas [Mr. Con-NALLY] sustained this attack in a speech made in Baltimore on March 28. His speech is described in the New York Herald Tribune as follows:

CONNALLY asserted the people knew the "liberty" advocated by the American Liberty League was not that for which Washington and Jefferson fought. Instead, he said, the "liberty which holds it (the league) together, and which it is fighting to reinstate and preserve, is the liberty to exploit and profiteer upon the American people.

Perhaps both these Senators got their idea about the Liberty League from a speech made by Mr. Farley on February 22, in Topeka, Kans., in which he said:

First, let us take the miscalled American Liberty League, an organization of multimillionaires which is run as a subsidiary of the Republican National Committee. • • • A recent examination of its bottomless war-chest discloses that more than 70 percent of the contributions came from the Du Pont family, or their allies in the automotive and other industries. They can well afford to give because, thanks to the Roosevelt policies, they are earning more money than any time in history. • • They are ungrateful, and they want the people of the United States to be just as ungrateful as they are.

Ever since Governor Smith made his speech at the Liberty League $5 dinner, following the New Deal Jackson Day $50 dinner, we have heard much criticism on the other side of this Chamber of the Liberty League. So far as I can recall, not a word has been said in reply. I do not pretend to speak for that organization, but I do propose for a few moments to point out some inconsistencies involved in that criticism, and particularly does this apply to the distinguished Senator from Arkansas.

Let us get an idea of the set-up, from a political point of view, of this so-called "miscalled Liberty League", particularly so far as the support of Mr. Roosevelt in 1932 is concerned. We find the positions of president and secretary of that organization to be held by prominent Democrats. We find more than a majority of the National Executive Committee, consisting of 23 members, and which actually runs the organization, composed of Democrats, and it might be well to call attention to the names of some of the members of this executive committee.

There is the Honorable John W. Davis, who was the standard bearer of the Democratic Party in 1924.

There is the Honorable Alfred E. Smith, who was the standard bearer of the Democratic Party in 1928.

There is the Honorable Joseph B. Ely, the well-known former Democratic Governor of the great State of Massachusetts.

One member only of the Du Pont family, Mr. Irénée Du Pont, is a member of that committee, and he was a strong supporter of Mr. Roosevelt in 1932.

Mr. John J. Raskob, the former chairman of the Democratic National Committee, appears not to be a member of the executive committee, but he is among a long list belonging to the national advisory council.

And let me read from the platform of the league and see how closely it follows the Democratic platform of 1932. It sets forth the principles for which it stands in the following language:

To preserve American institutions; to advocate economy in government, a sound fiscal policy, and the maintenance of a sound and stable currency; to further the restoration of employment and to oppose all unnecessary interference and competition by government with legitimate industry; to support government in the obligation to provide for those who, because of involuntary unemployment or disability, cannot provide for themselves; to uphold American principles that laws be made only by the direct representatives of the people in the Congress, and that the laws be interpreted only by the courts; to provide for the rank and file of the American people an opportunity to offset the influence of selfish groups; and to preserve for succeeding generations the principles of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

Those principles are so nearly in line with the Democratic platform of 1932 that we must conclude that the Liberty League was organized and is being controlled by those who believed in that platform and believed in the Democratic candidate for President. It is the kind of a platform to which Bainbridge Colby, the Secretary of State, and Newton D. Baker, the Secretary of War, under Woodrow Wilson, would approve. Former Senator Reed, of Missouri, would approve. The late Governor Ritchie, of Maryland, a distinguished Democrat, did approve it. It is in line with the opinion of a host of other prominent Democrats, such as Lewis W. Douglas, efficient Director of the Budget during the early part of the present administration; Col. Henry Breckinridge, Assistant Secretary of War during the first Wilson administration; Judge William R. Pattangall, former justice of the Supreme Court of Maine; James R. Warburg, Treasury advisor to Roosevelt; Dean Acheson, Under Secretary of the Treasury in the first part of the Roosevelt administration; George N. Peek, who held several important posts under the present administration; Forney Johnston and Borden Burr, two of the outstanding Democrats of Alabama; and many, many others whom I shall not take the time to enumerate.

Who is Mr. Jouett Shouse, the so-called "$50,000-a-year front man of the Liberty League"? The fact is that his salary is $36,000 and not $50,000. Why, Mr. Shouse is the man selected by Mr. Raskob shortly after the Democrats had met the most overwhelming defeat in its history, when in 1928 it was being led by Governor Smith as its candidate for President and Senator Robinson as its candidate for Vice President.

When did Mr. Shouse and Mr. Raskob become such a thorn in the flesh of the New Deal? When they refused to follow the New Deal into the morass of socialism and when it deliberately violated every democratic principle for which all good Democrats stood when Mr. Roosevelt was nominated in 1932.

On July 2, 1932, just after Mr. Roosevelt had been nominated, when he appeared before the Democratic National Committee in Chicago, he had this to say:

I had hoped to get here while my old friend, John Raskob, was presiding.

I want to tell you all of the very splendid work that has been done for the party by the retiring chairman. It was his conception 3 years ago that gave to the party a permanent, active headquarters in Washington.

Mr. Raskob spoke to me at that time and we went over the plans. As you all know, my old friend, Jouett Shouse, was made chairman of the executive committee, and another old friend, Charlie Michaelson, was placed in charge of the publicity. They made the country realize that the Democratic Party was very much

I am interested that my Republican friends after 1928 raised the old question, "Is the Democratic Party dead?" The answer Mr. Shouse and Mr. Michaelson gave to that resulted in 1930 not only in the election of a Democratic House but in the election of more Democratic Governors and local officials than in any year since 1921.

These gentlemen deserve the gratitude of the party.

Who is Mr. John J. Raskob, referred to by the President? Why, he is the man who tried to elect Governor Smith President and Senator Robinson Vice President in 1928. He may not have been as skillful as chairman of the Democratic National Committee as Mr. Farley, but the record shows that he did some things that were at the time necessary and essential. He did that which no other man had ever done for any political party in the form of contributions.

On September 12, 1928, he contributed $50,000 to the Democratic National Committee. On October 3, 3 weeks later, he contributed another $50,000. On November 14 he loaned the committee $100,000, and during October and November the Democratic Party borrowed $1,500,000 from the County Trust Co. of New York upon the endorsement of Mr. Raskob. On April 25, 1929, after the election was over and the Democratic Party apparently was dead, Mr. Raskob contributed another $150,000 to the Democratic National Committee. A little later that year on two occasions he loaned the committee in the aggregate $40,000. In 1930, an election year, he loaned it $180,000; in 1931 the sum of $122,000; and then as they approached the campaign of 1932, when Mr. Roosevelt was the candidate, Mr. Raskob canceled two loans of $50,000 each, amounting in the aggregate of $100,000, and on October 21, 1932, just before the election, he contributed $25,000.

If we make a summary of these contributions and cancelations of loans, we find that between September 12, 1928, and October 21, 1932, Mr. Raskob contributed to the Democratic Party the huge sum of $375,000; and this in addition to the large loans he personally made, and other loans personally guaranteed.

Were these contributions made in an effort "to ridicule and drive back into the soup lines the great number of unemployed men and women who are simply asking an opportunity to earn a living for themselves and their families in the old-fashioned and respectable American way", as the Senator from Arkansas says the Liberty League is now trying

Was he endeavoring to elect a President in order to "preserve the liberty to exploit and profiteer upon the American people", as has been charged by the Senator from Texas? Such suggestions are childish and bear all the evidence of

Who are the Du Pont brothers of whom the Senator from Arkansas speaks? The Du Pont brothers, as we know them in Delaware, are Mr. Pierre S. Du Pont, Mr. Irénée Du Pont, and Mr. Lammot Du Pont, the only Du Ponts who take any interest in politics or make any substantial contributions. I assume the Senator from Arkansas referred to these brothers.

What do the records show with respect to their contributions? On August 15, 1928, we find Mr. Pierre S. Du Pont contributing the sum of $50,000 to the Democratic National Committee for the purpose of electing Smith and Robinson to the offices of President and Vice President, respectively. We find Mr. P. S. Du Pont contributing again on April 25, 1929, after the campaign is over, and when an effort is being made to revive the Democratic Party, the sum of $25,000. The only record I can find of contributions by Mr. P. S. Du Pont in 1932 is of one of $15,000, and perhaps it is because his contributions that year were not so great that President Roosevelt and the Democratic Senators have turned against him.

I had always understood that Mr. Irénée Du Pont had made a huge contribution to the Democratic campaign committee in 1932. But the only record that I can find is of April 4, 1933, and the contribution then amounted to $5,000.

These are two of the Du Pont brothers of whom the Senator from Arkansas speaks so sarcastically.

The other brother, Mr. Lammot Du Pont, who has always been a consistent Republican, made a contribution in 1932 to the Republican National Committee of $2,000.

Mr. Farley made no complaint about the Du Pont brothers and Mr. Raskob so long as they continued their large contributions to the Democratic Party. He made no complaint about Mr. Irénée Du Pont when he sent Mr. Farley a check for $5,000 just a month after Mr. Roosevelt was inaugurated.

In view of these facts it is rather remarkable to have Mr. Farley state:

They are ungrateful and they want the people of the United States to be just as ungrateful as they are.

If Mr. Farley had any real gratefulness in his own soul he would not make such violent attacks upon those who had been such a help to the party he now represents as national chairman.

If the members of the American Liberty League are making as much money as Mr. Farley says they are under the Roosevelt administration; if they are greedy men, endeavoring "to exploit and profiteer upon the American people"; if their only interest is in making money, and if they have no concern about the liberties of the American citizens, it is strange, to say the least, to find them contributing so generously to an organization that is attempting to defeat Mr. Roosevelt for reelection.

I have given the political background of Mr. Shouse, Mr. Raskob, and the Du Pont brothers, prior to the organization of the American Liberty League.

Now, let us turn to one who is better known to the American people, and particularly to the Democratic Party, and one who occupies an important place in this new organization, the former candidate for President on the Democratic ticket in 1928, Alfred E. Smith. I think it well at this point to read into the RECORD Mr. Roosevelt's former opinion of this great man, who has so disgraced himself in the eyes of the present administration by his activity in the Liberty League organization. It will be recalled that Mr. Roosevelt placed Governor Smith in nomination for President in New York on June 27, 1924, and on that occasion he said:

We need as President one in whom the masses of the people * * will regain their lost faith; * * * confidence and faith such as this have been won by the Governor of this State.

* * The honest business man knows that he has never sought personal preferment by demagogic attack on honest business.

* * This faith in him and in his fundamental rugged honesty, * are the reasons why this man above all others will bring order out of chaos in the National Capital.

* * His is a record of law enforcement. He believes that our Constitution needs no explaining, His record of 20 years as public servant proves that he stands on the Constitution from the first article to the seventh, and from the first amendment to the nine-teenth, inclusive. • • All the world loves a man who carves his own career. Much of the romance of Lincoln is in the life teenth, inclusive. * * All the world loves a man who carves his own career. Much of the romance of Lincoln is in the life story of our Governor. Born of American-born parents, he took upon his shoulders while still a boy the responsibility for the support of his family. A wage earner, willing with his hands, this man, in the space of 20 years, without fortune, without fortuitous aid, with nothing to rely upon except his own indomitable courage, his own unflagging perseverance, his own magnificent ability, has risen to be a commanding and outstanding figure in the life of the Nation. This he has done, not with the art of a demagogue, not with the wiles of a trickster, but with a dignity, a knowledge, and a wisdom that demonstrated him a statesman. Our Governor not only represents the common people but he embodies in his very being the aspirations of the average man, so that when he speaks with the voice of America, he burns with the fire of a divine humanity—the fire which has produced the greatest of leaders of the democracies of the world. * * His is the quality of militant leadership. * * He has the rare power to express the great fundamental truths and ideals in homely language carrying conviction to the multitude.

He has a power to strike at error and wrongdoing that makes his adversaries quall before him. He has a personality that carries to every hearer not only the sincerity but the righteousness of what he says. He is the "Happy Warrior" of the political battlefield. * If you will render your verdict in that sacred mood, it can only be for the nomination of the man whom

I present to you—the one above all others who has demonstrated his powers, his ability to govern; this leader whose whole career gives convincing proof of his power to lead; this warrior whose record shows him invincible in defense of right and in attack on this man, beloved by all, trusted by all, respected by all; this man of destiny whom our State proudly dedicates to the Nation-our own Alfred E. Smith.

I desire to repeat one phrase used in that speech:

The honest businessman knows that he has never sought personal preferment by demagogic attack on honest busine

I wonder whether any thinking and truthful person would dare to use that expression in reference to President

Exactly 4 years later Mr. Roosevelt again placed Governor Smith in nomination for President, and Mr. Roosevelt's admiration and praise of him had increased. In that speech Mr. Roosevelt said, among other things:

Slowly, surely the proper understanding of this man has spread from coast to coast, from north to south. He is well called "the Pathfinder to the open road for all true lovers of humanity."

Throughout that campaign, as well as the campaign of 1932, Roosevelt continued to praise and laud Smith.

Now let us see what the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] thought of the man Smith who headed the ticket in 1928, and on which the Senator from Arkansas was nominated as a candidate for Vice President.

On July 1, 1928, just after the nomination, the Senator from Arkansas had this to say:

More than any other man of his generation he is representative of that type of citizenship and public service which is never remote from the interest of the masses of this great country.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I should rather not yield, because Mr. ROBINSON. All right; go ahead.

Mr. HASTINGS. Because then we may perhaps get into a controversy.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no, Mr. President. I simply wished to ask the Senator what he said in 1928,

Mr. HASTINGS. In a telegram to Smith on that same day, the Senator from Arkansas said:

Your telegram happily recalls our intimate associations in previous campaigns. * * With a sympathy that embraces every race and creed, you have sought to be helpful to humanity and faithful to every public trust.

Three days later, July 4, the Senator from Arkansas still had a high opinion of Governor Smith, for he said:

All will recognize the magnetic and sympathetic qualities of this great political leader and will appreciate the courage, the fidelity, and the efficiency of the man.

On July 13, 9 days later, the Senator's opinion had not changed, for he said:

Governor Smith is admired and loved by the people of his State beyond any other public man of his generation. It is his sterling, fearless honesty and sincere attachment to the welfare and best of the general public which are the basis popularity.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will say to the Senator, who was not here when I began, that I particularly requested that I should not be interrupted until I finished my speech.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, very well.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Less than a week afterward the Senator from Arkansas followed his praise with this language:

Governor Smith has done more to bring the benefits of government to the masses of people and to make government humane than any other American statesman of the last 50 years. It is the faith in his loyalty and fidelity that has led millions to follow his leadership. His appeal goes directly to the multitudes who long for and deserve better fiving conditions.

Suspicion and hatred have searched every act of his life and have found him clean and incorruptible.

In strange contrast to these complimentary expressions from the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, I call the Senate's attention to his radio address, printed in the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD under date of January 30, showing the great strain and labor involved in his endeavor to answer the speech delivered by his old friend Smith at the American Liberty League dinner. As spokesman for and defender of the President, he turned his back upon his fellow nominee of the 1928 campaign, ignored the many complimentary expressions he had made regarding this Democratic leader, and practically charged him with having sold his political principles in order that he might associate with the wealthy Du Ponts and the wealthy Raskob. Ah! he must have overlooked those strenuous political days of 1928 and 1932, when Roosevelt, Smith, Robinson, Raskob, and the Du Ponts were truly buddies, all interested in the same cause.

I inquire of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas and other New Deal Senators, who may be able to speak for themselves and the President, whether they think they have kept faith with these Democrats who are so active in, if not actually controlling, the Liberty League. Who is it that has repudiated the principles of Jefferson, the principles of the Democratic Party? Is it these Democratic members of the Liberty League or the New Dealers?

I think no one can doubt the true answer to that question. The Democrats of the Liberty League have been consistent with Democratic principles and the Democratic platform of 1932. The New Dealers have violated nearly every declaration contained in that platform. The violation of the promise of economy in Government, sound money, no meddling and no competition with business enterprises, maintenance of States' rights, loyalty to the Constitution, and the violation of many other promises absolutely condemns the New Deal in the minds and hearts of those who believed in the Democratic platform of 1932. The Liberty League is only one of many organizations determined to end the New Deal as soon as possible.

Do not try to fool the people into believing that the league is acting for some selfish purpose. The thinking men and women of the Nation are frightened today for the safety of their country. The Democrats who supported Roosevelt in 1932 have been deceived, and no man has a right to complain if the persons whom he has deceived turn against him.

Do not blame the Republican Party for taking away from the Democratic Party the persons whom Democrats have always claimed as their own. There are about 100,000 members of the American Liberty League. A few of them are rich men, but 99 percent of them are just plain, ordinary folks. [Laughter in the galleries.] Twenty-three thousand individual men and women have been among the contributors to the funds of the league.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the galleries are not in order. I should like to have the Senator go back and read about two sentences. There was some noise in the galleries, and I could not hear what the distinguished Senator said.

Mr. HASTINGS. I thank the Senator.

A few of them are rich men, but 99 percent of them are just plain, ordinary folks. Twenty-three thousand individual men and women have been among the contributors to the funds of the league. A great majority of these members, both contributing and noncontributing, are Democrats who do not believe in the New Deal. This administration has lost them because it has violated its trust. Admit this as a fact; it will be good for your souls.

Mr. Farley tells us this is to be a dirty campaign, but I hope he is mistaken. I hope he will not persuade his friends in the Senate to adopt any such course. There has been some evidence of it, but that is because some Senators take their politics too seriously. Mr. Farley is not paying much attention to what Senators say or do. He is relying upon his own skill and the fortunate position of Mr. Hopkins, plus the brains and position of Mr. Wallace and Mr. Tugwell. They are the boys who have the Federal money; they are the boys who can give; they are the boys who can take away. Mr. Farley knows how to take advantage of situations like this.

In addition to that, I beg the New Deal Senators to let up a little in your demagogic appeals to your "forgotten man."

Do not be afraid to give the public all the facts about relief, the W. P. A., the A. A. A., the Florida canal, the Passamaquoddy project, the St. Louis $30,000,000 memorial to Jefferson, and all the thousand and one other new-fangled schemes to waste the people's money. Are you afraid you will lose the votes of those on relief when it is ultimately shown how favoritism has been practiced in administering that fund?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware declines to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will not the Senator yield for one question?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; I will not yield at all. I will be through in a minute.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. HASTINGS. And the Senator from Arkansas can then say what he pleases.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why does the Senator ask questions if he does not want answers to them?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; I do not want any answers now.

Are you alarmed at the admission of Mr. Harry Hopkins that he would consider himself a damn fool if he did not select New Dealers to help him distribute the huge fund in his possession? Remember, the caution of some of his aides that:

> Not a citizen shall shiver Or go hungry in this section (If we're certain they'll "deliver" In the '36 election.)

We relieve the starved and frozen With no hesitance or parley, (If the politics they've chosen Are approved by Mr. Farley!)

Do not be ashamed to admit that in all parts of the country the New Deal is "playing politics with human misery" by requiring those who seek employment or relief from appointees of Hopkins that they register as Democrats and pledge themselves to vote the Democratic ticket. Do not be alarmed over the recent discovery that under a plea that the poor farmer must be relieved the processing tax was levied, a tax which has closed many factories, thrown thousands of people out of work, in order that Mr. Wallace might, among other generous acts, be able to place million dollar checks in the hands of some southern corporations for agreeing not to do things. Do not let Mr. Wallace frighten you by making you believe there is danger of the farmer's daughter being kidnaped.

All these things may go a long way in losing you the election, and, while to lose the election may hurt your pride, there is just one very important thing to remember and one which ought to console you, and that is that for the Democrats to lose the next election means that the country will be greatly benefited; and that ought to be some satisfaction to real patriots like yourselves. Indeed many people think that unless Mr. Roosevelt is defeated our Constitution and our whole democratic form of government will be gone before the end of another 4 years.

Personally I doubt whether you can do that, but I do feel sure that you will not be able to find jobs for the 12,626,000 people now out of work, and, more than that, I am afraid another 4 years of Roosevelt will mean that the Federal Treasury will be "busted." Of course, if you had kept your promises and followed the Democratic platform of 1932, you would not be in such an embarrassing position. You would have Shouse, Raskob, Al Smith, John W. Davis, Pierre S. Du Pont, Irénée Du Pont, Jim Reed, Bainbridge Colby, Lew Douglas, George Peek, and thousands of others who supported you in 1932 back of you now, but remember you let Roosevelt lead you into this New Deal and you have been following the shirt tail of the New Deal, believing it to be a symbol of utopia and "the more abundant life." I appreciate that you cannot turn back; you have gone too far; but think what a job you are going to have writing the Democratic platform for the 1936 election. How can you expect the people to forget the promises you and Mr. Roosevelt made in 1932 and then broke? The Senator from Arkansas has not forgotten what Lincoln said about fooling the people, for he quoted it in a speech he made a few days ago. Remembering that quotation, you certainly cannot expect the people of the country to pay any attention to your 1936 platform, or President Roosevelt's promise to live up to it.

The only thing you can do in order to be consistent in your 1936 platform is to make no specific promises other than to say that the New Deal Congress will do what President Roosevelt wants it to do, and that the President will decide from day to day what he wants done. This will be in complete accord with the record of this miscalled Democratic administration.

I suppose you will feel compelled to continue your demagogic appeals to the poor and against the rich, but the poor are intelligent, too, and you cannot hide from them what this administration has done and what it has failed to do.

At any rate, in my judgment, you will lose the next election or the country will be in very real trouble; and, so far as I am concerned, I welcome the efforts of every organization, every newspaper, every Democrat in the effort to see that this is the last year of the Roosevelt administration.

Now I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Delaware has concluded, I am going to take the floor.

Mr. HASTINGS. Very well. Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, we have just witnessed a remarkable performance. The Senator from Delaware has read a carefully prepared speech; he has asked questions of the Senator from Arkansas and other Democratic Senators and refused to permit answers.

O Mr. President, the Senator has become the champion of former Governor Smith and he quotes what I said about Governor Smith when Governor Smith was right, but he does not quote what the Senator from Delaware said about Governor Smith when the Governor was right. He prefers to quote him when Governor Smith is wrong and when the Senator from Delaware is wrong, as he usually is wrong. [Laughter.] Oh, ye gods and little angels, think of Al Smith in company with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings]! [Laughter.] All that Al Smith stood for before the present campaign the Senator from Delaware stood against, and one element of proof which should convince former Governor Smith that he is getting in bad company when he lines up with the Liberty League and its champion in the United States Senate, the Senator from Delaware, is that the Senator gives Governor Smith a long-belated justification and vindication. I do not know whether it would have helped Governor Smith and the Democratic ticket in 1928-

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President-

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no; sit down and take your medicine. The gall of the Senator who asked another Senator dozens of question in his speech and then refused to permit an answer, and then, when the other Senator waits until he has his own time, immediately begins trying to heckle him!

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no. The Senator from Delaware is not recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas declines to yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President-

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Delaware will take his medicine. Of course, I will not yield to the Senator from Delaware. Why should I yield to him? He had all the time that he wanted and he refused to yield to me or to anyone else. Now, the unmitigated gall of a man that will pursue that course and then demand the right to be yielded to! The Senator from Delaware has become the champion of the Liberty League. If anyone here has any doubt as to what the effect and trend of the Liberty League is in American politics and American history he will have that doubt removed now. The Senator from Delaware is its only defender. He has assumed to make a defense of Governor Smith, no doubt on the theory that while Al is "walking" around he may walk into that unlighted and deserted camp where the Senator from Delaware dwells almost alone. But Al will not make that mistake. Al may have made a mistake when he parted companionship with his friends and supporters of 1928 and joined those who are championing the very causes against which he fought in 1928; but he will not make the mistake of going the whole limit and going to bed with the Senator from Delaware. It is said that "politics makes strange bed fellows", but it has never made such bedfellows yet as former Governor Smith and the Senator from Delaware. [Laughter.]

Why would not the Senator from Delaware yield? would he not let us answer the questions he was asking? Then, having pursued that course, why does he himself insist on asking questions of the very Senator to whom he had refused to yield?

The Senator from Delaware quoted my comments on Governor Smith in the campaign of 1928. I take pride in those quotations. Governor Smith then stood with the masses against the classes; he stood in opposition to the Senator from Delaware and all that the Senator from Delaware stands for, and the fact that the Senator from Delaware is now his champion is almost conclusive evidence, I think, of two circumstances, namely, that he thinks Governor Smith has gone wrong from the standpoint of the general public and that he thinks Governor Smith will join him in his fight on the Democratic Party. You can say what you please, you can talk as much as you please about what you think of Democratic principles, but you were never, Mr. Senator from Delaware, the judge of what are Democratic principles and, thank God, I do not believe you ever will be.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, of course, the Senator from Arkansas was clearly justified, I suppose, in refusing to yield to me because I had refused to yield to him. You know, however, Mr. President, that to yield to the Senator from Arkansas means the chances are that you will not be able to finish your speech the same day. As a general thing, when one yields to him the Senator from Arkansas proceeds to make a speech, and he cannot be stopped, and I wanted to be certain that I would finish my speech today.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HASTINGS. No; not just for a minute. [Laughter.] The Senator from Arkansas complained so much about my not yielding to him that I supposed, of course, he would not be as unreasonable as I was, and that he would yield to me.

I was going to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question or two.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator let me answer them? Mr. HASTINGS. I assume if the Senator thinks it is worth while he will answer them. Does the Senator think he has answered the speech I just made?

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator think he made a speech? What makes the Senator think he made a speech?

Mr. HASTINGS. Because it scared the Senator from Arkansas so much that he wanted to ask me questions. That is the reason why I thought I was making a speech.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator from Delaware think we are entitled to a little amusement here sometimes? [Laughter.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Well, well! A little amusement?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. I was amused at the speech of the Senator from Delaware. Everybody else was amused, though most of us could not understand why he made it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Then, why does the Senator complain about it?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have not complained. I am just rejoicing over it.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator is rejoicing over it?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator must realize that it is quite worth while to do something on this side of the Chamber once in a while that is satisfactory to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Every time the Senator from Delaware performs it pleases me because he always adds strength to the Democratic Party. Out in Illinois the other day there was a Roosevelt got 1,375,000 votes, in round primary contest. numbers, and two hungry contesting candidates for the Presidential nomination on a ticket-let me see! What was that ticket? Oh, yes; it was the Republican ticket. [Laughter.] They got far less than one-half the votes that Mr. Roosevelt got in the same State. Though the Senator from Delaware will make as many more speeches as he desires, he will not make any more votes at all for his party.

Mr. HASTINGS. That illustrates the trouble with yielding to the Senator from Arkansas. He not only asks a question but he then proceeds to answer it himself.

Mr. ROBINSON. No one else can answer it so well. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator is very fortunate if he can answer his own questions.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is better than the Senator from Delaware can do.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the Senator want me to yield some more? Does he want to make another speech, or does he want to ask some more questions?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have not asked the Senator to yield.

I just had to take my own time.

Mr. HASTINGS. I called attention to the fact, and I want to emphasize it, that the Senator from Arkansas is proud of what he said about Smith in 1928. I have called attention to what the Democratic Party stood for in 1932 when Smith was supporting it, when the Senator from Arkansas was supporting it, and when all the New Dealers over on the other side of the Chamber were supporting it. I have called attention to the fact that the only thing Smith complained about was that the Democratic Party had not lived up to its platform.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HASTINGS. No; not for the moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator will not yield? Mr. HASTINGS. Not for a moment. I will tell the Senator when I am ready to yield, and then if he wants to make another speech he can do so.

I called attention to the fact that there was a Democratic platform in 1932. The complaint Smith makes about that platform in the speech that he made at the $5-a-plate dinner following the $50-a-plate New Deal dinner was that his party had not followed that platform. It was that to which I was calling attention. I did not say I ever agreed with the 1932 platform of the Democratic Party.

I am calling attention to the fact, which I think is important, that when members of the Democratic Party complain about Smith or anybody else leaving it, they ought at the same time to remember how they have violated their own trust to the American people. They ought to remember the platform upon which they were elected, and they ought to know that any reasonable man, whether he be Smith or anybody else, is justified in leaving the New Deal Party when it refuses to live up to that kind of a platform. I say to the Senator from Arkansas that, in my judg-

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Just a moment. I say to the Senator from Arkansas that the great disappointment of thousands of his friends in the country is due to the fact that he has swallowed the New Deal and has gone along with it against the Democratic platform of 1932. He is not the same kind of a Democrat he was when he ran with Smith in 1928. He is not the same kind of a Democrat he was when Roosevelt was elected in the fall of 1932. I repeat, he followed the shirt tail of the New Deal, believing it to be a symbol of utopia and "the more abundant life." Either that, or he believed it the best way to keep his political party in the hands of Roosevelt and his followers.

I have not defended Smith. I have not defended the Liberty League. What I have done-and I think it was worth while-was to call attention to the fact that Democrats control the Liberty League, and they have left what is called now the Democratic Party, because the Democratic Party has left what it stood for in 1932. No one can complain of

Mr. President, I am not going to yield any more, and I am not going to talk any more now, so the Senator from Arkansas may take the floor and say what he pleases. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what is it that has made the Senator from Delaware angry?

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, I could not get angry with the Senator from Arkansas if I tried.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why all this storm?

Mr. HASTINGS. Even when I am in a good humor, I do not storm as much as the Senator from Arkansas does. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON. It is just a brain storm. Can it be true that this fulmination to which we have listened represents the first product of the Republican "brain trust."

I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware what he has to say about "brain trusts." Ordinarily, when he rises to address the Senate, he has some criticism to make of the "brain trust"; but now that Mr. Henry P. Fletcher has a "brain trust" of his own, composed of 52 chosen college professors, I should like to have the Senator from Delaware explain why it is that he has nothing further to say about "brain trusts."

He said he did not defend Governor Smith. I did not bring Governor Smith's name into the discussion. I did not mention the Liberty League first. If the Senator from Delaware was not defending Smith, what in the name of common sense was he doing? What does he think he was doing? Does he know what he is doing any of the time when he speaks? Does he always speak without knowing what he is saying? [Laughter.] Has he no end in view except to abuse the President of the United States?

He has a confused notion that he is going to make the New Deal unpopular. As a matter of fact, every time the Senator from Delaware speaks or every time any other spokesman of the Liberty League speaks, the New Deal becomes more popular, and Roosevelt gets more and more votes whenever a primary or an election is held. If the Republicans will only continue to recognize the leadership of the Senator from Delaware when he chooses his candidate for the Presidency and proclaims his support of him, we Democrats are confident that his candidate will not get any votes at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not desire to add to the discussion which has been going on, but let me quote from a very great statesman whose name has been brought into this debate: "Let us look at the record." That is what I propose to do.

I do not believe that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] is sufficiently appreciative of the embarrassment on the other side of the Chamber. Of course, they have to indulge in generalities.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from New York will make me very happy if he will show me how to be more appreciative of the embarrassment of Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator lacks appreciation of the embarrassment the other side fears by insisting that the Senator from Delaware yield for a question. Is there not the apprehension across the aisle that attention might be called to the record of the New Deal administration, compared to the generalities which we constantly hear from apposition Senators? I am one of those who sympathize with them in their distress at this time, when they are groping for a candidate as well as groping for a platform. They have become so hopeless and so helpless that now they are calling upon 58 college professors from all over the country to help them find a way out.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, did the Senator say "groping" or "griping"? [Laughter.]

Mr. WAGNER. The only contribution I want to make to the discussion is to give some statistics of the record of the Roosevelt administration in comparison with the Hoover administration.

During the Hoover administration industrial employment decreased 44 percent.

During the Roosevelt administration industrial employment increased 43 percent.

During the Hoover administration unemployment increased by over 12,000,000, or multiplied four times, and this does not take into consideration those already unemployed when the Hoover administration succeeded the preceding Republican administration.

Total unemployment decreased by 5,000,000, or by onethird, during the Roosevelt administration.

Factory pay rolls decreased by 66 percent during the Hoover administration.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WAGNER. Just 1 minute.

During the Roosevelt administration, factory pay rolls increased by 108 percent, or by about $2,000,000,000 per annum.

Let me read these figures, and then I will yield to the Senator.

Industrial production decreased by 50 percent during the Hoover administration. I appreciate the Senator's embarrassment.

During the Roosevelt administration industrial production increased by 96 percent, more than $33,000,000,000 in value per annum.

Earnings of 161 representative business concerns decreased by 90 percent during the Hoover administration.

Earnings of 161 representative business concerns during the Roosevelt administration increased by 316 percent. I am giving these figures as of 2 months ago, and the condition has become even better since then.

The votes in Illinois and other places are accounted for in the light of these facts, and the Senator's party knows what is going to happen to it.

The annual volume of business failures increased by $435,000,000 during the Hoover administration.

The annual volume of business failures decreased by $698,-000,000 during the Roosevelt administration.

Security values on the New York Stock Exchange fell by 67 percent during the Hoover administration.

Security values on the New York Stock Exchange rose by 162 percent, or $31,000,000,000, during the Roosevelt administration.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WAGNER. Wait until I finish. I know the Senator from Delaware does not care to listen to this.

Mr. HASTINGS. I merely wished to ask the Senator whether or not the figures he is giving are New Deal figures.

Mr. WAGNER. I know these figures are not pleasant to Mr. WAGNER. I know these figures are not pleasant to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. Are the figures the result of the New Deal mathematics?

Mr. WAGNER. No; they are from independent authoritative sources. The New York Times today has an editorial stating that we are within 2 percent of normal in industrial production.

Mr. HASTINGS. Let me inquire about the Senator's labor figures. I should like to know where he gets the labor figures he has quoted.

Mr. WAGNER. From different statistical sources which are independent. One is the National City Bank.

Mr. HASTINGS. Are they American Federation of Labor figures?

Mr. WAGNER. No; although they also are accurate.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator does not pay any attention to those figures.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from New York got a great many of his figures from Republican newspapers throughout the country, did he not? They have been publishing such figures everywhere?

Mr. WAGNER. I can understand why the Senator from Delaware wishes to leave the Chamber. I know he does not care for any more statistics of this kind.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. What I cannot understand is why the Senator from New York should ever conceive or imagine facts. [Laughter.]

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Now let me go on. I desire to finish this table.

Department store sales decreased by 48 percent during the Hoover administration.

Department store sales increased 43 percent, or about $4,500,000,000 per year, during the Roosevelt administra-

Bank failures rose to 1,456 per year during the Hoover administration.

Bank failures have been reduced to 34 per year during the Roosevelt administration.

Just see that comparison!

The annual number of real-estate foreclosures increased by 233 percent during the Hoover administration.

Over 2,000,000 urban and rural families have been saved from eviction during the Roosevelt administration.

Farm bankruptcies and foreclosures increased during the Hoover administration by 177 percent.

Farm bankruptcies and foreclosures have decreased by more than 90 percent during the Roosevelt administration.

Annual farm income decreased by $6,000,000,000 during the Hoover administration.

Annual farm income has increased by almost $3,000,000,000 during the Roosevelt administration.

Home building during the Hoover administration decreased by 87 percent.

Home building has increased by over 100 percent during the Roosevelt administration.

Total construction decreased during the Hoover administration by 89 percent.

Total construction has increased during the Roosevelt administration by 278 percent.

Foreign trade decreased during the Hoover administration by 67 percent.

Foreign trade increased by 48 percent, or more than $1,300,000,000 per annum, during the Roosevelt adminis-

Annual national income decreased by $30,000,000,000 during the Hoover administration.

Annual national income has increased by over $12,000,-000,000 during the Roosevelt administration.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the Senator explain to the country, under all those conditions, why it is that more than twelve and a half million persons are out of jobs? I should like to have him answer that question.

Mr. WAGNER. Let me say to the Senator from Delaware that there are not quite that many. There are about eleven million; and as conditions improve we are going to reabsorb them. I will give the Senator, however, one of the reasons why there has not been the increase that there should have been, and that is because the National Recovery Act was held unconstitutional.

Mr. HASTINGS. Whose fault was it that that act was held unconstitutional? [Laughter.]

Mr. WAGNER. Well, let us not go into that question; but, as a matter of fact, the unemployment throughout the country was gradually being absorbed as a result of the code provisions of the National Recovery Act. Hours were being decreased rapidly, until we were getting below 40 hours per week. Child labor had been practically abolished throughout the country, and its abolition took over a million children out of industry.

Now what has happened? Since the National Recovery Act was declared unconstitutional hours have increased, and at the same time wages have not increased. The result has been that by the extension of hours the productive capacity per worker has been increased, and he has not been given the necessary purchasing power to absorb the very products which we are producing.

The New Deal did everything in its power to bring about a reduction of hours for the purpose of absorbing many of the unemployed. Now, with a free hand under the laissez that the Senator from Delaware would be interested in | faire doctrine, hours have increased. In some instances they have gone from 38 and 40 hours up to 50 and 60 hours per week. That is the reason why there has been a retardment of unemployment absorption.

We had brought to this country one of the greatest blessings of modern times when we practically abolished child labor; but since the National Recovery Act was declared unconstitutional children are going back into industry and thus taking away jobs from adults. That has been one of the most serious contributing factors to the slowness of reemployment. Of course, the other factor has been thisand the New Deal is not by any means finished.

Mr. HASTINGS. When will it be finished? Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator be patient just a moment?

We have the great problem of technological unemployment. During the depression particularly machinery was invented to decrease the force of workers required for production, thus substituting machinery for men.

Take, for instance, the automobile industry: Last year it increased its production by about 45 percent, but employment increased by only 81/2 percent. That disparity was due to two things: The lengthening of hours because we were without laws to prevent it, and the invention of machinery. That presents a very important question, which the President recognizes. He called attention to that fact in his Baltimore address. It is one of the great problems to which we must address ourselves. We may talk as we like about local regulation, but unless there is some universal rule in the matter of hours of employment, plus minimum wages, we shall never solve the unemployment problem.

The reason is very obvious. I am not, by this statement, attacking generally the desire of most of our employers of labor to give a decent, fair wage, and to set decent hours. The difficulty is with the 10 percent who, through their exploitation of adult workers and of children, drag down the rest of the industry; and while for a time the fair majority have tried to keep up with the code provisions as to hours and minimum wages, they have had to give way because the unscrupulous minority, the 10 percent, who have been increasing hours of labor, reducing wages, and reemploying children.

The Senator speaks of the New Deal. What did you do? During all the time you were in power you never attempted to deal with these questions, you never had a concern about preventing the exploitation of our children, or reducing the hours of labor to decent standards, or providing a minimum wage so as to put competition on the basis of efficiency rather than on the basis of exploitation. The moment we came into power we addressed ourselves to these problems, and I think we were well on the way to their solution, so far as hours and wages and child labor were concerned, when the N. R. A. law was declared unconstitutional.

Of course, there were many constitutional difficulties with which we had to deal, and there also crept into being some unfortunate administrative practices, for instance, price fixing. I have never believed in that.

It was never intended that that should be permitted under the N. R. A., and I doubt even to this day whether it was not a derogation of the N. R. A. Act to permit any industries to fix prices. But, aside from that, we are meeting the major problems, and we are on our way to their solution.

The American people are going to keep in office the great man who is now President, this man of vision, who concerns himself with the underprivileged and the unfortunate, who concerns himself with lifting them up to a better and a more abundant economic life. It is a fortunate thing for the country that we have such a leader in this day of trial and crisis.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I should like to ask two or three questions before the Senator sits down. I will ask them all before I get him to answer any of them.

My recollection is that the average of unemployed for the years 1930, 1931, and 1932 was a little more than 8,000,000, while for 1933, 1934, and 1935 there were more than 12,000,000 unemployed, an increase of 4,000,000.

I should like to inquire of the Senator whether or not he thinks there can be any real recovery without finding jobs for the 11,000,000, or practically all of them. Can there be any real prosperity in this country, the kind of prosperity that can be bragged about by the New Deal or any other administration, before those 11,000,000 people find suitable jobs? That is one question.

Mr. WAGNER. One at a time.
Mr. HASTINGS. I should like to complete my questions.

Mr. WAGNER. Let me answer one at a time, if I can

Mr. HASTINGS. Very well. Mr. WAGNER. I do not at all agree with the Senator's premise that during 1931 and 1932 there were only four or five million unemployed.

Mr. HASTINGS. I did not say that. I said that in 1930, 1931, and 1932 there was an average of something over 8,000,000, and that in 1933, 1934, and 1935 there was an average of over 12,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield. Mr. BARKLEY. It is unfair to take an average over 3 years. The truth is that on the 4th of March 1933 there were between fourteen and fifteen million unemployed.

Mr. HASTINGS. In answer to that, let me say that this administration has been in power all those years with the exception of 2 months. If you desire to take credit for the 2 months, very well.

Mr. WAGNER. We restored employment in private industry by over 4,000,000 people, and, as I said before, if it had not been for some difficulties which arose in our courts. we would have been well on our way to absorbing a great many more.

I hope what I shall now say will not be regarded as immodest, but the records will show that back in March 1928 I made a speech in the Senate in which I called attention to the fact-and many of my colleagues agreed with methat we were on the way to a depression. There were at least 5,000,000 people out of work at that time. Of course, I was attacked by the Republican press throughout the country, which said that I was simply attempting to minimize Coolidge prosperity, although at the time unemployment was increasing at a rapid rate.

I had a controversy with the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Davis], who at that time was Secretary of Labor. I asked for a report, and I do not think the report I received was quite clear to anyone in the Senate-At any rate, it did not refute the charge I made. But the situation kept getting worse and worse, and in 1929, of course, it had to break. There were the unemployed, and we -had no accurate method of counting them. I tried for several years to get legislation through this body providing for making a count of our unemployed, and finally, in the last year of the Hoover administration, the President did sign a bill, introduced by me, enlarging the Bureau of Labor Statistics in the Department of Labor, now the Bureau is attempting to give us some fair statistics, at least as to the trend of employment and unemployment; although the figures are not complete.

We on this side of the Chamber were conscious in 1931 and 1932 of the serious conditions which existed in the country. Some of the Senators on the other side, whom we term the "progressive" Republicans, were equally concerned with conditions, and we coalesced with them and proposed legislation. We proposed the first legislation to feed the hungry. At the end of 1931, and in 1932, President Hoover was hesitant even to support legislation which would give to the States the opportunity to borrow money from the Federal Government so that they could feed their unemployed.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is the Senator sure about that?

Mr. WAGNER. I am sure about it, because the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], and myself were the authors of the legislation, and it was enacted. I went to President Hoover and pleaded with him, and finally he consented to legislation which provided an appropriation of $500,000,000. Even then our legislation could not receive Presidential approval until we provided a method of loans, so that a State would be obligated to repay at some time or other. Of course, the situation became so much worse later on that we abandoned the idea of loans, and regarded the problem of assistance as a national responsibility.

Mr. HASTINGS. Now, will the Senator vield?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator has asked me a lot of questions. He has asked what we were trying to do on this side.

At the same time we proposed a large public-works program for the purpose of putting the unemployed to work by taking up the slack in industry; but we did not get anywhere with that for a long time. We finally secured legislation which, I think, provided for a $300,000,000 public-works program, although all of the expenditures were not made.

Conditions grew worse and worse and worse, and you became so perplexed as to how to deal with this problem that you finally became helpless, and of course the American people had to take on the New Deal, and they did so.

Mr. HASTINGS. Now, will the Senator yield for one question?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I desire to inquire whether the Senator from New York gives credit to this administration, and undertakes to take credit for it with the people of the country, for the enactment of the N. R. A. and the A. A. A.

Mr. WAGNER. I was one of the authors of the N. R. A. Act. Many have been named as its authors, and I do not want to claim any exceptional credit, but I am one of those who sat down and helped to draft the N. R. A. Act. We had to work pretty fast. It is easy now to sit here comfortably and consider that act, but at that time the country was in a real crisis. We were really on the point of economic and social disintegration. I do not think all of the people of the country realize the situation that existed in March 1933—the sort of ship of state you left us.

I do not think the critics are as jubilant now as they were right after the law was declared unconstitutional. Not only labor, but industry, came to us and pleaded with us to pass legislation so that we might again integrate industry. I see the picture now of what occurred after the bill was introduced. I appeared before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, and on one side of me was the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce and on the other side was the president of the American Federation of Labor.

All three of us joined in our appeal to the House Ways and Means Committee to pass the legislation, and pass it as rapidly as possible, in order to save the industries of the country. The legislation was passed, and it did save the industries of the country.

As I said, I have not approved of all which was done in the administration of the act. That, however, is the history of the legislation. The Senator from Delaware does not seem to be interested any more, but I hope I have given him the information he desired.

As to the A. A. A., I must say that I am not an authority upon agricultural legislation. I voted for the original A. A. A. legislation because I was against what was happening to the farmers of the country. Just before Mr. Roosevelt took office we read of the foreclosures which were taking place throughout the country. Farmer after farmer was losing his home and farm. Homesteads which had been in the family for 50 or 60 years were being lost, and you did nothing about it.

Mr. HASTINGS. What did you do?

Mr. WAGNER. What did we do?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. We saved over half a million homes for farmers in the United States. That is what we did.

Mr. HASTINGS. With an unconstitutional act. Mr. WAGNER. What unconstitutional act? I am talking about the Farm Credit Administration now. You asked us what we did.

Mr. HASTINGS. That was a Republican proposition. Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no, no.

I might have played a role which is unfamiliar to the Senator, but it so happened-I must use the "I"-it so happened that I was chairman of the subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee which had in its charge the Farm Credit Administration bill, and as authorized by the full committee I reported that measure to the Senate, and we enacted it into law. Then it became an amendment to the A. A. A. legislation. That was a measure conceived by us, because we saw homes going one after the other, and we acted in time to save many of them, so that today over a half million farm homes are saved which otherwise would have been lost. From the two standpoints of humanity and economics it was one of the greatest achievements of this administration

Not only have we done that, but we have increased the income of the farmer so that now he can again pay his interest, he can again pay the installment upon his mortgage, and he is well on the way to a more prosperous era.

You ask us what we did. Ask the farmers of the country what we did for them. We did more than that. The home owners of the country were losing their homes through foreclosure. Foreclosures were being made right and left in my own State and all over the country. The people were helpless, being out of employment, they could not pay either the interest or any installments upon their mortgages, and they were on the point of losing their homes. The home is the basis of our whole American civilization.

We saved over 2,000,000 homes. Think of it, Senators of the United States, this administration has saved over 2,000,-000 homes for the American home owner, who but for our intervention would have been lost, and in many cases ruination would have resulted to their families.

Do not ask us what we did. The answer is plain. That is the reason you are going to have difficulty in getting a candidate. You are now looking for somebody who is unknown, who has done nothing, hoping that, perhaps, in that way you may sail in, but you are mistaken about that. You must face the facts and the record, and you cannot do away with them. That is the reason you have practically given up this election. I have heard some distinguished Republicans say, "Well, we are going to prepare for 1940. We cannot do anything now, but maybe our opponents will make some mistake in the next 4 years, and in 1940 we are going to come into power." That is a long way off, but the people of the United States are through with reaction. They have had experience under reactionary administrations for some 12 years, and you left them at a point where they were threatened with economic and social disintegration. The people of the country are never going back to those days. They are never going back to the days when the kind of policies in which the Senator from Delaware believes are to control. It cannot be done. So give it up.

Mr. DAVIS obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. A few days ago Mr. Alfred P. Sloan, president of the General Motors Corporation, made a statement which I believe was in the form of a report of some kind to his board of directors to the effect that the policies of the Roosevelt administration were retarding recovery. The General Motors Corporation, as we all know, is owned very largely by the Du Ponts and Mr. Raskob and Mr. Sloan and men of that particular association.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a statement concerning the General Motors Corporation which appeared in the Wall Street Journal, showing the enormous increase in the sales and the profits of the General Motors Corporation, and showing that in March 1936 it sold more automobiles and made larger profits than in any previous month in its history except the month of May 1928.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal]

GENERAL MOTORS SALES IN SHARP MARCH GAIN, 89.1 PERCENT OVER FEBRUARY-RETAIL MARK BEST SINCE MAY 1928-FIRST QUARTER SHIPMENTS RUN FAR AHEAD OF 1935 PERIOD

Showing the sharpest seasonal gain over February in at least 10 years, General Motors reported domestic retail sales for March of 181,782 units, a new high record for the month and comparing with 96,134 units in preceding month and 126,691 in March 1935. March retail sales showed an increase of 89.1 percent over February compared with an increase of 63.9 percent in March 1935 over the preceding month and a 66.6-percent gain in March 1934 retail sales over February of that year.

the preceding month and a conspectory gain in second for that sales over February of that year.

Retail sales in March not only established a record for that month but exceeded every month in company's history except the record of May 1928 when General Motors delivered to consumers in United States 186,892 units.

First-quarter retail sales broke all records for that period, exceeding the previous best first quarter, 1929, by almost 29,000

March sales to all dealers in United States and Canada, together with overseas shipments, reached 196,721 units, the highest peak since June 1929.

DEALERS' STOCKS REDUCED

The March sales report discloses a substantial reduction dealers' stocks during the month. Sales to dealers in United States in March totaled 162,418 units while sales to consumers totaled 181,782 units. This reduction of 19,364 units in dealers' inventories appears to indicate that production during current month will be maintained at least as high as March levels while some divisions undoubtedly will increase production.

Dealers' stocks of new cars at end of March were shown to be 79.139 units higher than at the end of first quarter of 1935.

First-quarter sales to all dealers in United States and Canada plus overseas shipments were reported at 500,167 compared with 495,506 units in final quarter of 1935 and 499,844 units in second quarter of 1935.

NET AT $1.18 A SHARE

With sales totaling almost half a million cars in the final quarter of last year, General Motors reported net income of $1.18 a share on common stock. Per-share earnings for second quarter of last were equivalent to $1.17 a share on common stock.

The following tables compare General Motors Corporation's monthly sales since 1932:

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. DAVIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. A few moments ago the Senator from Delaware asked the Senator from New York concerning the source of his statistics, and I believe the Senator from Delaware implied in his question that the statistics came from labor sources. I desire to give some statistics which may be gathered from headlines appearing in one of the most reliable Republican newspapers in this country, the Evening Star, of Washington City. Today's issue of the Star has just come to me, and I turn to page A-13 and find headlines such as these on the financial pages of that paper:

B. & O. net reaches $24,298,956.

In the next column:

Steel rate soars to 70½ percent.

Institute declares further sharp gain in week's mill operations.

I turn to the next page—and I shall take but a small portion of the Senator's time-and read:

Advertising total up 2.9 percent from last year. Bar silver price boosted again to 45%-cent mark. Stocks improve—

Here is the headline of another column.

Stocks improve as volume lags.

I desire to call special attention to the next one, because the Senator from Delaware has been defending the Du Ponts. Listen to this:

Du Pont profits increase sharply.

We have not had any such headlines in the newspapers for many years; and these headlines appear in this afternoon's newspaper, which has just come to me.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, does that item state whether the profits of the Du Ponts accrued from their munitions business or their farm business?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am going to read just a small portion of the article.

Mr. BLACK. I desired that to be clear, because the Senator may not be familiar with the fact that the Du Ponts have been contributing to a farm organization as farmers.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think they take a very active hand all along the line in our economic business.

Du Ponts profit increase sharply. Estimated at $1.21 a share in quarter, against 85 cents in 1935.

Here are these very people, to whom prosperity has come under a Democratic administration, joining the Liberty League to put out of business the party which has done so much for them.

So, Mr. President, when the Senator from Delaware wished to know the authority for these statements, and wished to know where the statistics came from, he need not go to any statistical bureau. All he needs to do is to read Republican newspapers, which tell the truth about the growing and returning prosperity of the country.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not desire to take the Senator's time, but I am sure he would be interested also in what I desire to place in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. George in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I wonder if the Senator will yield to me. I wish to place in the RECORD at this point the poll which was taken by the American Institute of Public Opinion, which appeared in the Sunday newspapers throughout the country, with reference to the feeling of the people of the country on the question of shorter hours of labor.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the marked portion of the page which I send to the desk, showing the vote in a poll taken by the American Institute of Public Opinion on shorter hours of labor throughout the country, showing that 76 percent of the people who voted voted in favor of shortening the hours of labor and 24 percent voted against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Birmingham News-Age-Herald, of Apr. 19, 1936] PLANK FOR SHOETER HOURS OF LABOR FAVORED IN NATIONAL POLL— AMERICA SPEAKS ON PLAN FOR REDUCING UNEMPLYMENT—"DO YOU FAVOR SHORTENING THE HOURS OF LABOR?"-YES, 76 PERCENT; NO, 24 PERCENT

SERVICES OF BUREAU OF MINES TO PITTSBURGH DURING RECENT FLOODS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, flood control is a national problem. No program of harnessing our rivers will succeed until we control the waters at their source by constructing a system of reservoirs and dams. I have heretofore stated on the floor of the Senate that we will be guilty of neglect if we shall not take practical measures to protect the lives and property of the people whose destiny is so closely allied with proper flood-control projects.

I wish to take this opportunity, Mr. President, to make a statement as to the outstanding services during the recent floods rendered by the United States Bureau of Mines to the city of Pittsburgh. Recently I called the attention of the Senate to some of the important and far-reaching services the United States Bureau of Mines has rendered and is rendering for the benefit of the mineral industries, not only in connection with development, production, processing, and other operations in mining but also in the saving of human life and limb. The record was an imposing one, and one of which all of us should be proud. My State has just had a fine demonstration of the wonderful capacity of this governmental organization to help not only those engaged in mining but the community at large.

Organized as it is for the performance of specific types of research and service work connected with mining, its usefulness to the public was amply demonstrated by the part its safety workers took in helping to handle the dangerous conditions left by the disastrous flood which so sorely afflicted the great city of Pittsburgh in the latter part of March.

The Bureau of Mines has maintained at Pittsburgh ever since it came into existence in 1910 the foremost organization and plant in the entire world devoted entirely to the mineral industries, with special attention to coal mining.

The field forces of the Bureau of Mines, engaged in the promotion of health and safety in mining and expert in the handling and prevention of mine disasters and the investigation of health conditions in mines, have their operating headquarters in the city of Pittsburgh.

These men, Mr. President, many of whom have been en-erans of scores of disastrous mine fires and explosions, placed themselves, their experience, and their equipment at the disposal of the city of Pittsburgh at its time of need. They amply demonstrated their resourcefulness in meeting a new and unusual emergency and applied their long mine-safety experience in safeguarding the lives and health of the people of Pittsburgh when receding floodwaters left numerous hazards in the inundated areas.

The flood of March 17 reached a flood stage of 46 feet, or about 71/2 feet higher than ever before experienced. This resulted in the inundation of hundreds of basements and many upper floors in structures of all types in the main downtown business district of Pittsburgh known as the Golden Triangle, and for miles along the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers and along the shores of the Ohio River formed by the junction of these two rivers. When the floodwaters receded they left the usual trail of destruction. Gas and electric services were suspended for days and the floods in streets and basements caused damage to gas and electric lines.

On March 21 the facilities of the Bureau of Mines at Pittsburgh were offered to the Red Cross and to the city of Pittsburgh and immediately accepted. The Red Cross was furnished with several automobiles and drivers as well as with first-aid material, drugs, antiseptics, germicides, and other similar supplies.

On March 22 several of the downtown banks of Pittsburgh became apprehensive as to gas and other possible dangers in dewatered basements and safety men of the Bureau of Mines were asked to make inspections because the safety workers of that organization as a routine activity are familiar with detecting gases and handling or removing them in a safe manner. These first relatively few basement examinations in the main business district on March 22 caused the safety workers to recognize the very serious menace of asphyxiation, fires, and explosions in the dewatered buildings, especially in the basements, and they were convinced that hundreds of these basements and cellars should be inspected and the work should be done without delay if very serious disasters were to be averted.

The Bureau of Mines workers quickly called to their aid the members of the Mine Inspection Department of Pennsylvania living near Pittsburgh and conferred with officials of the city of Pittsburgh, calling attention to the serious gas and other hazards in the dewatered basements. Upon being made acquainted with the serious dangers threatening the city, the city officials quickly gave authority to the Bureau of Mines and the coal-mine inspection force of Pennsylvania to effect an organization and proceed immediately with inspection of the affected buildings in the flood area. The work was completely under the direction of safety experts of the Bureau of Mines and the State mine-inspection department. Police authority was given by the city of Pittsburgh for carrying out this work and 50 special police badges were issued for use of leaders of the inspection crews.

Mr. President, the task of inspecting the great number of buildings in the flood area necessitated procuring competent assistants outside the organization of the Bureau of Mines and the State department of mines, and the exigency of the situation required prompt action and the perfection of an organization to handle the work. Radio appeals were made to coal-mining companies and others in the district, calling upon them for experienced volunteers to assist with the inspection work, men who held certificates of competency issued by the State department of mines. In answer to these appeals 25 coal-mining companies in the district furnished competent men with necessary testing equipment, and a number of other qualified individuals also responded. A total of 171 men participated in the inspection work, including 100 men furnished by coal companies, 39 men unattached, 12 Pennsylvania Department of Mines inspectors. Twenty Bureau of Mines men contributed a total of 380 days' service, working 12 to 16 hours a day.

Crews were organized consisting of four to six examiners. a clerk, with a State mine inspector, Bureau of Mines engineer, or mine-safety engineer in charge. Maps of the city gaged in mine-safety work for 20 years or more and are vet- were procured and the flood areas laid out in inspection districts. Crews were assigned to these districts and were instructed to inspect all basements for explosive or noxious gases and to order removed or extinguished such devices as salamanders, oil stoves, oil-burning lamps, candles, gas furnaces, gas hot-water heaters, gas stoves, gas hot plates, or any other open-flame appliances. They were instructed to observe any other extraordinary fire hazards, such as use and storage of oils and gasoline and any material favorable to spontaneous combustion.

Emergency inspections were made in many cases on request of places producing and distributing food and food materials, so that normal distribution of such materials might be resumed as soon as possible.

The first area to be inspected was the downtown business district that had been flooded. Inspection then continued from this district up and down the three rivers to the city limits. The work was started on the afternoon of March 24 and all districts had been covered by the afternoon of March 28.

Orders were issued by the department of public safety that no gas was to be turned into lines or electricity turned on in basements that had been flooded until after they had been inspected and O. K.'d by the Bureau of Mines. This order brought thousands of telephone calls from individuals who were anxious to have their gas and electric services restored.

An informal report was submitted to the director of public safety. The report contained a brief outline of the work done, and recommended cautions and warnings that should be issued to the people whose properties had been inundated.

The inspection revealed many dangerous situations, all of which were remedied and there is good reason to believe that fires and explosions, with probable heavy property loss. were prevented and life and health preserved by the prompt effective service given in this wonderful exhibition of cooperative effort on the part of the Federal Bureau of Mines, the State coal-mine inspection forces, and the city of Pittsburgh.

Mr. President, the appreciation of city officials for the extremely valuable service given the city of Pittsburgh by the Bureau of Mines was expressed in letters addressed to Director John W. Finch by Thomas A. Dunn, director, department of public safety, and to J. J. Forbes, supervising engineer of the Bureau's safety forces at Pittsburgh, by George W. Schusler, superintendent-engineer, department of public health.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a letter from Thomas A. Dunn, director of public safety of the city of Pittsburgh, to the Director of the United States Bureau of Mines, and also a letter written by George W. Schusler, superintendent-engineer, department of public health of the city of Pittsburgh, to the Secretary of the Bureau of Mines, testfying to the value of the services rendered by the Bureau of Mines.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letters will be printed in the RECORD.

The letters referred to are as follows:

CITY OF PITTSBURGH, PA DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY, March 31, 1936.

Mr. John W. Finch, Director, United States Bureau of Mines, Washington, D. C.

DEAR DIRECTOR FINCH: It is an extreme pleasure to the Department of Public Safety of Pittsburgh to congratulate the United States Bureau of Mines at Pittsburgh, and, more particularly, Mr. J. J. Forbes, supervising engineer, and the rank and file of your men under him,

In Pittsburgh's greatest distress one of the outstanding dreads of the department was gas, both sewer and natural, in the many buildings that had been under water during the flood. The very splendid cooperation given by your Department was appreciated highly both by his honor, Mayor McNair, and Mr. H. L. Seaman, superintendent of the bureau of building inspection, as well as myself.

Yours very truly,

THOS. A. DUNN, Director.

CITY OF PITTSBURGH, PA., DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH, March 30, 1936.

Mr. J. J. FORBES.

Secretary, Bureau of Mines, 4800 Forbes Street.

Dear Mr. Forbes: I wish to express my hearty thanks for the cooperation given us during the crisis caused by the flood.

Mr. Munsch and the men associated with him rendered excellent service and gave us much-needed help. If at any time we can be of service to you do not fail to call upon us.

Again thanking you for your cooperation, I am, Yours very truly,

GEO. W. SCHUSLER, Superintendent-Engineer.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I wish to continue for a few minutes further on the Works Progress Administration.

The program encouraged by the Works Progress Administration attendant upon its policy of spending first and inquiring afterward will form a sordid chapter in American history. Relief of the needy is an essential and must not be denied. But this fact cannot now obscure the maladministration of W. P. A. funds. The country may well stand aghast before the accumulating evidence of waste and extravagance and the use of work-relief money contrary to the purposes for which it was appropriated.

The Federal Theater Veterans' League, composed of World War veterans now employed by the Works Progress Administration in New York City has sent me a copy of a letter addressed to the President on March 19, 1936, which was nearly a month ago. I did not bring this matter to the attention of the Senate, thinking that the Administration would prefer to take care of it in its own way. However, nothing has been done about it, and I believe this situation is so serious that the Senate should be informed. I desired that the Administration should have faced this situation openly, but, in view of the fact that no action has been taken, I feel that it is my duty to bring this matter to the attention of the Senate

Mr. President, the veterans in their letter describe the use of the W. P. A. theater project in New York City for the spread of communistic propaganda. Anyone knowing the powerful influence of the theater can realize the significance of its perversion for such a purpose. The veterans show that the Federal theater project is primarily used for the dissemination of communistic propaganda, that active Communists are in charge of its departments, and that its key positions have been given to nonprofessionals while the professional actors are ignored.

Mrs. Halke Flanagan, close to the administration, as I am informed, and head of the Vassar College Experimental Theater, was appointed director of the W. P. A. theater project. When the veterans in their letter to the President requested the removal of Mrs. Flanagan and her associates because of their communistic tendencies, I made inquiry concerning her literary works to ascertain, if possible, in what way they might throw light upon this contention. I do not know Mrs. Flanagan except as she is shown in her writings and books. which I have here on my desk at this time.

I find upon inquiry that Mrs. Flanagan has four works listed under her name in the Congressional Library. One, written in Russian, translated by her and associates in 1934, is entitled "Fear." Back in 1928 Mrs. Flanagan wrote a book called "Shifting Scenes", in the prologue of which she says:

The curtain rises on an impressionistic drama of the European theater and on certain brilliant personalities who are creating that theater. The scenes are laid in Dublin, Prague, Budapest, Moscow, Leningrad, and many other cities where drama is alive.

She devotes the second third of her book to the Russian theater. On page 81 she says:

I went to Russia because I wanted to understand the circumstances under which developed the incomparable art which we have seen in Stanislavsky's Theater, in the Chauve-Souris, the Musical Studio, the Ballets Russes, the Habimah, and because I wanted to see for myself what part the theater plays in the new order and how it is influenced by that order. The answer to both questions proved to be so bound up with the whole social experiment that I became absorbed by the drama outside the theater; the strange, stirring, and glorious drama that is Russia.

This statement would seem to show that Mrs. Flanagan is highly devoted to Russian art when she says, "I became absorbed by the glorious drama that is Russia."

In 1931 Mrs. Flanagan wrote for the Vassar Experimental Theater Can You Hear Their Voices? which was based on a story by Whittaker Chambers, published in the New Masses for March 1931. This play ridicules the inefficient voluntary provision made for relief back in those days, scoffs at the American Red Cross as a relief agency, makes a laughingstock of ease-loving Congressmen, and creates a hero and the leading character of the play out of a Communist by the name of Wardell, who says:

Don't you see, Rose, it ain't Purcell that's wrong. It's the plan we live under; it's the whole system. Listen! Maybe I think, like you, that there'll come a time when there'll be shootin'. But today ain't the time. Maybe there'll come a time when we can today ain't the time. Maybe there'll come a time when we can stand our feet like free men, instead of crawlin' on our bellies askin' for help. But that time ain't come yet. Some of us believe in a time comin' when everybody will have to work, and there'll be enough work for everybody. Some of us believe that the land and the crops and the cattle and the factories belong to the men that work 'em. But we ain't strong enough yet to take 'em. And that's why some of us think it's more important to work for that time than to shoot up a few rich guys now.

This is one of the high points of Mrs. Flanagan's drama,

In 1934 Mrs. Flanagan and Mary C. St. John wrote a drama entitled "The American Plan", in which a big-business man by the name of Black is ridiculed, a strike is dramatized sympathetically, a young Communist murders Black, is sentenced to prison for life, and in which The Star-Spangled Banner is played whenever conditions seem the worst and the Internationale is played when the audience reaction is most favorable.

Anyone reading these books either casually or carefully would find no place in which Mrs. Flanagan has a good word to say about the United States, this Government, American institutions, or the economic system which still makes possible relief money for the Works Progress Administration. From reading these books one gains the impression that Russia is a grand place and that the United States is terrible. Mrs. Flanagan's idea of the country in which she directs the theater project of the Works Progress Administration is found in her play, The American Plan, where big business is caricatured, communistic violence made to seem inevitable, and class conflict necessary.

Mr. President, if these are not Mrs. Flanagan's actual sentiments, I believe the country would welcome a state-ment from her to the contrary. The question arises as to why she was appointed to administer over $7,000,000 of American money under the Works Progress Administration, when all of her published works reveal, as she says, that she has become "absorbed in the glorious drama that is Russia." Was she so appointed because the Administration was unaware of her love of Russia and her hatred of the American plan, or was she so appointed because the Administration approves her point of view? If the Administration appointed her without knowing her point of view, it reveals an unbelievable irresponsibility. If the Administration appointed her as a mark of approval and a sanction on her absorption in the "glorious drama that is Russia", it should now explain to the taxpayers of this country the use of relief money intended to feed the hungry for such alien

Mr. President, I do not address these inquiries to Administrator Hopkins of the Works Progress Administration, because he has not elected to answer past inquiries which I have directed to him. Perhaps, however, Mr. Hopkins may be willing to address a letter to the Vice President of the United States, the Presiding Officer of this honorable body of American citizens, explaining the reasons for the appointment of Mrs. Flanagan.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to President Roosevelt March 19, 1936, by Mr. Norman L. Marks, counsel of the Federal Theatre Veterans' League, describing the use of the Federal theater project of the Works Progress Administration for the dissemination of communistic propaganda, together with a letter addressed to Senators by Mr. E. J. Blunkall bearing on the same subject.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, March 19, 1936.

Hon. Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

President of the United States,

White House, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. President: This letter is being written to you on behalf of the Federal Theatre Veterans League, of which I am counsel, and which is composed of honorably discharged ex-service men who are now employed by the Works Progress Administration in various theater projects.

men who are now employed by the Works Progress Administration in various theater projects.

We are all men who have not only served our country in time of war but who are endeavoring to serve this country in time of peace.

We believe that the theory of the W. P. A. in establishing theatre projects is worthy and can do a great deal not only to assist destitute actors but also to advance the theater in this country.

May I specifically point out that the Federal Theater Veterans League does not seek to give the veterans any preference in any project. It is formed merely to assist the W. P. A. in its work and to give the people employed in the various projects a true sense of roject. It is formed merely to assist the W. P. A. in its work and to give the people employed in the various projects a true sense of Americanism. The league was only formed after we saw the tremendous amount of communistic activity in the various projects. We enclose herewith a list of charges which we specifically refer to you for action. We are ready to prove every statement contained in the charges. We are ready to give you any affidavits or other proof you may want. We ask that a hearing be had that we may produce witnesses to prove every statement.

A general statement of the charges has heretofore been forwarded to Mr. Harry Hopkins, who is Administrator of the Works Progress Administration, but to date we have not receive any reply, and for that reason we are forwarding this matter to your attention, for we believe that the situation is more serious than most people realize.

Your kind and urgent consideration of this matter will be deeply appreciated. An acknowledgment of this communication will likewise be appreciated.

Very sincerely yours,

NORMAN L. MARKS, Counsel.

The Federal Theatre Veterans' League does hereby request a The Federal Theatre Veterans' League does hereby request a complete and thorough investigation of the Federal theater project of the Works Progress Administration, and specifically requests the removal of Mrs. Hallie Flanagan as national director of the Federal theater project, and her associates, for the following reasons:

I. The Federal theater project is primarily used for the dissemination of communistic propaganda

In order to substantiate the fact that the Federal theater project is used for communistic propaganda, the following facts are submitted:

mitted:

(a) The selection of plays is designed to teach the American public communistic activities. The play Triple A. Plowed Under contains a scene in which the secretary of the Communist Party condemns the judiciary of the United States Government. Characters, as George Washington and Andrew Jackson, were removed from the play in order to give a prominent part to the secretary of the Communist Party. The conclusion of the play is the establishment of a political party in accordance with the wish expressed by the secretary of the Communist Party in a radio broadcast a short time ago.

In the play Class of '29 the cast is required to sing the "red".

In the play Class of '29, the cast is required to sing the "red" marching song and is required to carry a red banner. The play itself is pure communistic propaganda.

The play Savva advocates the destruction of religion in accordance with the general idea of Soviet Russia and active Com-

The play Dance of Death openly condemns Jews. It actually contains the following lines:

"There's a dirty Jew,
You know what to do."

The cast thereupon demand his destruction and chase him out of the theater through the audience. In the play there is a demand that the ownership of property be destroyed and that a revolution be had.

In the play Ethiopia there was actually preached the violation of our antineutrality principles of government and the violation of the generally recognized theatrical international understanding that no living ruler of another nation be depicted as a character

(b) Communistic literature is distributed and taught. Mrs. Hallie Flanagan, who is the national director of the Federal theater project, has definitely stated that she is not interested in American theater or methods, but is interested only in the Russian stylized performances

In the publicity department of the project there is actually distributed communistic literature instead of publicity for the projects themselves. The literature may be found on the desks of the publicity department at any time.

On the bulletin boards of the project are various forms of communistic literature. In the past Russian posters lined the Communist meetings are held during business hours. Such meetings were held at the Jewish East Side Center and 117 West Forty-sixth Street, Manhattan, New York., besides at various other places, including the Central Plaza in New York. One of the Forty-sixth Street meetings was called as a supervisors' conference. Only those supervisors who were believed to be Communists or radicals were invited to the meeting. It was addressed by the organizer of the communistic movement and his delegates. The organizer of the communistic movement and his delegates. The meeting was held in a Government-leased building on time that should have been devoted to Government activities.

Key positions are held by people of communistic leaning. The director in New York is Mr. Philip Barber, who meets weekly with representatives of the radical organization, but refuses to meet with destitute actors who have American leaning. Mr. Barber has delayed the signing of requistions for days, but has always had time to care for the Communists. Mr. Barber has seen fit to permit the posting of various bulletins, tending to cause dissatisfaction in the project, and editorials of the Daily Worker, a communistic paper, but has never seen fit to permit the posting of any pro-American bulletins or papers.

Mr. Stephen Karnot has been in direct charge of the plays Dance of Death and Savva. He started about 15 plays since November, but only one has been produced.

Miss Helen Arthur, supervisor of the Manhattan Theater, has invited the cast to a tea in the lobby of the theater for the purpose of studying the Russian and Soviet theater and the theory of government back of them.

Mr. Irving Mendell, a candy maker by profession, is in charge of the transfer bureau of the project, while his wife, known as Ann Fischer, is secretary to Mr. Karnot. In the first place, it is contrary to regulations for both man and wife to be employed by and admit that they are Communists and teach communism in their home. An investigation was made, and they admitted to everyone that they were Communists. It may be interesting to note that after the investigation, in which they admitted that they were Communists, they were both promoted.

Mr. Alfred Kreymbourg permitted an outside Communist to address the cast at the rehearsal held in Christ Church, West Thirtydress the cast at the rehearsal held in Christ Church, West Thirty-sixth Street, New York, and attempted to requisition Communists who were not on relief to join the cast. He has specifically refused to permit on any bulletin board any literature which would advocate the theories of American Government and charged any dissension to the formation of an Americanization plan. It may be interesting to note that at the Communist meeting permitted by Mr. Kreymbourg most of the cast walked out. When the members of the cast refused to listen to his communistic theories, Mr. Kreymbourg stated: "Don't be afraid. We will not hurt your lovely Government."

Thomas Stone, supervisor in the experimental theater, has preached communism not only in the office but has even attempted to preach those theories to former members of the Three Hundred and Seventh Infantry, Seventy-seventh Division. During business hours he has solicited membership for the Communist organization and has actually taken a new applicant to a meeting.

II. Incompetency rules the project

Most of the employees are persons who were not previously engaged in the theater. The purpose of the project was primarily to give relief to people who were engaged professionally in theatrical work. In that connection it has falled its purpose, as nonprofessionals, not in need of work, are holding those positions which should be held by those of the profession who are now walking the streets suffering the pangs of hunger.

At the present time most shows are in rehearsals for 9 and 10 At the present time most shows are in rehearsals for 9 and 10 weeks and are never produced. When the project was first started, in January 1934, with professional men, casts were formed within a few days and productions ready after 10 days to 2 weeks of rehearsal. Eleven shows were actually produced and played to a weekly average of 22,000 people. Today in the city of New York there are 11 shows playing, 8 of which are part of the original drama unit, and only 3 have been produced since last November under Mrs. Flanagan's regime.

The purchase of materials is a disgrace. Money is simply thrown away. If, for example, lighting equipment is needed for a show, it is purchased, even though the equipment needed may be lying idle in another show.

The publicity department gives no publicity. For example, a circus was opened in the Jamaica arena without any publicity. Box-office receipts were approximately $15. "Throw-aways" were printed but never distributed. There was not a line in any newspaper. The same condition exists on all theatrical projects. The publicity department is too busy disseminating communistic propaganda to give publicity to show.

III

It is therefore respectfully submitted:

(a) That the Federal theater project be thoroughly investigated.

(b) That Mrs. Flanagan be dismissed as national director.

(c) That Mr. Barber be removed as director of the city of New

(d) That all Communists be removed from the theater project and transferred to projects where they cannot successfully advocate the destruction of our Government.

(e) That the theater project be placed in the hands of persons who are experienced in the theater.

(f) That only people of the theater be employed in theatrical

(g) That the theater project be used to produce art, education, and drama, and not to disseminate communistic propaganda. Respectfully submitted.

FEDERAL THEATRE VETERANS LEAGUE, By Adolph Pinkus, President.

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Washington, D. C .:

Things have come to such a pass in the W. P. A. here in New York City that I think you should know about it.

Knowing that you are a friend of the theater and its people, I am appealing to you for help.

A time has now come when you may be able to help these people who are in dire need of help from their friends.

As you are aware, several million dollars were set aside and earmarked for professional actors. Three million dollars of that money was set aside for the actors of New York City.

But what has happened? In the first place, a woman who knows nothing of the professional theater or professional actors was put at the head of the W. P. A. drama project of the entire United States. That was the first blow. This woman, in turn, placed amateurs at the head of each of the 12 regional gones or placed amateurs at the head of each of the 12 regional zones or districts in the United States.

People not of the theater are in every key position in the New York City W. P. A. drama project. With the result that many hundreds of people not of the theater in any way are being paid each week out of the money that rightfully belongs to the actors.

At the same time, hundreds of well-known fine actors are walking the streets of New York City, some of them hungry, and they cannot get work on the Federal dramatic project because it is crammed full of people that have no right there.

Mr. Hopkins and his lieutenant, Jacob Baker, have ruled that in order to be eligible for this work the applicant must have been on Government relief after August 1 and before November 1, 1935.

Actors are a rather proud class and can split 50 cents in more different ways than any class of people on earth. Very few actors have even been on relief at any time. So new, instead of being rewarded for not taking relief from the Government, they are penalized and not allowed to work and earn this money that was especially set aside for them.

There is an allowance or quota of 10 percent of nonrelief allowed, but that 10 percent has been almost entirely gobbled up by people not of the theater.

allowed, but that 10 percent has been almost entirely gobbied up by people not of the theater.

For example, there is a man named Stephen Karnot, who was never in a professional theater in his life, unless he bought a seat. This young man is in charge of all the directors, which means that this amateur tells the professional directors—the directors, mind you—what to do. And the majority of these directors have spent the most of their lives as professional directors.

A woman named Louise Chapin is at the head of the entire personnel of New York City and she has never been connected with the professional theater in any way.

This kind of people hold all the key positions, which by the way pay pretty good salaries.

There is one man in the office of the W. P. A. here in New York City on the dramatic project at 701 Eighth Avenue, not of the theater, who is doing good work. His name is Maj. William Ball. He served on the staff of Gen. John J. Pershing during the World War.

And what have these people at the head of the W. P. A. drama project accomplished? Some twenty-odd companies have been rehearsing plays for over 5 months in New York City. Exactly four of those have opened, one of which is a Negro company in Harlem.

Harlem.

There are a dozen cases where after rehearing a play for from 10 to 14 weeks they have come to the brilliant conclusion that the play would not do.

play would not do.

I suggest the fellowing:
First. Put people of the professional theater in the fellowing positions at once: Heads of the W. P. A. drama project of the entire United States, the dramatic personnel department of New York City, the directors of the W. P. A. of New York City, and put professional play reader or prefessional actors or managers to select the plays and see to it that they are 100 percent Americans, instead of aliens and Communists.

Second. Demand that Hopkins and Baker do away with the rule that actors must have been on home relief in order to be eligible for these jobs.

that actors must have been on nome lener in order to be for these jobs.

If the above is done you will see the W.P. A. drama project take on new life, and within 1 week from the time this is accomplished you will see plays opening all over New York City.

In closing I wish to say that I am not working on any Government project. I am not now nor have I been at any time on any kind of relicf. I am not seeking any of these jobs, but I would like to see my fellow actors get what is rightfully theirs. I would like to see a stop put to their robbery by leeches and people who have absolutely no right to this money or this work.

I have seen in the papers that there is to be a congressional

I have seen in the papers that there is to be a congressional investigation of the W. P. A. Good! Don't overlook the drama project of the W. P. A. in New York City. But please do not wait until the investigation is over to make the changes I have suggested.

If the investigation committee would like to call me as a witness I am at their command.

Hoping that you gentlemen in Washington will be able to help the actor help himself, and assist him in getting what is justly his from a generous Government.

I am sincerely yours,

E. J. BLUNKALL.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER FLOOD CONTROL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3531) to amend the act entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes", approved May 15, 1928.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I assumed early in the afternoon that probably no vote would be taken until tomorrow, and so expressed my view to certain Senators who are now absent. In that regard, I feel responsible and, therefore, should like to have final action on the unfinished business go over until tomorrow. I spoke to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], in the absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], expressing my hope that the Senate might take a recess at this time. There will be only a short debate tomorrow. I know of only one Senator on this side of the Chamber who will occupy any time-the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg], who desires to discuss the measure very briefly. I feel certain we can dispose of the unfinished business prior to 1 o'clock tomorrow

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I had not heard of any suggestion for further delay. The bill has been the unfinished business before the Senate for a long time, and has been temporarily laid aside several times to consider other matters. It was taken up Friday and discussed, and has been discussed again today. I am wondering if we cannot dispose of it today. The author of the bill has told me he would like to go forward and secure final action today.

Mr. McNARY. I am not implicating anyone but myself. I assume my responsibilities and can always carry them alone. To certain Members on this side of the Chamber who are now absent I expressed my belief that there would be no vote this afternoon, but we would have a field day for politics.

If my request is not acceded to, of course, I shall have to suggest the absence of a quorum and do the best I can to bring back those whom I told might leave.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon is always fair in his attitude here; and I do not like to take a position contrary to his wishes, especially when there is no emergency.

Mr. McNARY. I am willing to cooperate in the morning in order that a vote may be had at as early an hour as is consistent with a full discussion of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. May we have an agreement to vote at a fixed time? That, however, would require a quorum.

Mr. McNARY. A quorum would be required unless we should have merely a limitation on debate; but I do not think either is needed. I think the Senator may trust to my imagination and prophecy that we shall have a very early vote tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. My information is that the only Senator who intends to speak on the unfinished business does not expect to deliver a long address and is ready to go on at this time.

Mr. McNARY. I think that is true. I mentioned a few moments ago the name of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]; but that does not meet the situation which now confronts me. Many times, as the Senator knows, we must express to our colleagues our best judgment on what the procedure will be during the day; and at 3 o'clock today it was my judgment that we should not reach this bill later in the afternoon. I am asking something that is not unusual.

Mr. ROBINSON. Well, Mr. President, with the approval of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton], to whom I have spoken, I shall not insist on a vote this afternoon; and the Senator from Michigan may proceed now or wait until the morning.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I prefer to go on in the morning.

EXPENSES OF COMMITTEES OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, without amendment, House Joint Resolution 567, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

I have shown the joint resolution to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary]. It is merely to appropriate $75,000 for the purpose of enabling the House of Representatives to carry on its investigations through committees.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understand that the passage of the joint resolution is needed in order to enable the House of Representatives to carry on the investigations being conducted by its special and select committees. In view of the statement of the Senator from Tennessee, and out of courtesy to the House, I have no objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 567) to provide an additional appropriation for expenses of special and select committees of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1936, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for expenses of special and select committees authorized by the House of Representatives, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,000 for the fiscal year 1936: Provided, That no person shall be employed under this appropriation at a rate of compensation in excess of $3,600 per annum.

Mr. BLACK subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago, when I was out of the Chamber, at the request of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] a House joint resolution was considered by unanimous consent and passed. I ask the Senator from Tennessee if he will not ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the joint resolution was passed be reconsidered and that it go over until tomorrow?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, does the Senator understand that this is merely a matter of furnishing money to the House of Representatives?

Mr. BLACK. I understand that fully.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not object. Of course, the Senator could make a motion to reconsider, but I will not put him to that trouble. Therefore the vote may be reconsidered and the joint resolution may be placed on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to this afternoon be reconsidered and that the joint resolution be placed on the calendar. Is there

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not quite understand the status of the proposal. Will it lead to any action this

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it will not lead to any action at all. It will just put it over until tomorrow. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] was about to make a motion to reconsider the vote, and, of course, he would have a right to make such a motion. I agreed that the vote might be reconsidered and that the matter might go over until to-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee that the vote by which the joint resolution was passed be reconsidered and that the joint resolution be placed on the calendar? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

STATE TOBACCO-CONTROL COMPACTS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is on the Vice President's desk a bill which has passed the House, similar to a bill which has been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and is now on the Senate calendar, known as the tobacco-compact bill. The Members of the Senate from the tobacco-producing States, particularly the two Senators from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS and Mr. BAILEY] are very much interested in securing action on the bill as soon as possible, because the planting season is now in progress, and the bill simply permits the States in which | tobacco is grown to enter into compacts for the control of production, and so forth. If the bill may be brought up without in any way interfering with the other program, it is a very important matter, and ought to be disposed of at an early moment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this matter was brought to my attention earlier in the day. Upon the disposition of the unfinished business I am willing to cooperate so far as I can in bringing before the Senate for consideration of the tobacco-compact bill; but I should not want it to come before the Senate prior to the disposition of the unfinished business.

Mr. ROBINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas vield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. About 2 weeks ago the Senate took up for consideration a bill of a good deal of importance, known as the deportation bill. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] obtained the floor, spoke for a long period, and gave notice, as I remember-and if I am in error I know he will correct me-that he intended to speak further at considerable length. The Senator from Arkansas very properly suggested the consideration of the very important bill which is before us, and therefore the deportation bill was temporarily laid aside, as I understood.

Mr. CLARK. No. Mr. President; the flood-control bill was the unfinished business, and was temporarily laid aside in order to take up the other bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, Mr. President; the actual parliamentary status is that when the flood-control bill now before the Senate was made the unfinished business, under the impression that the so-called deportation bill would be speedily disposed of, having had that assurance from Senators whom I believed to be in charge of the bill, I myself asked that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the so-called deportation bill. We proceeded for a couple of days, and no action was taken. From time to time other measures intervened; and then it was that I demanded the regular order, which was to proceed with the flood-control bill.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. The deportation bill has never been the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. No: it has not.

Mr. CLARK. And it will not become the unfinished business when the present unfinished business shall have been disposed of.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; a motion would necessarily have to be made to proceed to its consideration if objection were made to taking it up. There was no objection to laying aside the unfinished business; and I will say that when the unfinished business was laid aside I had the assurance that no great amount of time would be required to dispose of the deportation bill. I found that that assurance was mislead-

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I simply wish to state that the appropriation bill for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor is ready for consideration, and I do not think it will take a great deal of time. I hope to have it taken up some time tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. Mr. BARKLEY. The thought which had occurred to me-and it was that which I had in mind when I spoke to the Senator from Oregon during the absence of the Senator from Arkansas-was that if the flood-control bill should go over until tomorrow, the tobacco-compact bill having passed the House in practically the same language as the Senate bill which is now on the calendar, we might dispose of both of them by sandwiching the House bill in here this afternoon. The planting season is now on in the tobaccogrowing States; and if the bill to allow the States to enter into a compact is to be of any benefit, since some of them will have to call their legislatures together in order to do it, the bill ought to be passed without delay. It was in that hope that I suggested that we might pass the bill this afternoon, unless there is more controversy over it than I think there will be.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should not object to that course, but I am informed that other Senators do object to it; so I see nothing to do but to proceed tomorrow with the unfinished business. I shall not ask to lay it aside until it is disposed of, because I think its sponsors, including the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton], have been very liberal in allowing other business to intervene.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to inquire of the Chair whether or not a motion would be in order at this time to proceed immediately to the consideration of the tobaccocompact bill mentioned by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should not yield for a motion of that nature, for the reason that it would displace the unifinished business and render it necessary to make another motion to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

I think, in all fairness, the unfinished business is entitled to a final disposition. It has been before the Senate for 2 weeks.

Mr. BAILEY. That is the flood-control bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. It has been before the Senate for 2 weeks; and, as I said before, the sponsors of the bill have been very generous in laying it aside to consider anything that was brought forward. Now the time has come when I feel that the Senate should act on the measure.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. The tobacco compact is a local matter, but is of very great importance to the farmers producing bright tobacco. At this juncture every moment counts. We have waited here day after day hoping for an opportunity to present the bill to the Senate. We do not think there can be serious opposition to it. It is a consent bill. It is wholly permissive. It is contingent upon approval by the States involved; and the permission may be withdrawn at the end of the year or at any time.

In view of those facts, and of the very pressing character of the situation, thousands of farmers not knowing what to do, may I not ask Senators who are inclined to hold back to give way and let us have the consent here and now to put this bill on its passage? I cannot see how anyone would be injured by having the bill enacted. On the other hand, if we delay, I can see how hundreds of thousands of farmers will be irreparably injured. So I beg Senators, if there be Senators who are opposed to the bill, just to let us pass it this afternoon. There will be 8,000 farmers meeting in the capital of North Carolina tomorrow, in great confusion, and with great determination, as well.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator is appealing to me, I can only say that I would not consent to the consideration this afternoon of a bill of such importance as this.

Mr. BAILEY. If that be true, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KING. If I may use the words of my friend to the effect that a certain bill could easily be passed, referring to the deportation bill which was before the Senate for some time, and on which the Senator from North Carolina occupied some little time-

Mr. BAILEY. Not myself. Mr. KING. No; the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Reynolds] occupied some little time, approximately a day and a half or 2 days, and it had been stated that we could take that bill up and pass it very quickly. As I understand, the bill referred to by the senior Senator from North Carolina—and I never heard of it until a few moments ago—involves, as I conceive, a rather remarkable proposition. It makes for monopoly, or possibly provides for monopoly, in the manufacture and sale of tobacco.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, let me correct the Senator. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Let me complete my sentence. I have not read the bill and never heard of it until a few moments ago; but, as I understand, under its terms, States could permit those growers within their borders to enter into agreements to restrict the production of tobacco. If I am in error, I should be glad to be corrected.

Mr. BAILEY. What the Senator says is true as to what may happen within the States. There is nothing of monopoly, however. The Bright tobacco States are allowed to go into compacts. Any other State is allowed to come in and any other State is allowed to stay out. There is nothing of monopoly, and it does not remotely relate to manufacture.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is a step made necessary by the decision of the court that the States may not enter into such compacts without the consent of Congress, but, under the Constitution, with such consent, the States where tobacco is grown may enter into the compacts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there are some constitutional questions involved, and I would not give consent to the bill being taken up today.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, did the Senator from North Carolina say that this bill had passed the House and had been reported by a committee of the Senate?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. And a similar bill has already passed the Senate?

Mr. BAILEY. No; a similar bill is on the calendar of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. So that the bill which was reported by the committee of the Senate is practically the same bill that has passed the House of Representatives?

Mr. BAILEY. That is true.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, resuming the floor, it is apparent that the so-called tobacco-compact bill cannot be proceeded with this evening, and that it may be proceeded with following the final disposition of the unfinished business.

Mr. BAILEY. That is, following the Mississippi flood-control bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask whether a motion would be in order to make the tobacco-compact bill, House bill 12037, a special order following the disposition of the Mississippi River flood-control bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be made a special order by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. BAILEY. Or by unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Or by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that his end can be better attained by moving to proceed to the consideration of the tobacco-compact bill after the unfinished business shall have been acted upon. A majority vote would carry that question, whereas a two-thirds vote would be required to make it a special order. It seems very simple to me. The situation may be resolved, if it is the will of the Senate so to resolve it, by proceeding with the tobacco-compact bill after the bill now before the Senate shall have been passed upon. I have assurances from Senators who have spoken on the matter that a very short time will be required tomorrow to finish the consideration of the pending business.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I shall make the motion at the

Mr. McKellar. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas spoke of proceeding with the appropriation bill this afternoon. I am perfectly willing to go on with it. I think we could easily pass it today.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I thought the Senator said that he would have the bill taken up tomorrow. I should not like to have it taken up tonight.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 20, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, be with us this day in thought, purpose, and action. Illuminate our minds and cleanse our hearts that Thy will may be magnified in all our labors. Give us plenteously of Thy wisdom and grace that we may reach the highest and the best results and thus add somewhat to the happiness and progress of our country. Widen the sweep of peace, contentment, and cooperation among all our citizens. May our duties be so borne that when the evening time approaches we may recall them with an approving conscience and feel in the recesses of our hearts that the smile of Heaven is upon us. In the name of our Lord and Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, April 17, 1936, was read and approved.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 36. Concurrent resolution rescinding the action of the Vice President and the Speaker of the House of Representatives in signing the enrolled bill (H. R. 4387) entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Barbara Blackstrom" and authorizing the Clerk of the House of Representatives in the reenrollment of said bill to make certain corrections.

PRIVILEGE OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the privilege of the whole House and offer a privileged resolution, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 490

Whereas during the House proceedings on April 17, 1936, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK] attempted to speak out of order and to indulge in personalities, when he was admonished by the Chair, as follows

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot do that while another question of privilege is pending.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The point of order is this: I know what the contents are. I have no objection to them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not stating a point of order. The gentleman will please remain quiet while this resolution is being read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must discuss the matter con tained in his amendment. The gentleman from Washington will proceed in order.

And whereas upon a second attempt out of order to discuss per-sonalities, the Chair the second time admonished the gentleman from Washington, as follows:

Mr. ZIONCHECK. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. When did the Speaker recognize the Clerk or the gentleman from Texas to start this resolution going?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not stating a point of order. The gentleman will be seated while the resolution is being read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington, under the ruling of the Chair—and the Chair is sure the gentleman understood it—must discuss the subject matter of his amendment, and will proceed in order.

And whereas upon a third attempt out of order to discuss personalities, the Chair, the third time, admonished the gentleman from Washington, as follows:

"The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine himself to the language of his amendment."

language of his amendment."

And whereas the said gentleman from Washington [Mr. Zion-Check], in disobedience of the rulings of the Chair, although thrice admonished by the Chair, and in violation of the rules of the House, made a fourth attempt to speak out of order, and to indulge in personalities, when a point of order was made against it, which was sustained by the Chair, and for the fourth time the Chair admonished the gentleman, as follows:

"The Chairman. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order, and rules that the point of order is well taken. The gentleman from Washington will confine his remarks to the amendment which he offered, and avoid personalities, and please proceed in which he offered, and avoid personalities, and please proceed in

Mr. ZIONCHECK. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The point of order is this: The very matters referred to now are not in the RECORD and it is violating the rules of the House by bringing them into the House and getting them in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot determine that. The gentleman from Texas has offered a privileged resolution.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The RECORD will show that.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has offered this privileged resolution, which the Clerk will continue to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And whereas the gentleman from Washington, upon a fifth attempt to violate the rulings of the Chair and the rules of the House, and to speak out of order, and to indulge in personalities, the Chair, for the fifth time, admonished the gentleman as follows:

"The CHAIRMAN. The Chair reminds the gentleman from Washington again that he must confine his remarks to the amendment which he has offered and that he country indules in personalities.

ington again that he must confine his remarks to the amendment which he has offered and that he cannot indulge in personalities. And the Chair hopes that the gentleman will respect the rules of the House and will not continue to indulge in personalities."

And whereas for the sixth time the said gentleman from Washington attempted to violate the rulings of the Chair and the rules of the House, and to speak out of order, and to indulge in personalities, when a point of order was made against it, which the Chair sustained, and for the sixth time admonished the gentleman [Mr. ZIONCHECK] as follows:

"The CHAIRMAN. The Chair again sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas.

made by the gentleman from Texas.

"Mr. ZIONCHECK. May I be heard on the point or order?

"The Chairman. The Chair has already ruled on the point of order.

"Mr. Zioncheck. The next time I want to be heard.

"The Charrman. The Chair wishes to say to the gentleman from Washington again that he hopes he will proceed in order.

"Mr. Zioncheck. I will.

"The Chairman. Or else take his seat.

"Mr. Zioncheck. Mr. Chairman, on the next point of order I want to be heard. I am going to explain that this is very pertinent to the amendment that I have offered, but I want to be heard next time. heard next time.

"The CHARMAN. The Chair reminds the gentleman from Washington that it is within the discretion of the Chair as to what the Chair will hear on a point of order.

"Mr. Zioncheck. And may I state to the Chair that when I am properly heard on this there can be no discretion?

am properly heard on this there can be no discretion?

"The Charman. The gentleman will proceed in order.

"Mr. ZIONCHECK. To R. Q. Lee, the deed dated December 10—

"Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is violating the rules of the House, violating the ruling of the Chair thrice repeated to him, that he cannot discuss outside, personal matters on an amendment to strike out language such as the gentleman made.

"Mr. Blanton. The gentleman from Washington was repeating about some deed that was made to R. Q. Lee at a certain date.

Which made the eighth successive time it was necessary for the Chair to admonish the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Zioncheck] that the rules of the House prohibited him from indulging in personalities and attacking a colleague in debate; and Whereas thereafter, in violation of the rules of the House and in violation specifically of the rulings of the Chair, and after being admonished eight different times by the Chair, the said gentleman from Washington deliberately placed said forbidden personalities in the Record after the House adjourned, at a wholly irrelevant point in the proceedings occurring just before a journment, to wit, at the point just before the last ruling of the Chair and in the following colloquy:

"Mrs. Norton, Mr. Zioncheck, and Mr. Taber rose. "Mrs. Norton. Mr. Chairman, the committee accepts the amend-

"Mr. Zioncheck. Mr. Chairman, the gentlewoman from New Jersey does not rise in opposition to the amendment.
"The Chairman. The gentlewoman from New Jersey is the chairman of the committee handling the proposed legislation. She is seeking recognition, and the Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from New Jersey for 2 minutes, the time remaining under the rule.

"Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I will consume that 2 minutes if anybody does.

"Mrs. Norton. Will the gentleman yield the 2 minutes to me?

"Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will yield 1 minute of the time, if necessary.

"The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the chairman of the committee, the gentlewoman from New Jersey, for the remaining 2 minutes.

"Mr. ZIONCHECK. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.
"The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
"Mr. ZIONCHECK. The point of order is this: I think the parliamentary rule is—and if it is not, it should be—that the chairman of the Committee on Rules cannot take the last 5 minutes to make an amendment and then make a speech consuming all the time. I think that is not decent.

"The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair understands the gentleman's point of order, the Chair overrules it. There is 1 minute of time left. "Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, then I make another point of

"The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules that point of order.

"Mr. ZIONCHECK. What objection is there? Why does the Chair overrule the point of order?

And whereas, just preceding the last ruling of the Chair, and between where the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Zioncheck] said: "Why does the Chair overrule the point of order", and just before where the Chairman said "The Chair will explain", the gentleman from Washington in deliberate violation of the Rules of the House, and deliberately violating the decision of the Chair eight times decided, and after having been eight times admonished by the Chair that he was not allowed to do it, nevertheless placed improper personalities and attack upon a collegue covering part by the Chair that he was not allowed to do it, nevertheless placed improper personalities and attack upon a colleague covering part of three pages of the Record: Therefore be it

*Resolved, etc., That the said improper remarks of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK] beginning with the second to the last paragraph from the bottom of the second column of page 5884, commencing with the words: "Now, Mr. Chairman," and embracing the balance of said second column, and all of page 5885, and the top part of column 1 of page 5886 down to and including the paragraph commencing with the words "I laughed yesterday", be, and the same are hereby, expunged from the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall consume only a few minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution was submitted to the Parliamentarian by me and passed upon as in correct form and the correct procedure.

The RECORD will show that eight times Friday the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK] was called to order by the Chairman, who ruled that he was out of order in attempting to make personal attacks upon me in his speech. This happened eight different times, and I will read from the RECORD the eight times.

This is the first time:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must discuss the matter con tained in his amendment. The gentleman from Washington will proceed in order.

Then again when he was getting out of the RECORD, and I read:

The Chairman. The gentleman from Washington, under the ruling of the Chair—and the Chair is sure the gentleman understood it—must discuss the subject matter of his amendment and will

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let us see if we cannot get down to the direct issue involved. Do I understand that the gentleman from Washington has violated the rules in that without permission he has inserted a personal attack upon the gentleman from Texas in the RECORD?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and against the rules of the House. His improper matter takes up a whole page and parts of two other pages and at a juncture where there was absolutely no relevancy, and between the rulings of the Chair. It is outrageous matter that has gone into 48 States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is the gentleman seeking to expunge these remarks?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and I have offered a resolution to that effect, but I wanted to put enough in here to show the membership the reason for this resolution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think we all heard the reading of the resolution in which the facts were recited. I am making this suggestion in the matter of expedition.

Mr. BLANTON. If it is admitted that everyone of those quotations in the resolution were actual rulings of the Chair, I will not take up any time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I understand it, the gentleman has copied them from the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I want to show they were rulings of the Chair. It is incumbent upon me to do that. I will not take any more time than is necessary.

As a third ruling, the Chairman said:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine himself to the language of his amendment.

Then, on page 5647, I want you to note the rulings of the Chair:

The Charrman. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order, and rules that the point of order is well taken. The gentleman from Washington will confine his remarks to the amendment which he offered and avoid personalities, and please proceed in

Then, on the same page 5647, I read the following, the fifth ruling of the Chair:

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair reminds the gentleman from Washington again that he must confine his remarks to the amendment which he has offered and that he cannot indulge in personalities.

The gentleman from Washington said:

That is right, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair continues:

And the Chair hopes that the gentleman will respect the rules of the House and will not continue to indulge in personalities.

Mr. Speaker, that was the fifth ruling of the Chair.

Then again, on the same page, when a point of order was made against the gentleman from Washington indulging in personalities, the Chairman stated:

The Chairman. The Chair again sustains the point of order.

And then Mr. ZIONCHECK stated:

May I be heard on the point of order?
The Chairman. The Chair has already ruled on the point of order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The next time I want to be heard.

The Charrman. The Chair wishes to say to the gentleman from Washington again that he hopes he will proceed in order.

Mr. Zioncheck. I will.

The Chairman. Or else take his seat.
Mr. Zioncheck. Mr. Chairman, on the next point of order I want to be heard. I am going to explain that this is very pertinent to the amendment that I have offered, but I want to be heard next time.

The Chairman. The Chair reminds the gentleman from Washington that it is within the discretion of the Chair as to what the Chair will hear on a point of order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And may I state to the Chair that when I am properly heard on this there can be no discretion?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. To R. Q. Lee, the deed dated December 10-

Mr. Blanton. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is violating the rules of the House, violating the ruling of the Chair thrice repeated to him, that he cannot discuss outside, personal matters on an amendment to strike out language such as the gentleman made.

Mr. Zioncheck. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order? I am serious in this.

Mr. Blanton. The gentleman from Washington was repeating about some deed that was made to R. Q. Lee at a certain date.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Who was R. Q. Lee?

The CHARMAN. The Chair rules that the point of order is sustained and the gentleman from Washington will either proceed in order or the gentleman from Washington will take his seat.

The proceedings of the House went on, debate was concluded, and we were ready to take the bill up for final vote. The following proceedings were had, and I want you to know that after all of those repeated rulings and eight different admonitions from the Chair that he could not indulge in personalities, between the rulings of the Chair and where it had no relevancy whatever, the gentleman from Washington stuck in here a whole page and parts of two other pages of personal attacks on me, wholly against the rules of the House and without any authority of the House, as well as in violation of eight different rulings and admonitions of the Chair that he could not do it.

Now, here is the way it came up, and I will give you the exact connection. I read from page 5650 of the RECORD:

Mrs. Norton, Mr. Zioncheck, and Mr. Taber rose. Mrs. Norton, Mr. Chairman, the committee accepts the amend-

Mr. Zioncheck. Mr. Chairman, the gentlewoman from New Jersey does not rise in opposition to the amendment.

The Charman. The gentlewoman from New Jersey is the chairman of the committee handling the proposed legislation. She is seeking recognition, and the Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from New Jersey for 2 minutes, the time remaining under the rule. I will consume

Mr. Zioncheck. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. Zioncheck. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I will consulte that 2 minutes if anybody does.

Mrs. Norton. Will the gentleman yield the 2 minutes to me?

Mr. Zioncheck. I will yield 1 minute of the time, if necessary.

The Chairman. The Chair has recognized the chairman of the committee, the gentlewoman from New Jersey, for the remaining 2 minutes

2 minutes,
Mr. ZIONCHECK. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. ZIONCHECK. The point of order is this: I think the parliamentary rule is—and if it is not, it should be—that the chairman of the Committee on Rules cannot take the last 5 minutes to make an amendment and then make a speech consuming all the time. I think that is not decent.

The Charman. If the Chair understands the gentleman's point of order, the Chair overrules it. There is 1 minute of time left. Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, then I make another point of order.

You will notice, consuming all the time with points of order that the Chair, in each case, overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order, and make it brief.

Mr. Zioncheck. I do not want to argue the point. I do not want to offend the lady from New Jersey. [Cries of "Regular"

order!"]
The Charrman. The regular order is the gentleman from Washington has made a point of order.

Mr. Zioncheck. How much time is remaining? I want to know how many are going to talk.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a point of order. The time has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. O, Mr. Chairman, that comes too late. All time

The Chairman. The Chair overtules that point of order. Mr. Zioncheck. What objection is there? Why does the Chair overrule the point of order?

Now, in between that question and the ruling of the Chair, and after the House adjourned, without any authority of the House to put personal matters in here, or to put in attacks, after the House adjourned, between the rulings of the Chair, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Zioncheck] went out here and stuck in between the rulings of the Chair one whole page and parts of two other pages of personal attacks.

I do not know what we are going to do in situations like this. Everyone who knows anything about the matter knows that these attacks on me were wholly irrelevant, baseless, and unjust, but this Record has gone into 48 States without authority of the House. It is being read in 48 States today, and is a libel and a slander upon me and upon my good name.

I want to mention just one thing, and then I am done, regarding this property which belonged to a member of my family. When that property was sold, I was especially requested by the gentleman who bought it, that it be sold to him. It was sold at a loss of $4,000 cash, an absolute loss of $4,000 cash, and under a written contract, the purchaser was to pay off a trust that was due against it to Rust & Co.

This house was occupied for nearly 2 years, and not a single dollar was paid on that trust to Rust & Co.-not a dollar-and after the owner went home, in order to try to help the family, at the special request of their attorney, who is one of the leading attorneys in west Texas, at his request and in order to prevent a suit bringing them into the Federal court here 2,000 miles away, at a great financial loss to me I arranged for someone to buy that property, at another great loss to me, which was out of my own pocket; and yet I am condemned here in the RECORD against the rules of the House and against eight different rulings of the Chair. This stuff has gone all over the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know that there is any connection between the two, but when there was a bunch of Communists marching on the Capitol the other day, one of them was arrested, and the police authorities took these documents off of one of them and brought them to me because my name is mentioned in one of them. One of these documents says, "Remember, our Washington slogan is to foment trouble, to create dissentions and disorder", and in the last one of them it is said, "Concentrate on BLANTON, of Texas. He is the Communists' worst enemy."

I do not know, otherwise, why this concentrated fight is on me, but it is against me, and I can stand up in front of it if they will fight a square fight and obey the rules.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to get this question fairly presented, because the gentleman is asking action, as I understand it, on the part of the House.

As I understand, the gentleman from Washington will justify his remarks, whether they are justifiable or not, upon the consent that he obtained, as shown on page 5644 of the RECORD, where he obtained unanimous consent to extend his own remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. Now, does the majority leader hold that that gives a Member the right to put into the RECORD personal attacks on another Member?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly it does not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But I want to get the issue clarified.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly, and that has no relevancy, because this is a personal attack that could not have been made on the floor because the Chairman had ruled it could not be done; and it could not be put in as an extension of remarks, because the rules of the House forbid it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield to anyone. The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Then, Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the reso-

The question was taken.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I want a roll-call vote on this, and I object to the vote. I want the year and nays, or at least a standing vote.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the demand comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think so.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 118, noes 0.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote upon the ground that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-five Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the door, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 275, answered "present" 9, not voting 144, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. On motion of Mr. Blanton, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table. The doors were opened.

EXPENSES OF SPECIAL AND SELECT COMMITTEES

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 567, to provide an additional appropriation for expenses of special and select committees of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1936.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a House joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 567

Resolved, etc., That for expenses of special and select committees authorized by the House of Representatives there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,000 for the fiscal year 1936: Provided, That no person shall be employed under this appropriation at a rate of compensation in excess of $3,600 per annum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

THE TAX BILL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until tomorrow at midnight to file a report upon the tax bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Does that include also minority views?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Also minority views.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask the gentleman a question, and I shall not object. Does the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means expect to get this bill taken up on Wednesday next?

Mr. DOUGHTON. So far as I know, the committee will be ready to take the bill up on Wednesday, but inasmuch as the bill will not be available to Members of the House until Wednesday, I think it but fair to the House that we should not take the bill up until Thursday, so as to give the Members an opportunity to familiarize themselves with the bill and the report.

Mr. PATMAN. Further reserving the right to object, I want the information because we have another bill, the Robinson-Patman bill, which we hope to get up on Wednesday, if possible, and I wanted to make sure this bill would not interfere with that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, of course it was the plan and the hope that this bill could be taken up on Wednesday. That has been the expectation for some time.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I appreciate that fact, and the committee has been laboring diligently to that end, but inasmuch as we are unable to make the report available to the House before Wednesday morning we think it but fair to give the Members of the House one day in which to read the report and familiarize themselves with the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the chairman of the committee would inform the minority members of the committee when they may be able to have a look at this so-called tax bill?

Mr. DOUGHTON. We hope to be able to accommodate the minority members in that respect early tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman if he can tell us about what this tax bill will yield in taxes?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will inform the gentleman in the report with respect to that.

Mr. RICH. But if we are going to have only 1 day to consider this bill-

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman does not expect me to take a day to answer him now, does he?

Mr. RICH. But we are going to have only 1 day to consider the bill before it comes on the floor of the House, as I understand it. Is that correct?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is the present intention.

Mr. RICH. If newspaper reports are correct they state that the bill will yield about $799,000,000, but I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the increase in appropriations this year over last in the various bills which have been submitted will require over $800,000,000 when they come back from the Senate. More than the tax bill will yield. Why do you not stop spending?

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Lee] is recognized.

Mr. AYERS. Will the gentleman yield in order that I may make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield.

SUSPENSION OF ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3669) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like some explanation of this bill. I do not know how far it goes or what there is to it.

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the minority leader and all other Members, let me explain that this bill suspends the annual assessment work upon unpatented mining claims for the calendar year ending July 1, 1936. It is, word for word and figure for figure, a companion to my bill, H. R. 12190, which was reported unanimously out of the Committee on Mines and Mining of the House. Many of the western Members from mining States are very much interested in this legislation.

The gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining, and who engineered my bill through his committee, has agreed with me that the expeditious way of securing early passage of this legislation is to take the Senate bill from the Speaker's table and substitute it for my bill and pass it. Expediency is necessary, because this year's work will have to be completed by July 1; and if it is to be suspended, the claim holders should know of that fact at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Speaker, understand that this legislation is to take care of the small claimant and operator. Many of them are unable to do this year's assessment work, and upon their failure to do it the claims will be relocated by other persons and mining companies, and the general "jumping of claims" will commence in the mining States on noon of July 1, if this bill is not passed.

This legislation limits the number of claims that both an individual and a company can hold without representation work. In all, it is for the prospector and the little fellow.

Mr. SNELL. Have we done this same thing before?

Mr. AYERS. We have.

Mr. SNELL. How many times?

Mr. AYERS. Three times before the senior Senator from Idaho and myself have introduced this same bill suspending annual assessment work for the current year, and each time it has become law.

Mr. SNELL. No one seems to have any objection to it, so I will not object.

Mr. AYERS. I thank the gentleman. And, Mr. Speaker, I trust that my request for immediate consideration may be

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which requires on each mining claim located, and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed or improvements aggregating such amount to be made each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended as to all mining claims in the United States during the year beginning at 12 o'clock m. July 1, 1935, and ending at 12 o'clock m. July 1, 1936: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply in the case of any claimant not entitled to act shall not apply in the case of any claimant not entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1935: Provided further, That every claimant of any such mining claim, in order to obtain the benefits of this act, shall file, or cause to be filed, in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded, on or before 12 o'clock m. July 1, 1936, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this act, which notice shall state that the claimant, or claimants, were entitled to exemption from the payment of a Federal income tax for the taxable year 1935: And provided further, That such suspension of assessment work shall not apply to more than 6 lode-mining claims held by the same person, nor to more than 12 lode-mining claims held by the same partnership, association, or corporation: And provided further, That such suspension of assessment work shall not apply to more than 6 placer-mining claims not to exceed 120 acres (in all) held by the same person, nor to more than 12 placer-mining claims not to exceed 240 acres (in all) held by the same partnership, association, or corporation.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

THE TAX BILL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the tax bill is taken up there may be 16 hours general debate on the bill, the time to be equally divided between those favoring the bill and those opposing the bill, the time of those favoring the bill to be controlled by myself and of those opposing the bill to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and that the debate be confined to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask if the gentleman from North Carolina intends to ask unanimous consent pertaining to the consideration of the bill as it is read under the 5-minute rule? That is, if it is to be read afterward under the 5-minute rule, as usual?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Why, of course.

Mr. SNELL. I have no objection to the first part of the gentleman's request.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Reserving the right to object, Speaker, and I do not propose to object, I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, since his request provided that the time be divided between those opposed to the bill and those in favor of it, if those opposed to the bill on the Democratic side will be able to get some time from the majority side of the committee, or will they have to go to the Republican side of the House if they are opposed to the bill?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Well, the time is to be equally divided between those in favor of and those opposed to the bill. There is no definite understanding about that, as far as I know. We hope to be able to take care of the gentleman. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] will take care of those on his side. We will try to be fair about it and reciprocate in any way we can, of course.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Then, do I understand that those opposed to the bill, on the Democratic side, will be able to get some time from the majority side of the committee?

Mr. DOUGHTON. We will do the best we can.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Continuing what I desired to say on the tax bill, because you bring this tax bill in, do not forget that we must hold the appropriation bills down and not spend more money than is raised by the additional taxes. Your increase in appropriation this year will be more than your tax bill. Some way to run this Government, I must say.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may have until midnight tomorrow to file majority and minority views on the tax bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the House has agreed upon 16 hours of general debate, what is the objection to taking the bill up Wednesday morning instead of waiting until Thursday morning?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman from South Carolina perhaps was not in the Chamber when we discussed the matter. It was my view that inasmuch as the report would not be available to the Members until Wednesday morning it would be fairer to them not to take the bill up until Thursday, giving them an opportunity of familiarizing themselves with the report and the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Can we not do that as the general debate proceeds?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That would be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, there will be objection to taking up the bill before we have even seen it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection upon request.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order the gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield, but this is the last time I shall yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, the reason I made the point of no quorum and consumed a little of the time of the House in obtaining a roll call was to demonstrate that I am entitled to obstruct the business of the House as well as the gentleman from Texas or any other Member.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further. I hope the Members will allow me to proceed without interruption. I have been rather liberal in yielding at the beginning with the hope that I would not be interrupted.

Mr. Speaker and Members of Congress, I believe that the Government should promote a back-to-the-land, home-ownership program, making possible a farm for every farmer and a home for every family. I shall address myself to that

There is a bill, S. 2367, introduced by Senator Bankhead, of Alabama, that has for its purpose the creation of a farm and home corporation to aid in rural rehabilitation such as I have in mind. This bill has passed the Senate and is now before the Agricultural Committee. Although not a member of that distinguished committee, I am deeply interested in this bill, and wish to outline in general terms the kind of plan I should like to support in order to accomplish this worthy purpose. Please bear in mind that I am not necessarily describing the bill that is before the Agricultural Committee, but rather describing the kind of bill that I should like to vote for.

In the first place, I believe that this bill should consolidate all kindred Government agencies that have for their purpose farm and home ownership, and thereby eliminate unnecessary duplication. For instance, such organizations as land retirement, subsistence homesteads, rural rehabilitation, rural resettlement, and perhaps even the farm-loan organization along with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, could all be consolidated into one farm and home ownership agency. Of course, due consideration should be given in order that only such consolidations be made as would result in economy and efficiency.

This farm and home ownership organization would have two general purposes. One would be loans, the other rehabilitation. The loan divisions would lend for homes, no matter whether they be in the country, in the suburbs, or in the cities. But the rehabilitation division would deal only in rural and suburban property by helping people to buy farms or acreage homes where they could till the soil. It would not deal in city property but would be a rural rehabilitation agency that would help people until they could qualify for a loan. Then they would get a loan from the loan division. In this manner the two divisions work together to promote farm and home ownership, one loaning to those financially able to qualify for a loan, the other giving people an opportunity to work the land in order to produce enough to qualify for a loan so they could buy it.

First, I wish to discuss the loan division. I believe that these loans should be made for the purpose of home-ownership only, and when the property is no longer used as a home [by the owner the loan should automatically come due, thereafter bearing the regular commercial rate of interest. This would prevent speculation on property covered by these loans.

These loans should be available up to a limited amount either for purchasing or refinancing homes, no matter whether the homes are in the city, in the suburbs, or in the

The interest charged on these loans should be at the lowest possible rate—I would say 11/2 percent, and certainly not more than 2 percent. This rate of interest should apply to loans on all homes, no matter whether they are city homes, small-acreage homes, or farm homes.

The terms of repayment likewise should be as liberal as possible consistent with the deterioration of the property, since improvements deteriorate faster than land. The length of the loan should bear some relation to the proportion of value represented by the improvements as compared to that represented by the land. The greater the proportion of value represented by land, the longer the loan. The greater the proportion of value represented by the improvements, the shorter the loan. There should be three general classifications; that is, the repayments on farm loans should be spread over a period of about 40 years, small-acreage loans over a period of about 25 years, and city loans a period of about 15 or 20 years. Such a schedule would make the payments relatively easy and at the same time protect the Government against loss by deterioration.

The purpose of this program is not only to make it easy to purchase a home but to make it easy to keep that home. So much for the general provisions of the loan division.

Now I shall devote the remainder of my discussion to rural rehabilitation. The purpose of this agency is to rehabilitate those who are unable to qualify for a loan. It would get them on the farms and acreage tracts where they could support themselves. Then if they make good it will give them the opportunity of buying the land. It is a rural rehabilitation. Its purpose is to get the homeless man on the homeless land.

Today there are thousands of farm tenants who would make good if they had such an opportunity. There are thousands of young married people who want to go to farming on a farm that they would later have the chance to buy. There are thousands of laboring men who would like to increase their security by owning a small acreage home in the suburbs. There are thousands of professional people with limited incomes and people on small salaries and people who have only part-time employment who would like to have a home where they could produce at least a part of their living by working in the soil. A rural rehabilitation program such as this would give them that opportunity.

Of course it would be futile to help people buy homes without correcting economic conditions that cause people to lose their homesteads. This program, in conjunction with measures we have already enacted, would do just that.

In the first place, the liberal terms of the loans for homes would give relief from high interest rates that have caused the loss of many homes.

Another reason that those people have lost their homes is decreased income due to old age and low-priced farm commodities. This condition has already been greatly remedied by the old-age pension provided in the social security law and the increased farm prices resulting from the Federal farm program.

A third cause for the loss of homesteads is decreased crop yields due to the loss of fertility. This, too, is being corrected by the new farm program which is based upon soilerosion control. But in order to get full cooperation in a soil-building program you must have home owners. The man who owns the soil he tills takes pride in protecting it against erosion and in increasing its fertility.

This program would not only help people to purchase homes, but would help correct the economic conditions that cause them to lose their homes. This program is a necessary part of the whole pattern of social security which we for a number of years by tenants who had little incentive are weaving. You cannot build a successful program of social security without basing it on home ownership. You cannot establish a successful farm relief program on farms operated by tenants. Farm and home ownership fit into the whole program of social security and farm relief like the last block in the jig-saw puzzle.

This rehabilitation and loan program that offers easy terms and gives relief from high interest rates, together with the new farm program that insures the farmer a reasonable price for his commodities, coupled with the soilconservation work which will increase the crop yields, will make it possible for the family to own the roof over its head and the farmer to own the land that he cultivates.

But you say how would this agency go about rehabilitating people? In the first place, the local representatives of the agency would have a pretty good knowledge of the people with whom they were working. Families with good records as farmers and with sufficient livestock and equipment to make a crop would be given a contract of sale and 'grub staked" until they got started. After they had paid a sufficient amount toward the purchase of the farm, the Government would give them a deed and take a mortgage on the farm for the balance due.

We are already financing thousands of people and feeding them and taking care of them but we are not doing much toward getting them on their own resources. When the year is over, under our present system, we are right where we started. We feed a fellow a year and at the end of the year he is still hungry. He is just as helpless as he was at first, or even more so, because he has come to depend more and more upon the Government and less and less upon himself.

The best way to help a man is to help him help himself. By this plan the Government would be helping people to help themselves. You say how would such a plan work? Let me give you an example. Here is a tenant family, the man has nothing in the world but his muscle and a hope in life, and he is about to lose that. He has been on the relief rolls for 2 years. The Government has spent considerable money on him, and he is right where he was at first. Perhaps he is even more helpless than he was to start with, the money has been spent, but no gain has been made.

Now, by the plan I have in mind the Government would not purchase a large tract of land somewhere and then try to settle all of these people on that tract of land, but the rehabilitation agency would say to the man, "Go find a farm that you like, suitable to your needs, that can be bought, worth the money." Let him do it himself, let him and his family pick it out, and let them bargain with the seller on the price, because they are the ones who are going to have to pay for it. Then let the Government send an appraiser to check the value against the price. If the price is right, let the Government buy the farm, lease it to the family, and if they make good, give them a contract of sale for it.

It would be necessary at first to help them get started, but money spent that way would be helping them to support themselves.

As soon as the family has paid a sufficient amount to make it a bona-fide sale, then the Government could give them a title to the farm and take a mortgage for the balance due.

Heretofore, depressions have been solved by the land-vent method, that is, when the unemployed accumulated, the Government would open a new frontier, and drain off these disinherited. When another depression came, the Government would open new land for settlement, and the unemployed would seek homesteads in the new territory. But when this last depression came there were no new lands to open for settlement. Therefore, we should create a land vent by establishing this rehabilitation program and reclaiming some of our old frontiers.

There are thousands of farms that belong to absentee landlords and loan companies who are unwilling owners and would be glad to sell them worth the money. Most of these farms are in a run-down condition. They have been farmed to keep up the improvements or to protect the fertility of | the soil. No doubt some of these farms should be retired permanently from cultivation, but most of them, when farmed by an owner or even a prospective owner, will respond to the efforts to conserve and rebuild their fertility, and once again their fields would produce good crops. Once again those farms would be homesteads where the cows would low in the lane and the morning glory would trellis over the window.

In pioneer days the Government let the settlers provide their own shelters. They utilized the materials that were available in each locality. Some dug into the ground and lived in dugouts—we lived in a dugout.

Some took the sod and built themselves sod shanties, while others cut timber and built log cabins. They improvised shelter from storm. They managed scmehow to secure seed and teams and tools. They became thrifty by necessity. They did without things they wanted in order to get those they had to have.

Therefore, instead of the Government planning the houses for people and building them for them and setting each family up with a certain number of livestock and certain equipment, and then handing the family a bill for everything and saying to them, "Now, when you pay for all of these things that we have bought for you, then you can start buying the farm", why not allow the purchaser to do the planning and buying and building himself?

There will be many things they will and can do without until they are able to afford them. The joint planning and building, and planting, and foregoing constitute the real pleasure of homemaking. The main reason that efforts of the Government along these lines have not been any more successful than they have is because the Government has not allowed the purchaser sufficient latitude in determining his own needs, but has made the cost of such projects prohibitive by including things that were desirable but not absolutely necessary.

The desire to own homes of their own is sufficient incentive to those people to cause them to endure privations, and exert themselves in order to improve those homes; if the Government will only make possible the purchase of homes for these people, they will do the rest.

Many have lost hope already, but such a program as this would rekindle that hope and life would begin anew with the possibility of once more owning a home of their own.

I can still remember seeing that light of hope in the eyes of the pioneers who came to Oklahoma to homestead. They were young and eager. Their blood was red. Their hopes were high. They worked together with a kind of joy in the privations and hardships of pioneer life. They weathered the droughts of pioneer days. They lived on gyp water and white gravy in order to have a home shelter them in their old days. They grew older and more serious. Gradually, I saw that light fade and die out of their eyes. One after another they lost those homes. Today they are farmers without a farm, homesteaders without a home.

We must rehabilitate them, for there is no fall so dangerous as the fall of those invisible towers of faith, but give these people a chance to once more enjoy homes of their own and you will see that light of hope rekindled in their eyes.

This program of farm and home ownership will give them

It is a prudent government that concerns itself with the economic conditions of its people. Have you considered the cotton tenant of the South? He and his family live in a covered wagon or a tent or a shack not fit to house the stock he works. His wife is weary and worn. His children must work in the field. Their hands, like little claws, crack and bleed when the cold days come, but they cannot stop. It takes all hands working long hours to get the barest existence. When the cotton is picked they move on somewhere, no one knows. They are nomads. The peasants of Europe have their huts, but the tenants of America have not where to lay their heads.

Then again, have you seen how some of the laborers in ilies live together in one room. I said they live, but they do not; they only eke out a miserable existence under the most unsanitary and degrading conditions.

Have you seen the garbage towns of the unemployed, where thousands of human beings take refuge from the weather in the garbage dumps. They erect themselves makeshift shelters out of pieces of tin, old barrels, boxes, tow sacks, strips of canvas, old car fenders, and anything they can drag out of the dump heaps that will help to keep out the wind and rain and snow.

My friends, these people are easy converts to communism or even anarchy. What have they to lose by revolution? They have little incentive to protect property rights. The best way to guarantee a continuation of the system of private ownership is to let everybody own some property, then everybody will want to keep the system in order to keep their property; but when the masses have no property they have nothing to lose by an overturn of the system, and it is easy to persuade them that they might even gain something in the shuffle.

Therefore it is a wise government that restores the birthright of its disinherited citizens. Nations are secure in proportion to the general distribution of property. You can no more build a secure government upon a foundation of homeless, drifting people than you can build a tower upon a foundation of drifting sand.

This back-to-the-land, home-ownership program will increase our national security not only by bringing about a better distribution of property but by bringing about a better distribution of population. Thomas Jefferson urged distribution of population, warning against congestion in the cities. Our people today have become too interdependent. The bank crisis 3 years ago brought that to our attention with grim reality. I was teaching at the University of Oklahoma at the time and living at Norman. Of course, we did not know how long the banks would remain closed, so on the third day I hooked a trailer onto my car and drove out to my farm to get a cow, so that we could at least have milk. When I reached the farm they did not even know that the banks had been closed. There in town we had been in a panic for 3 days, trying to manage somehow or other to get the necessaries of life, while out on the farm they did not even know the banks had closed.

It was then I realized how helpless the millions of people are who live in the cities. It seems that we all try to occupy the same space at the same time. We stack our small cells on top of each other like bees in a honeycomb. We invent space-saving furniture. We build efficiency apartments. We narrow our rooms and lower our ceilings. Did you ever see people pouring out of a great apartment house? There they come, hundreds of them, living in one building like ants in a hill, with not 2 days' supply of food ahead—as dependent as babies. A milk strike and they all suffer. The elevator boys went on a strike and paralyzed New York City.

Decentralization of population would also increase our national security from a military standpoint. In case of war an enemy air raid with a few well-placed bombs could destroy millions of people who live in cities; but suppose we get our people living in homes scattered all over the countryside. It would take a separate bomb for each separate home, and I believe the bombers would decide it was too slow to be worth the efforts.

Then again this program would encourage the decentralization of industry. Heretofore transportation facilities, water power, and available labor supply determined the location of industries, but now ribbons of pavement and roaring motor trucks make transportation available anywhere, and steel-towered high lines carry power at a practical cost 250 to 300 miles, and there is, of course, an oversupply of labor available everywhere.

Then again, as industries spring up in small units throughout the country near the source of the raw products, this program of home ownership would make it possible for the workers to live on small acreage tracts around the plants. With good roads and automobiles, they can live in a radius our cities live? They cannot afford a home, so whole fam- of 50 miles and still get to work with greater ease than thousands of people in the crowded cities can reach their |

Then, in case of seasonal work, they can still make their living on the land; and when shorter work-hour schedules are adopted, they can spend their extra time profitably working on their small farms. Instead of living in stuffy tenements and crowded apartments, where their children have no opportunity to play, they could live in colonies out in the fresh air. They could have their own schools and churches and develop community pride, and thus the laboring man, instead of always being a tenant, would have an opportunity to enjoy the pleasures of his own home.

Then, again, producing a superior race should be one of the motives of Government, for by that we can attain greater human happiness. We spend money and time in order to produce blue-ribbon livestock. We should likewise endeavor to produce a blue-ribbon race. Unquestionably, the health and physical development of the people is of concern to the Government. Therefore, by sponsoring a back-to-the-land home-ownership program the Government will be helping people to enjoy more healthful life. It will give them an opportunity to work in the sunshine, to live out of doors more. It will give them more contact with the soil. Mother Earth is good to her children when they live by tilling the soil. The outdoor life of people who toil in the sunshine is more conducive to health than when they congest in crowded apartments and tenements.

In other words, this program means more sunshine and less cod-liver oil. It means less worry because of fear of the future. There is a feeling of security that comes with home ownership that takes away that hunted look.

Furthermore, the outdoor life is good for shattered nerves; it is balm and gilead for the high-strung lives our people are leading.

Then, again, the building of character should be one of the purposes of government. By helping people to own their homes the Government will put them on their own resources. This develops self-reliance and self-initiative.

This program will also develop thrift and industry, because if people know they have an opportunity to own these homes, they will work harder and save and forego pleasures, all of which contributes to the building of character.

Idleness destroys character. With labor-saving inventions, there is less drudgery work to be performed in the cities and in the factories. This makes for more leisure time, but an idle people soon become a pleasure-seeking people, and a pleasure-seeking nation soon decays. But when people live on a farm, there is always present that almost irresistible urge to add some little improvement to the home or to work in the garden, or to prune the orchard.

Therefore, if our people own their homes and farms, they will use the time that labor-saving inventions give them to good advantage, which will contribute more and more to the developing of character.

Furthermore, the home is a good place to build character. A wholeome home life will help solve the crime problem in America. It was not until our people began losing their homes that crime became such an alarming problem in the United States.

HOME OWNERSHIP PROMOTES PATRIOTISM

Home owners make the best soldiers in times of warthey have more to fight for. Home owners make the best citizens in times of peace—they have more to live for. When people are rooted to the soil, they have a deeper interest in the community. They are more public spirited. They take more interest in the welfare of the social group.

The tenant cannot take much interest in a community because he is there only temporarily. The gypsy feels no loyalty for the ground where he camps tonight because tomorrow he moves on. If you want our people to say, "This is mine, my native land", let them own some of it. If you want them to sing, "My country 'tis if thee, I love thy rocks and rills", let them own some of those rocks and rills.

Home ownership is America's best answer to communism. Home owners turn deaf ears to radical propaganda. You cannot persuade a home owner to join the ranks of the destructionists. Communism and all the other radicalisms can live only in an atmosphere of misery and want. They are like disease germs; they thrive best in dark, unhealthy atmosphere; but bring them out into the sunshine of happiness that results from home ownership and they die.

When a man tills his own soil he is twice fed by it. In addition to the fruit it produces, there is a spiritual manna of contentment and happiness that permeates his being and purges his mind of evil. A man cannot lean up against the forks of his own apple tree and plan the destruction of his own Government.

A program of farm and home ownership is conducive to the maximum amount of happiness, the happiness that comes from hope, the happiness that results from the feeling of security. Happiness finds it full fruition only in a wellestablished home, based on the pride of ownership.

The members of the family take pleasure in planting every tree that grows to feed and shelter them. They have a common pleasure even in privations that help them attain their goal of actual home ownership.

Every small improvement has in it a part of the heart and hopes and dreams of each member of the family.

Every new colt and pig and calf add to the sum total of that invisible something we call happiness. They plant tiny seeds and watch them grow. They cultivate them. The seasons march on, the children grow up and return to the home, as birds to the nest, because it is the great fountain head of human happiness. There is security; there is refuge from the world. There is a haven in a storm. The home, the hearthstone, is the heart of America. Let us preserve it; let us encourage it by putting into effect a program that will make possible a farm for every farmer and a home for every family. [Applause.]

STOP! LOOK!! LISTEN!!!

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the requestion of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article entitled "Stop! Look!! Listen!!!" by myself which was published in the April issue of the Young Republican.

If the Republican Party is to be hauled out of the pit—which its vainglorious leaders dug for it, and fell into with it—it is the young men and women voters who will accomplish it.

The Democratic Party was not raised to its present haughty heights by votes of the Democrats alone. There are not enough of them in the country to have given the New Deal the endorsements it received at the polls in 1932 and 1934.

There were scores of thousands of Republican voters, wearied of waiting for a square deal for the farmer and wage earner or of waiting for a square deal for the farmer and wage earner, or for the slightest concession to constructive liberalism, or even a faint glimmer in the intelligence of the Old Guard, who turned to Roosevelt as their only hope for a change in conditions that were not only becoming static but were threatening the life of the Nation.

I am not one of those who believes that the benefits that President Roosevelt is credited with having given the country with his various alphabetical devices originated with the Democratic administration. There are quite a number of things that have been blunderingly attempted during the past 3 years that were originally formulated, and some of these actually started, in the Republican administrations that preceded it.

Nor am I one of the hidebound diehards who will not face the Nor am I one of the hidebound dienards who will not face the fact that the New Deal has brought about a new economic and social era as well as political line-up. More important than that, it has brought about a new habit of mind in viewing and evaluating economic, social, and political questions. The people of this Nation have been awakened to take an entirely new point of view and it is absolutely useless and a waste of energy to deny this Hence the issues must be faced squarely with this new habit of mind.

Essentially it is a young mind that is directing the Nation's thinking. The youth of the Nation has been aroused to its importance. They will have to pay the bills that are coming in for portance. They will have to pay the bills that are coming in for the orgy of spending that has been in progress during the past 3 years—the almost criminal waste of public money and the extravagance of promises as well as funds.

The youth of the country will pay those bills—and pass some of them on to future generations, yet unborn. Hence the youth of the country has arisen and demands to know what it is paying for. It demands to have some voice in selecting the method of payment and the men who shall develop the method.

It is right that our outraged and hitherto ignored youth should so arise. Their demands are just and reasonable. It is eternally right that they should enforce those demands and compel the elders to listen and take heed. In time of war they are called upon to defend the country. In time of peace it is no less the right and duty of youth to carry on the torch from failing hands. If this country is to be worth fighting for it must be worth living for.

this country is to be worth fighting for it must be worth living for.

No one in the Republican Party looks upon the present rising of young Republicans to a better understanding of their potential force in party councils and party plans with greater rejoicing than I do. For years I have labored to carry on the fight for better understanding and better approach to our internal problems. I have contributed all I have to these problems in my own community, in my State and in national affairs. My neighbors and constituents have honored me with increasing majorities.

I now see a great hope for solutions I've sought for many of these highly important problems from the rising of the youthful groups of political fighters throughout the country.

It is most encouraging to me personally to see these young men and women so thoroughly awake to their political responsibilities. Because they are awake and because they are making themselves heard, it is my belief that they may mean the saving of the Nation and a tremendous asset for any political faction with which they may align themselves.

which they may align themselves.

There is an idea I wish would burn itself into the consciousness of the leaders of the Republican Party—that it is my deliberate judgment these young people who give unmistakable evidence of being so strikingly political conscious in our new era may mean the saving of the Nation together with any political party with which they may align themselves.

It is up to the present leaders of the Republican Party as to which party that shall be.

A far greater political mistake than making errors of judgment A far greater political mistake than making errors of judgment of positive failure in efforts exerted toward constructed progress is to remain static—as the Republican Party has been during the past 3 years. It has always been a mistake for the party leaders to so completely ignore the young men, and the young women, too, who are aspiring to leadership—who want to take their places in the political scheme and help work out the destinies of the Nation and the party. That mistake must be corrected. We old leaders must realize we're not training men to succeed us and carry on the glorious traditions of the party by selfishly happing on to our leadership.

ous traditions of the party by selfishly hanging on to our leadership.

Recently I read a most interesting and illuminating magazine article under the title of "Almost a Red." (The American Magaarticle under the title of Almost a Red. (The American Magazine for November.) It was written by a young man who wanted to participate in political work. He came from college with the idea that every man and woman should actively assume the responsibilities of citizenship with an active and working interest in politi-

He went from one party headquarters to another offering his services—as a humble worker. He was not an office seeker. He did not want a political job. He had his own chosen profession and was very much interested in the career that lay before him in this direction. But he did want to justify his acceptance of the benefits of citizenship in this great country by devoting some of his time and undoubted talents to its service—to helping choose the right men for office—to working out the destinies of a political party.

Everywhere but at Communist headquarters he was greeted as one who was trying to horn in on the jobs that were to be distributed. Everywhere his sincerity of purpose was doubted—save by the Communists. They wanted him. They wanted workers—as he wanted to be. They had means of training such workers. Receiving and training workers—not job hunters but plain workers—is one of the fundamentals of their party policy, this young man found.

He could not subscribe to Communist. But the Communists were the only political faction he found that seemed intelligently alive to his own political problem—of finding a place for himself.

alive to his own political problem—of finding a place for himself. It was at Communist headquarters that he received an intelligent welcome from young men and young women of his own intellectual status—people he could talk to and who talked to him with freedom and enthusiasm for their cause, rather than what the individual worker personally get out of it.

This magazine article made a tremendous impression on me. It made me think what my own party was doing—and had done in the past. The young man's experience I've heard recited by many young men and women who have wanted to contribute something young men and women who have wanted to contribute something to the party—and who have been smiled upon, patted on the back, and literally told to run away and play and let the elders who knew how and the practical and professional politicians who were working for office and patronage do the work.

The time for that sort of thing has passed. The young men and women of today will not be put aside. They do not seek to rival or usurp leadership—they want to offer themselves as co-workers—as up and doing Americans with a keen appreciation of their responsibilities, anxious to be engaged in discharging their obligations of citizenship.

The average national party leader is completely surrounded by his own handpicked group of what our modern world calls "yes men." The average national leader, because of his many duties and the many calls upon him—often far beyond his capacity to personally attend to—must deny himself to much he should know. This condition isolates him from the popular thought—the point of view of the men in the street. And his professional "yes men" very effectively complete that isolation, in most instances from purely selfish motives of the type that will not tolerate the entrance of a possible rival on the scene.

I speak of this from my own experience. I have frequently witnessed leaders of my party completely cut off from sources of information urgently needed for an intelligent consideration of problems of vital concern to the State and Nation—because these leaders were carefully isolated from the current, average opinion by sycophants and political satellites.

by sycophants and political satellites.

The younger element have been stupidly cut off and shunted aside politically out of fear that they might demand a small place in the sun. The reactionary Republican leadership has lost touch with the younger element as well as lost the confidence of the liberal element, which together constitute two-thirds of the political strength of the Republican Party.

But I would like to impress on my associates in the Republican Party that we cannot longer stuff the cotton wool of isolation and insulation in our ears.

We have got to listen to the young men and young women. They have the modern point of view—the direct, "show me", modern habit of mind which the great mass of the citizenry—an aroused and politically conscious mass—have developed these days. These young men and women are offering their best thought and their enthusiasm and demand nothing but a square deal and representation. They are knocking at our doors. If we are too isolated to hear and insulated to receive them, they will go elsewhere. They have the balance of political power in this country. They represent almost half the total voting strength of the electorate.

They are becoming very rapidly a cohesive group of the electorate, keenly conscious of their potential power and absolutely determined to use that power to carry the country along their way of thinking, and generally along sound and sane lines, on a constructive liberal platform of a square deal for labor—the farmer, the businessman, and private property under the confines of the Constitution of the United States.

They do not come as office seekers-but as workers for a cause very practical workers for a very practical cause. To them politics have been thoroughly debunked. Phrase making and silvertongued oratory mean little or nothing. It is action they seek.

And they will get it.
Shall it be in the ranks of the Republican Party, where most of them belong and where most of them would really like to be? Shall it be in the ranks of the Democratic Party which is making a very determined bid for them and offering them at least sympathetic hearing?

Or shall they be driven to the organization of a new party—a party of their own?

party of their own?

I would most solemnly warn my associates among the Republican leaders that at this very critical time the defection of any considerable number of Republican voters to a third party would mean the disappearance of the Republican Party in the same manner as the old Whig Party.

I am not exaggerating the situation when I say that. And I speak of it only because the situation is extreme—and extreme methods, if need be, must be adopted.

Is the party of Lincoln, Grant, McKinley, and Theodore Roosevelt to be wrecked because of the vanity and the obstinacy of its present leaders—leaders who refuse to recognize that a political revolution has taken place?

Is the party that has given this Nation many of its greatest men, who led it through the most critical days of its existence and administered its affairs constructively and prosperously for 56 of men, who led it through the most critical days of its existence and administered its affairs constructively and prosperously for 56 of the 82 years of the party's existence, to become a relic of antiquity? With the organization of the Republican Party in 1854, the Whigs went out of existence. With the birth of a new party, backed by the enthusiasm and the numbers of the modern young voter, the Republican Party would suffer the same fate.

It is with the most solemn sincerity, growing out of the great love I have for the party to which I have belonged for so many years, in which I have worked to the utmost of my capacity—the party that has honored me many times far beyond my desserts—party that has honored me many times far beyond my desserts-

party that has honored me many times far beyond my desserts—that I sound this warning.

I do not believe there is any desire on the part of the young Republicans to organize or ever become a part of, or assist in the organization of a third party. In fact, I know the leaders have no such thought and condemn any such suggestion. However, if the Republicans think they can carry the Nation without the younger and liberal element, they are just plumb crazy.

Youth must be served. More important, it must be given its opportunity to serve. And yet more important, it will develop its own medium for the expression of its enthusiasm, its vigor, and its power if existing agencies do not respond to its offer of these highly essential factors in sound organization and good government.

I know of no way to win the next Presidential election than by encouraging youth and the liberal element to participate in shaping the policies of the Republican Party. Action alone counts.
The time to begin is now. The way to begin is to begin in every county and in every State of the Nation, inviting cooperation of younger and liberal elements to take their proper place in leadership of our party.

If such a constructive policy is put into effect, millione of ship of our party.

If such a constructive policy is put into effect, millions of energetic and enthusiastic young crusaders will enfuse new blood and fighting spirit that will carry the torch of Republicanism on to greater victories for the benefit of all sections of the Republic. There must be no compromise with the socialism or class hatred of the New Deel, nor must we go back to any old order of special of the New Deal, nor must we go back to any old order of special privilege, dominated by wealth and reaction. We must go forward on a sound, constructive, liberal platform of a square deal for all the American people.

Let us reaffirm our faith in the early principles of the Republican Party when it stood squarely for human rights as being superior to property rights and, as Lincoln said, "Labor is prior to capital." Let us build a bridge so that millions of deceived, disgruntled, and disgusted Jefferson Democrats may cross over to a liberalized Republican Party and help elect a Republican President in 1936 and restore representative government to the people. The Republican Party today needs leadership of the type, character, and ideals of Abraham Lincoln. Let us enfuse the spirit of Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt into a liberalized and humanized Republican Party. Let us invoke the faith in the people that Lincoln loved and the faith of Theodore Roosevelt in popular government, and a square deal for the American people as the guide and cornerstone for the rebirth of a militant Republican Party.

(NOTE.—All eras of American history record activities of some man named Hamilton Fish, who served his country with single-minded patriotism and sometime died for it on the field of battle. Hamilton Fish, Jr., Member of Congress from the Twenty-sixth District of New York, is not only a worthy son of such ancestry, but is one who has persistently and consistently put into practice the ideals of young Republicanism. It takes courage for a young man to leave a life of ease and dive into the maelstrom of practical politics. It takes even greater courage to stand out from the regimented followers of powerful leaders and tell those leaders when they're misleaders. But Hamilton Fish, Jr., does just that—with the kind of courage that makes it easy to see why he won the Croix de Guerre and a silver star citation for gallantry in action as a captain of Infantry in France and why he caused to be inaugurated, and then conducted, the crusade against communism in the United States.) munism in the United States.)

MANDATE OF EACH MAJOR POLITICAL PARTY

In the discussion of the legislation it was contended that this bill must be passed in order to save independent merchants of the country and prevent monopoly; that it is not a price-fixing bill or class legislation; that it merely gives to independent merchants and voluntary organizations of independent merchants the same rights and benefits and no more as enjoyed by corporate chains; that it will not compel corporate chains to pay a higher price but will require the manufacturers to give the independents the same price; that the bill is in accordance with mandates of both major political parties; and that unless it passes at this session of Congress monopoly will have a much firmer grip upon the throats of the people and within a short time the independents will be threatened with extinction.

BILL CAREFULLY PREPARED HAVING IN MIND CONSUMERS' INTEREST

Mr. Parman, coauthor of the bill, stated that this bill, as reported by the committee, is a result of months of hearings: hundreds of pages of testimony were taken and are now in printed form and available through the Judiciary Committee of the House; that witnesses were heard on both sides of the question and every question that can possibly arise was carefully considered; that the interest of the consumers was given first consideration; that the bill represents the combined thought and judgment of the best-informed people in America on this subject, including representatives of the trade, consumers, corporate chains, department stores, and trade organizations—including druggists, grocers, hardware, and dry goods, both retail and wholesale; that it also includes the mature judgment based upon years of experience of representatives from governmental departments that have for many years dealt directly with the questions involved, including the Federal Trade Commission and antitrust division of the Department of Justice.

AT LEAST 100 COAUTHORS OF BILL IN HOUSE

Mr. Patman further stated that as coauthor he held the same position with reference to the bill as all other members of the steering committee and other parties who have contributed toward the perfection of the measure; that at least a hundred Members of the House are entitled to the same credit for this measure and have made the equal contributions toward its perfection as himself; that the bill is not a partisan measure but is nonpartisan; and our objectives should be the early passage of the bill in order to protect the consumers against monopoly and the independent merchants against extinction.

THANKS TO JUDICIARY COMMITTEE OF HOUSE

Mr. Patman further expressed appreciation especially to Congressmen Utterback, Ramsay, Sumners of Texas, McLaughlin, Miller, Weaver, Duffey of Ohio, Adair, Walter, Gassaway, Chandler, and Guyer, and all other friends on the Judiciary Committee of the House for the very effective work after weeks and months of extended and patient hearings on the proposed legislation.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the Record to cover section 5 of the bill just referred to by the gentleman from Colorado, which is the basing-point section.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. There is a great deal of objection to that section among the Members, I may say to the gentleman, and an effort will be made to obtain a separate vote on it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I understand; and that is the reason I desire to extend my own remarks at this point in the Record on that particular section.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Perhaps a great many Members of the House are not aware of the fact that paragraph 5 of section 2 of H. R. 8442, known as the Robinson-Patman bill, is in reality a paragraph which deals with the whole question of so-called "basing points" and should be stricken from the bill. This section does not belong in the bill, and its removal would not prejudice the rest of the measure. Moreover, both the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House and the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate have been dealing with this matter in a wholly separate measure, known as the Wheeler-Rayburn bill, and therefore the incidental treatment which is accorded to the whole basing-point question in H. R. 8442 should be stricken out. Quite aside from that fact there are a host of reasons why the basing-point section should be stricken from the bill, and I shall enumerate them as briefly as possible.

Paragraph 5, on page 7 of the bill, reads as follows:

That the word "price" as used in this section 2 shall be construed to mean the amount received by the vendor after deducting actual freight or cost of other transportation, if any, allowed or defrayed by the vendor.

In practical language that section means that all sellers or vendors of commodities will be compelled to quote prices f. o. b. instead of the delivered price. That this is the purpose of the section is borne out by the language of the report accompanying this bill, as indicated at the bottom of page 14 of said report, which contains the statement:

It will require the use of the f. o. b. method of sale.

This means f. o. b. the mill, plant, factory, or establishment which produces the goods.

The basing-point system of quoting prices on commodities which is now in vogue in many industries is nothing more than a system under which prices are quoted to consumers f. o. b. certain convenient points, which are either points of manufacture or points of distribution. As an example, Chicago is a basing point. If a purchaser in Peoria wishes to buy steel, cement, or other products, he is quoted f. o. b. Chicago. This system of quoting from the nearest basing point gives all mills, whether located near or far away, an equal chance to compete for the business.

Obviously, a mill in Pittsburgh or Pueblo, Colo., or in Youngstown or Wheeling could not compete with a mill in Peoria for the business of a consumer living in Peoria, because of the freight rate involved from these distant points to Peoria. On the other hand, if the basing-point system were not in use, a Peoria mill could not compete for business near Pittsburgh, or Pueblo, or Youngstown, or Wheeling for the same reason. The basing-point system, therefore, makes it possible for mills and factories everywhere in the country to bid for business in all sections of the country irrespective of the competition that may be encountered from a mill located right close to where the consumer is situate. If you were to destroy the basing-point system and compel quotation of prices f. o. b. the mill, it would mean that mills would be compelled to get business in and around the mill and let other mills do likewise. It would mean that the most profitable location for mill operations would be the densely populated areas of the country. The specific objections to abolishing the basing-point system as contemplated in paragraph 5 are these:

First. It would force mills and factory to scrap a method of quoting prices which enables them to compete in any section of the country in any season of the year on reasonably equal terms.

Second. Producers who sell in a national market now under the basing-point system would have to confine their activities to the areas close to the point of production.

Third. It would compel the shifting of mills and factories to the large consuming centers, Fourth. Such shifting of production would disturb employment in existing producing centers and destroy capital investments.

Fifth. Small industries in the sparsely settled areas that now compete in the national markets would be compelled to greatly curtail production or be destroyed altogether.

Sixth. Buyers who can now buy on an equitable basis from any producer in the United States would be compelled to depend on the mill or factory closest to the location of the buyer, and virtually make such buyer dependent on whatever price the closest mill might quote.

Seventh. The basing-point system is a simple and convenient method of price quotation which makes it comparatively easy for the buyer and seller to compute freight rates and easy for the seller to determine what competition must be met at a given point. To abolish this system would compel producers to completely revamp and alter their sales and distribution policies.

Eighth. This effort to abolish the basing-point system only adds to the confusion that now besets industrial producers to the point where they do not know what to do, or what they are expected to do. On the one hand, we have the Guffey bituminous-coal-control bill, the proposed textile-control bill, and a newly threatened N. R. A., all of which lead toward a cartelization of industry, while, on the other hand, there is an apparent tendency to destroy bigness. It is a confusing and inconsistent approach to an industrial problem which does not make sense.

Ninth. The argument that the phantom freight charges which are concealed in a quoted price f. o. b. a basing point are unfair to some buyers is refuted by the fact that whatever is gained on freight charges by a mill to some nearby point are quite offset by the extra charges which a mill must pay in shipping to a more distant point. The two quite offset each other and constitute no financial gain to the producer.

Tenth. To abolish the basing-point system and compel mills to depend on what business they can get in an area that is half the distance to the next nearest mill or factory would in countless instances mean a curtailment of the production volume. In proportion as volume is curtailed the overhead goes up. This increased overhead must necessarily be reflected in higher prices to the public or a shut-down.

Eleventh. Producers of goods with a national distribution are able to stabilize production from one end of the year to the other, despite seasonal slumps in business or despite geographical slumps when weather or custom or habit in some particular section of the country causes a decline in sales. Deprive a mill or factory of national distribution and you disturb the production level to the point where they must reduce employment in some portions of the year and speed it up at other times.

Twelfth. If the basing-point system is abolished so that national distribution becomes impossible, there will be little or no incentive for mills and factories to engage in extensive and costly research in order to develop specialized products. Nor would there be any incentive for a national advertising campaign to place such a product on the market because of the impossibility of competing with mills in other areas who have the freight rate advantage that comes through geographical location.

Thirteenth. The basing-point system now used has resulted in a simplification of price quotations. For 3 cents one can mail a letter which can be carried from Washington to Baltimore or from Washington to Los Angeles. Yet the distance from Washington to Los Angeles is 50 times greater than from Washington to Baltimore. The efficiency of our postal system is in its simplified application. The same is true of the basing-point system.

In fairness to the proponents of the abolition of the basingpoint system, it might be stated that the principal arguments in behalf of such action are, first, that the basing-point system is a means of fixing prices. The answer to that, of course, is that it is a means of quoting prices, not fixing prices. Parenthetically, it might be added that we now have a host of suggestions and proposals to hold up prices in order to get at the price cutters and a host of other measures to reduce prices which are aimed at the price fixers. With these conflicting philosophies in the air, business, industry, and labor have no idea where we are or whither we are tending.

Secondly, it is argued that the basing-point system enables factories and mills to collect unearned freight. The usual example cited is that the basing-point price reflects freight by rail at the rate of $2 per ton on some certain commodity, whereas the goods were actually shipped to the basing point or to the consumer by water at $1 a ton. The answer to this argument is that mills may gain on some shipments and lose on others, so that over all the gains and losses offset each other.

The third argument is that the huge expense of cross hauling is a sheer waste of money which is reflected in higher prices to the consumer. If that be true, the same logic might apply to men who work in a mill 30 miles distant from their homes when there happens to be a mill in their home city. Still another answer is that in the case of mills which use scrap material located close to the point of production, the saving in freight in shipping to the closest mill as compared with the freight that would have to be paid for a haul to a distant mill to some degree offsets the cross-haul expense of the finished product. The more fundamental reason, however, is that in seeking to end the allegedly expensive cross hauling of goods you are in substance saying to the American consumer that he must buy in Pittsburgh even though he wants to buy from Chicago, or that he must buy from a mill in Minneapolis even though he prefers the identical products of a mill in Peoria. Such a course would be regimentation with a vengeance.

A volume might be written on the subject of abolishing basing points, but the foregoing should be sufficiently ample and convincing to show that paragraph 5 of this bill, which seeks to abolish them, is fraught with danger, and embodies the possibility of completely dislocating American industry to the detriment of invested capital, management, labor, and to the communities where thousands of mills and factories are now located.

UNTO THE THIRD AND FOURTH GENERATION

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a speech delivered by my colleague the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. Kahn].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the Record I include the following speech of Representative Florence P. Kahn, of San Francisco, Calif., delivered over the facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System from Washington, April 16, 1936. Mrs. Kahn's subject was Unto the Third and Fourth Generation.

This evening I am not going to talk politics but policies, not promises but performances, not propaganda but principles—not so much the speed at which we are traveling but the direction in which we are going: in other words, not the gait but the goal.

so much the speed at which we are traveling but the direction in which we are going; in other words, not the gait but the goal.

I am talking primarily to the men and women sitting as I often sit, in the home acquired by thrift and saving, surrounded by their families—just folks—just Mr. and Mrs. Average Citizen—and to them I direct the question, "Quo vadis—Whither are we going?" Are we adrift upon an uncharted sea, trusting to the pilots to steer us to a safe harbor, relying entirely upon their word that they have a chart, a plan, a secure harbor, or is our ship of state sailing perilously near reefs and rocks that if we strike will surely wreck us?

one of the dangers that threatens is taxes, taxes, taxes, with the new tax bill the chief topic of conversation—"Will they?" "Can they?" "Can't they?", and any one answer is as good as the others. But don't console yourself with the idea that only the rich will pay. Every person who owns anything will pay and pay and pay and pay.

pay and pay and pay.

Just think, every minute of every day and every night the Government is spending $9,669—that is the Federal Government—not State or local, which have also gone tax mad. The Federal Government spends $1.95 for each dollar collected, and during the current fiscal year $5,082,084,690 is being spent by the various departments, commissions, and agencies of the present administration according to Treasury figures. In fact, the deficits are so large and so many that they are using green ink to mark them up, as so much red ink is hard on the eyes.

Just to emphasize a few of the facts I have mentioned here up, as so much red ink is hard on the eyes.

Just to emphasize a few of the facts I have mentioned, here are a few of the taxes you are paying of which you are not conscious: Almost a third of your rent goes in taxes; 53 different kinds of taxes are mixed with the dough of every loaf of bread you eat; the milk you drink is taxed; every package of cigarettes is taxed; on your car you pay 27 different kinds of taxes, 117 on its upkeep, and of every dollar you spend for gasoline 40 cents are for taxes. The tax on your telephone is $7 a year. If you are sick you pay 71 different taxes on your drugs and medicines and medicinal supplies. And if you die there are still 57 different kinds of taxes to be paid. In my own State of California there are 89 different days on which taxes are due, to say nothing of the sales tax on every purchase made. So just ponder this, and don't think only the rich pay! And this in the face of definite promises and repeated assurances that taxes will be reduced and the Budget balanced. And even if the Budget is balanced will it be the entire Budget? Oh, no; just the Budget of the regular departments—the old stand-by departments, not the extraordinary budgets—for economy, thrift, saving mean nothing to alphabetical agencies. Extravagance, wastefulness, thriftlessness—that's what you are paying for.

agencies. Extravagance, wastefulness, thriftlessness—that's what you are paying for.

And suppose we balance one Budget—ordinary and extraordinary—how many years do you think it would take just to pay our present indebtedness? Not in your lifetime or mine, not in the lifetime of anyone alive today—verily unto the third and fourth generations shall the sins of extravagant spending and wastefulness descend. I wonder how many have any appreciation of what our national debt of thirty-one and one-half billions (approximately) means. We speak of billions as if they meant nothing. They really mean nothing, for we have no conception of what a billion is. Let us reduce it to concrete terms. For the purpose of easy calculation let us put the beginning of the Christian era as January 1 of the year 1 and let us say that each year consisted uniformly of 12 months to the year, 30 days to the month, 24 hours to the day, 60 minutes to the hour. Now if for every minute—not hour or day or week—but for every minute of the time from January 1 of the year 1 to January 1 of the year 1836, $1 was paid into the United States Treasury—let me repeat not every hour or every day, but every minute—how much do you think would have been paid in? Just $1,003,404,000. Yes; just a little more than $1,000,000. That may give you some idea of the amount of the debts we are saddling upon our children and our children's children unto the third and fourth generations.

Closely connected with taxes is, of course, the tariff, at one time of our great sources of income. Whet with reciprocal tariffs.

closely connected with taxes is, of course, the tariff, at one time one of our great sources of income. What with reciprocal tariffs, favored-nation clauses, lower duties, what do we find? Not only income cut off but a tremendous importation of agricultural products. We have cut down and plowed under so much we find ourselves with a deficit instead of a surplus. Instead of exporting we are importing. We are increasing the spending power abroad instead of at home at the expense of our own farmers and raising our own cost of living. To show that this is no idle boast, here are a few facts and figures.

But first just a word as to what is meant by favored-pation

But first just a word as to what is meant by favored-nation clause. With many nations we have an agreement known as favored-nation clause—in fact with all important nations except Germany—and with Czechoslovakia and Russia we have agreements that amount to practically the same thing. How do these clauses work? Every nation with whom we have these favored-nation exceptions were consequents when the consequence of the consequence clauses work? Every nation with whom we have these lavored-nation agreements obtain automatically the same concessions we make with any other nation under the reciprocal tariff. For in-stance, in our trade agreement with Canada the dairy products were given special concessions. It is true Canada made some concessions in return, but other countries making no concession still under this favored-nation clause enjoy the benefits we have given Canada. If we examine the imports into this country of January 1936 we are stunned at the increase. Listen, farmers who raise, listen, consumers who buy, January 1936 is the real first try-out, so let us compare our imports of January 1935 with January 1936:

Product	Imports
	1935	1936
Fresh pork Cattle Cheese Horses Turnips Potatoes Milk powder Fresh beef Bacon and hams Wool Poultry	$4, 386 54, 483 7, 863 15, 315 45, 124 2, 414 9, 387 4, 097 8, 223 7, 110 698	$76,010 457,962 96,727 98,500 118,757 27,853 28,348 23,713 21,623 159,598 7,359

These figures certainly speak for themselves.

These figures certainly speak for themselves.

In closing, may I just say a word as to what I hope our future Republican policy will be? We all know we are living in a changing world, and policies must be changed to meet new conditions. To the Republicans I appeal to consider their platforms, their enunciation of plans and promises in the light of these new adjustments, to announce to the country a workable constitutional socio-economic program, capable of dealing with the problems of today—not of yesteryear. Let us stand for an ecouragement of industry, definite unemployment insurance, adequate old-age pensions, the survey of all Government agencies to cut out extravagances, overlapping, mismanagement, and all unnecessary expenditures. Do all that is necessary; do it with judgment, economy, and fairness. Act squarely with every group, recognizing their mutual dependence, their necessary cooperation with the Government and with each other, and the people will soon realize justice to one means justice to all. means justice to all.

POLITICS, RELIEF, AND THE CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech delivered by me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio speech delivered by me April 17, 1936:

As a member of the Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives, it has been my duty during the last 3 years study the organization and administration of the relief agencies with some care.

with some care.

What I say to you on this subject tonight through the courtesy of the National Broadcasting Co. represents painstaking and conscientious analysis of public documents and official reports.

Briefly, I shall examine the present disturbing demoralization of the Federal relief machinery, and offer my personal conclusions as to one of the primary causes of the unfortunate administrative break-down now confronting the Nation.

In a word, the conclusion is inescapable that the loss of public confidence in the relief machinery is due entirely to the corroding hand of partisan politics. In the language of the American Society of Foresters, in its recent special report upon the C. C. camps, the emergency relief machinery over wide areas is simply—camps, the emergency relief machinery over wide areas is simply—and I quote from the report of the American Society of Foresters—"clogged by politics."

I have before me the text of a letter written to a man in New Jersey who had applied for a position in the C. C. C. organization. He wanted to be an instructor in physical education. The record shows he was admirably qualified by training and experience.

Only yesterday the relief administrator for the State of Washington was removed following revelation that he had collected a campaign fund of $3,000 from beneficiaries of the relief program.

campaign fund of $3,000 from beneficiaries of the relief program. Charges of the same nature have been alred extensively in West Virginia, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Maine, Ohio, and California.

These are manifestations of political spoilsmanship shocking to the American tradition of honesty in government.

Relief according to the needs of the political spoilsman is an utterly indefensible policy.

But it is important for America to realize that the issue is not whether relief of the needy should be abandoned. The question is simply, Shall relief be fairly and honestly administered by competent personnel or by political appointees, whose first interest is the perpetuation of the New Deal?

The issue is not relief, but spoils.

The issue is not relief, but spoils.

When the New Deal took over the Government in March 1933 there were only 564,000 persons employed in the executive branch. Compare this total with the army of jobholders and "pay rollers" today—815,000 direct full-time workers, according to the last official tabulation from the General Accounting Office.

Two hundred and fifty-one thousand people added to the pay

Two hundred and fifty-one thousand people added to the pay rolls in 3 years!

And the record is clear that they represent 251,000 partisans mobilized for the approaching campaign.

All of these new jobs have been filled by the policy of the Jacksonian era, "To the victors belong the spoils."

For more than 2 years after President Roosevelt's inauguration, not a single one of these so-called emergency agencies was put under the civil-service laws.

Civil service has been a going concern in the United States Government since 1883.

ernment since 1883.

Every administration prior to the New Deal had increased the number of Government workers protected by the merit rules of the Civil Service Commission.

For 50 years there had been a continuous advance in civil-service administration and a corollary advance in the general efficiency of the Federal Government.

But almost from the instant of inauguration in 1933, the raids upon the civil service began. Faithful Government workers—many of whom had been in the classified civil service for 25 years or more—were rooted out to make way for friends of the New Deal.

In the Bureau of Air Commerce alone there have been no less than 475 separations from the air-safety service since 1933.

No agency of government was immune from the spoilsmen's wicked thrust at merit.

Late in 1935, when the rising tide of public revolt finally was brought to the attention of the master spoilsmen in Washington, feeble gestures were made in the direction of reform. Some of the most recent agencies, such as the Social Security Board, with less than 100 employees, were legislated into civil service in 1935. But the original A. A. A., with its 6,000 employees, was expressly excluded by the language of the law from civil-service regulation. The H. O. L. C., with more than 20,000 employees at its peak, was a happy hunting ground for spoilsmen. It was so described in 1933 in an official report of the National Civil Service Reform League, an organization which has fought continuously for more than 50 years for the advancement of the merit principle in public service.

Neither did the New Deal put the fantastic N. R. A. under civil service. At the height of its "crack down" career, N. R. A. employed more than 6,000 people.

Reputable students in the field of public administration tell me that the damage to the merit principle during the last 3 years could not be wholly corrected in 10 years if we started tomorrow, so deep are the wounds inflicted upon the merit system by the

New Deal "pay rollers."

We all recognize, of course, that throughout these partisan raids there has been no lack of solemn and eloquent lip service to the principle of merit. Time and again President Roosevelt has assured the Nation he wants to see civil service extended and strengthened.

But as recently as March 21, this year, President Roosevelt issued an Executive order creating two new Federal agencies. One was the Division of Industrial Economics in the Department of Commerce, and the other was the Committee of Industrial Analysis. These two agencies are to take over the remains of N. R. A.

sis. These two agencies are to take over the remains of N. R. A. and finish the history of that ill-starred experiment.

Now, this certainly is not emergency work. It is purely historical research. It makes no difference to anybody whether it is completed in 1937 or 1950.

And it is professional work requiring a high degree of competence if it is to be of any use at all.

In spite of these considerations, however, the President's Executive order of March 21, 1936, authorized these new agencies to appoint their personnel and fix the compensation of their employees "without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended."

That is the official language quoted from the latest of the four-teen-hundred-odd Executive orders issued by President Roosevelt teen-hundred-odd Executive orders issued by President Roosevelt since March 1933.

That obscure phrase—"without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923"—is standard text in all New Deal Executive orders and in most of the so-called emergency legislation.

It signalizes a well-planned and closely followed policy of avoiding civil-service competition in every new job possible.

How the repeated professions of good intentions are to be reconciled with this incontrovertible record of gross spoilsmanship in the New Deal is a problem for the New Dealers to solve between now and November.

Nowhere have these spoils raids been more damaging to the morale of the Federal service than in the Post Office Department itself. The Post Office employs, roundly, 250,000 people.

Civil-service postmasters of 10, 15, and 20 years' standing have been rooted out of their jobs as unceremoniously as if they had been extras in a motion-picture mob scene.

Faithful service was rewarded with the groups lack and been extras in a motion-picture mob scene.

Faithful service was rewarded with the spoilsmen's lash, and the very word "merit" became a hollow mockery.

Postmasters who had served their communities conscientiously under both Democrats and Republicans were forced out to make way for militant New Deal partisans.

Men who had worked their way up from the mail routes and the sorting racks were forced back to the role of clerk, or on to the pension rolls—so that another vacancy might be created for a faithful party worker.

the pension rolls—so that another vacancy might be created for a faithful party worker.

Under the terms of a special Executive order issued by President Roosevelt on July 12, 1933, the Postmaster General was given blanket authority to disregard civil-service recommendations touching postmaster appointments in some 14,500 post offices of the first, second, and third classes.

Never before hed there been a Presidential Executive order.

of the first, second, and third classes.

Never before had there been a Presidential Executive order thus forcing a retrogression in the civil-service system.

By reducing the efficiency of the entire Federal establishment, by the appointment of grossly incompetent men and women to important positions in government, by the appointment of untrained administrators in many of the emergency bureaus and authorities, this system of spoils has added uncounted millions to the cost of government.

And as with every other extravagance of the New Deal the bill will ultimately be paid out of the toil of every citizen.

Spoils is abroad in the land—a creeping paralysis in the helping hand of the relief agencies.

hand of the relief agencies.

MONUMENT SITE COMMEMORATING FIRST ENTRANCE INTO THE CITY OF WASHINGTON OF A STEAM RAILROAD

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, if the House will pardon my persistency, I am rising at this time to ask unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution 362, providing for the selection of a site and the erection thereon of a suitable monument to the first entrance of a railroad into the District of Columbia, be restored to the Consent Calendar. This bill was eliminated from the calendar upon the objections of gentlemen who have since been correctly informed as to the terms of the bill. These gentlemen have withdrawn their objections. This includes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Zioncheck] who made an objection on the last occasion this bill was considered.

Mr. Speaker, the bill concerns securing permission of the Government for the selection of a site to commemorate the first entrance of a railroad into the District of Columbia. The bill, according to its own terms, distinctly provides that no expenditure whatever connected therewith shall become a liability on the part of the Government. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I humbly ask the pardon of the House for this persistency and its consent that the bill be restored to the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman's request is that this bill be restored to the Consent Calendar?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman that he apparently did not get the consent of all objectors to that bill, because I was one of those objectors, and I seriously object to its being restored to the Consent Calendar.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the erection of a memorial on the Capitol Grounds. The only memorial on the Capitol Grounds at the present time is one to the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. I do not want to tie the hands of the Planning Commission by providing that memorials shall be erected on the Capitol Grounds. I have no objection to the erection of a memorial or monument to the first train that came into the District of Columbia. I have no objection to the placing of a plaque at the site of the first railroad station built here, wherever it was, even if on the Capitol Grounds; but I do object to the Congress telling the Planning Commission that they must erect a monument on the Capitol Grounds. If we follow such procedure, we will have the Capitol Grounds dotted with many such monuments. For this reason, I object.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT TO BE EXTENDED TO PUERTO RICO-H. R. 11062

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with reference to a bill pending before the Ways and Means Committee which has to do with the Social Security Act being extended to Puerto

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 17, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON.

Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means,

Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Doughton: Referring to our recent interview, we desire to submit to you the following data as to why Puerto Rico should be included in the Social Security Act. This can be accomplished by the passage of H. R. 11062 (from Commissioner IGLESIAS, of Puerto Rico).

The argument which has been used against the inclusion of Puerto Rico in the Social Security Act is that Puerto Rico is allowed to retain its customs revenues, but this advantage is many times offset by other disadvantages which inure to the benefit of continental Americans. Puerto Rico imports practically all of its food staples from the continental United States, and the rising price levels of these commodities are reflected in an increased cost price levels of these commodities are reflected in an increased cost of living in the island. The imposition of processing taxes, together with the imposition of a production quota upon its chief product, sugar, has worked a considerable hardship upon Puerto Under the Jones-Costigan Act the annual sugar quota for Puerto Rico has been reduced, roughly, a ninth of the total crop. This has reduced the purchasing power of the island, and the people of Puerto Rico have been injured directly by diminished employment. Again, the profits realized from sugar produced in Puerto Rico do not remain in the island for further investment, but are remitted, by way of dividends, to the stockholders of large corporations which own or control the best sugar lands there. The greater part of these stockholders resides in the United States, and the Federal Treasury benefits by income taxes received from these

Governor Winship is on record as stating that it is particularly important that Puerto Rico be permitted to share in (1) aid for dependent children; (2) maternal and child welfare, care of crippled children, and vocational rehabilitation; (3) aid for the pubhealth service. In this connection, your attention is invited to a memorandum by Dr. E. Garrido Morales, Commissioner of Health of Puerto Rico, printed on pages 5099 and 5100 of the Congressional Record of April 7, 1936, by Commissioner IGLESIAS, showing the welfare work now being carried on from appropriations made by the Legislature of Puerto Rico and the need of additional funds for that purpose.

The estimated infant-mortality rate in Puerto Rico for 1935 was 135, as compared with the rate of 58 for the United States birth-registration area. The maternal-mortality rate for Puerto birth-registration area. The maternal-mortality rate for Puerto Rico in 1933 was 67 per 10,000 live births, as compared with 62 for the United States birth-registration area. Only nine States have a larger number of maternal deaths than Puerto Rico. We as residents of Puerto Rico, know the deplorable conditions there among the poorer people and of how much benefit the particular kind of assistance provided for in the Social Security Act would be to assistance provided for in the Social Security Act would be to these poor people.

The economic situation in Puerto Rico is extremely serious; the unrest there is undoubtedly due in large part to the present economic situation. Governor Winship has collected statistics which indicate that Puerto Rico has only received about one-sixth of its per-capita share of the various Federal allocations based on population; if based on unemployment, the share Puerto Rico has received would be one twenty-seventh. Based on an estimated population of 1,700,000, records of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration indicate that 84.6 percent of the total population has applied for assistance. The Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1935 expires on June 30, so that the relief heretofore extended by this Federal agency will be discontinued on that date. Puerto Ricans are citizens of the United States and are entitled to share in the benefits of the Social Security Act. Puerto Rico is doing all that it can from local resources, but because of the very dense and increasing population, particularly the agricultural population, with its extremely low per-capita income, the need is far beyond said local resources. In addition, we feel that the extension of the Social Security Act to Puerto Rico will stimulate the local social legislation, which does not exist in the island at present and which is so badly needed.

We believe that all provisions of the Social Security Act, inper-capita share of the various Federal allocations based

We believe that all provisions of the Social Security Act, including old-age and unemployment assistance, should be extended to Puerto Rico; the two latter benefits might be availed of by to Puerto Rico; the two latter benefits might be availed of by Puerto Rico at such time as might be possible. If acts of Congress which are detrimental to the best interests of Puerto Rico are to be made applicable in the island, why should not that island be included in acts passed for the benefit of the whole United States? It is certainly inconsistent to follow such a policy in one case and not to do so in the other.

We trust that you will give this matter your most sympathetic consideration and use your best endeavors to see that justice is done to Puerto Rico by permitting her to share in all beneficial legislation which may be enacted and made applicable to other parts of the United States.

Respectfully yours,

BEATRIZ LASSALLE MARÍA A. PINTADO. CELESTINA ZALDUONDO, Social Welfare Workers of Puerto Rico.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a fullpage advertisement from the Evening Star of Washington, D. C., of Friday, April 3, 1936, which is a reprint of an editorial appearing in the New York Sun of April 4. May I invite the attention of the Members of the House to a part of this editorial, as follows:

The sovereign State of West Virginia paid into the Federal Treas ury in all internal revenue for the year ending June 30, 1935, the sum of $10,605,166. The State of West Virginia in 1935 received on order of the executive department the sum of $17,800,000 in direct relief funds. Thus in direct relief funds West Virginia received $7,000,000 more than it contributed to the support of the Government. In the Congress of the United States West Virginia is repreented by Senators Matthew M. Neely and Rush D. Holt and six Representatives.

I call to your attention at this time the indictment of my State, and I may say that the editorial carries a similar indictment of other States; notably, the State of Arizona, the State of Alabama, the State of Arkansas, the State of Mississippi, the State of Montana, the State of Nebraska, the State of Nevada, the State of New Mexico, and the State of Utah. The title of the editorial is Representation Without Taxation Is Tyranny. As a West Virginian, I resent the untrue statement that our people do not pay their way. We are not a burden to our neighbor States.

I am particularly interested because I join in representing a great State which stands on its own record; and I bring to the attention of the membership of the House at this time that which I know is true of West Virginia and perhaps the other States in question and, for your information, and because of the charge made against the State of West Virginia of not paying back to the Government that which is due the Government, and comparing that which the Government has given to us in West Virginia in the form of Federal funds, let me point out to the House and to the country today that large corporations earning a great amount of money, with all or practically all of their money earned in the State of West Virginia, pay their taxes elsewhere. For example, we get but little of the Federal gasoline tax used in West Virginia. All the large gasoline companies operating in West Virginia, notably the Standard Oil and the Gulf Oil, report their internal-revenue collections to other offices besides West Virginia.

With respect to the three great railroads in the southern part of West Virginia, we find the Norfolk & Western and the Virginian and the Chesapeake & Ohio, according to annual reports made by these companies and made public, are said to be among the most prosperous railroads at the present time in the United States, and the various taxes paid by these railroads into the Federal Treasury, I am reliably informed, are equal to a larger sum than the total amount credited to West Virginia and paid through the Parkersburg office of our collector of internal revenue. None of the taxes of these three great transportation systems is paid through the West Virginia internal-revenue collecting agency, and one of the officials of a railroad that I have just mentioned stated in a rate case recently that 80 percent of the revenue of these railroads originated in West Virginia, although the funds are not collected for the West Virginia office.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 more minutes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object to this request, but I wish to serve notice that if there are any further requests to address the House, I shall have to object in order that we may take up the consent calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Most of the large industries, which are coal, oil and gas, and chemical in West Virginia; in fact, practically all of them, pay their taxes elsewhere because their executive offices are in other cities and in other States. Only one-half of the coal-mined tonnage in my State is returned to West Virginia in the form of taxes.

To sum up the whole matter, if all the taxes accruing to the Federal Government through earnings in West Virginia were paid in West Virginia, the State office would collect approximately three times as much tax as it does collect. I think this is true not only of West Virginia but other States I have mentioned also may have been unjustly attacked under the heading of "Representation Without Taxation Is Tyranny."

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. Is it not the fact that a considerable part of this $17,000,000 paid to the State of West Virginia is borrowed money and West Virginia still has the obligation to pay a share of it?

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is true, and I thank the gentle-

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. Has not the author directed attention to the facts just enumerated by the gentleman?

Mr. RANDOLPH. No; the editorial is an indictment of West Virginia, Alabama, New Mexico, Nevada, Montana, Nebraska, and all the other States I have mentioned.

Mr. MEAD. The article gives you no such credit, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. RANDOLPH. No.

Mr. MEAD. Would the gentleman mind telling the House who is the author of the article?

Mr. RANDOLPH. An editorial writer of the New York Sun, and the article is published here as a full-page advertisement in the Washington paper.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman make the statement that these other States, aside from West Virginia, are paying more into the Federal Government than they are receiving for relief?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania I cannot speak for the other States. However, I know it is true of the State of West Virginia, and I have presented the facts.

Mr. RICH. I thought the gentleman made the statement that the same thing was true of the other States he mentioned.

VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES-LEON FREDERICK RUGGLES (H. DOC. NO. 467)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered to be spread at large upon the Journal:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning without my approval H. R. 6297, Seventyfourth Congress, entitled "An act for the relief of Leon Frederick Ruggles."

This bill would authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Leon Frederick Ruggles the sum of $563.47 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for medical and hospital expenses incurred by him as a result of an alleged emergency operation.

The sum authorized by this measure represents an expenditure incurred by Mr. Ruggles, a World War veteran, between August 2, 1932, and September 22, 1932, for the treatment of a condition which has been rated by the Veterans' Administration as being connected with his military service.

Under a provision of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, which was in force at the time the expenses were rendered, but which was subsequently repealed by Public, No. 2, approved March 20, 1933, reimbursement for unauthorized medical expenses could be made administratively by the Veterans' Administration only (1) when incurred for a service-connected disability in an emergency, (2) where Veterans' Administrations facilities were not available, and (3) where delay in obtaining relief from the Veterans' Administration would have proved hazardous to the life and health of the veteran. Unless all three requirements were fulfilled, reimbursement could not be made for medical expenses not previously authorized. From the evidence of record it was not and is not now shown that any one of the three conditions was met.

The records of the Veterans' Administration disclose Mr. Ruggles was hospitalized as an emergency case on June 1, 1932, at the Veterans' Administration facility, Hines, Ill. He was discharged with maximum benefit on July 2, 1932. Later, in August 1932, he obtained the services of private physicians without authority of the Veterans' Administration and incurred expenses for which the bill seeks to reimburse him. From the date of the first consultation with his private physician until he was admitted to the private hospital for treatment 9 days elapsed, during which he made no effort to obtain authority to enter a Veterans' Administration hospital for the desired relief, indicating rather conclusively the nonemergency character of the case.

I can find no justification for making an exception in the case of this veteran by granting preferential treatment when other similar cases are barred from special reimbursement.

For these reasons I am withholding my approval of this

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill and the message be referred to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed as a House document.

The motion was agreed to.

OMNIBUS PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to propound a unanimous-consent request. Under the rule of the House adopted sometime ago the third Tuesday of each month is devoted to omnibus private bills. Tomorrow makes the fourth Tuesday of this month, and on one third Tuesday we voted for one omnibus private bill.

Tomorrow will be devoted to something else, and therefore I make the unanimous-consent request that the fourth Tuesday of this month be devoted to omnibus private bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Reserving the right to object, when is the fourth Tuesday?

Mr. BIERMANN. On April 28.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I will have to reserve temporarily an objection to see what position the tax bill will be in on that day. We are extremely anxious to get that finished. I had hoped that we might be able to use one day this week for the Private Calendar, but we have a conference report on the Interior Office bill on Wednesday-

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Consent Calendar is in order, and the Clerk will call the first bill.

REHABILITATION OF THE FISHING INDUSTRY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8055) to provide for the economic studies of the fishery industry, market-news service, and orderly marketing of fishery products, and for

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of this act the term "fishery industry" includes catching, taking, harvesting, cultivating, farming, propagating, processing, marketing, and distributing fishery products; and the term "fishery products" includes fish, shellfish, crustacea, seaweeds, and other aquatic forms of animal and vegetable life and the products and byproducts thereof.

The Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to establish an economic research section in the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce for the purpose of collecting, studying, and analyzing information on the capture, production, preservation, preparation, marketing, handling, storage, and utilization of fishery products, including information on fishery methods.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to establish a market-news service in the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce for the purpose of collecting, publishing, and distributing by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the fishery industry, including information on the market supply and demand, commercial movement, location, disposition, and market prices of fishery products.

FISHERIES RESEARCH VESSEL FOR PACIFIC OCEAN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3013) to provide for the construction and operation of a vessel for use in research work with respect to Pacific Ocean fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McLEAN. Reserving the right to object, the Consent Calendar today is rather unusual. If all the bills containing an appropriation were enacted into law, it would appropriate upward of $15,000,000.

In addition, there are bills to create many new offices, including seven judgeships, and bills providing for some other new offices. Many of these bills are of far greater importance than some acted upon last week, which were considered under special rules reported after consideration of the merits of the measures by the Committee on Rules. It necessarily follows that there will be a number of objections to many of the bills that are on the calendar. I mention my position in the matter so that it may be understood as we progress. The Consent Calendar was never intended to be the means whereby large appropriations could be made or offices created in considerable number with expedition. I shall object to all bills that come within this ruling.

The SPEAKER. This bill requires three objectors.

Mr. McLEAN, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina objected.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that the bill go over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

EMERGENCY OFFICERS' RETIREMENT ACT

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2265) extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional officers of the Regular Establishment who served during the World War.

Mr. ZIONCHECK, Mr. FADDIS, and Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina objected.

DEPORTING CERTAIN ALIENS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11040) to deport certain aliens who secured preference-quota or nonquota visas through fraud by contracting marriage solely to expedite entry to the United States, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision (f) of section 9 of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended (43 Stat. 158; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 209, subdivision (f)), is amended to read as follows:

Sec. 2. That subdivision (a) of section 13 of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended (43 Stat. 161; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 213 (a)), is amended to read as follows:

PERRY'S VICTORY MEMORIAL

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 8474) to provide for the creation of the Perry's Victory and International Peace Memorial National Monument on Put in Bay, South Bass Island, in the State of Ohio, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

THE PERRY'S VICTORY MEMORIAL COMMISSION, Mount Sterling, Ky., April 11, 1936.

Hon. John J. O'Connor,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. O'Connor: I beg leave to address you in reference to the debate in the House of Representatives, April 6, concerning H. R. 8474, as indicated by the Congressional Record for that date.

First, in behalf of this commission, permit me to thank you for your friendly attitude toward the bill on that occasion.

Second, I think it proper to point out, in justification of that attitude, that the objection to the bill urged by Representative Taber, of New York, was wholly without warrant. To give you the facts as to that, I take the liberty of sending you, herewith, copy of a letter I am sending by this mail to Mr. Taber, which I trust will result in a change of heart on his part.

The letter referred to I think, will prove to you the folly of will result in a change of heart on his part.

The letter referred to, I think, will prove to you the folly of his objection. But I also enclose to you, as the most comprehensive statement that has been made concerning the wisdom and necessity of this legislation, a copy of the special report of this commission to the Secretary of the Interior, under date of April 6, 1933, calling your special attention to the pages therein as marked. This report was, at the time, considered in a conference between Secretary Ickes and President Roosevelt, which later resulted in the identical bills, one of which has passed the Senate with amendments, and the other of which is now before the House. Both the Interior Department and this commission now earnestly hope that the legislation will not fail to pass at this session by the substitution of the amended Senate bill for the House bill.

Under separate cover, I am sending you the same illustrated literature of the memorial with which I am favoring Mr. Tabers, and which will give you a better conception of the character and history of the memorial than I can give you in any other manner. You may be sure that any aid you may give for enactment of the pending bill will be greatly appreciated by all of my colleagues of this commission and myself, and that in lending such aid you will perform a valuable public service.

Very respectfully yours,

Webster P. Huntington,

WEBSTER P. HUNTINGTON. President.

THE PERRY'S VICTORY MEMORIAL COMMISSION, Mount Sterling, Ky., April 10, 1936.

Hon. JOHN TABER,

Hon. John Taber,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Taber: I have noted with interest and with natural regret the proceedings in the House on April 6, as related by the Congressional Record, in reference to H. R. 8474, the bill providing for the future control and administration of the Perry's Victory Memorial by the Secretary of the Interior and National Park Service, and I beg leave to address you on this subject solely for the purpose of stating the facts as to the propriety of this measure and the urgent necessity of its enactment at the present session.

In connection therewith I am sending you certain literature of the memorial to which I trust you will give careful consideration.

The grounds of your objection to consideration of the bill, as stated in the Record, were that administration of the memorial by the National Park Service would cost the Government more than would be the case if the present Commission continued to administer it.

ister it.

I beg leave to assure you of your error in this conclusion, feeling certain that you would not have reached it if all the facts had been before you, and with equal confidence that you would have cordially supported the bill if you had known the facts.

First, however, it will be well to consider what the Government would gain, if anything, by the enactment of the bill, for the situation is such that this is the most interesting inquiry, since no possible prospect of loss to the Government is involved.

The memorial was built at a cost in excess of $1,000,000 at the joint expense of the Government and the nine States participating in its construction. For all purposes in connection with it during the past 25 years the Government has appropriated only $388,584 of the total cost, the States having appropriated all the remainder, with the exception of about $42,000 derived from earnings of the memorial and private contributions to the cause. Therefore, in now assuming full responsibility for the future administration of the memorial, the same as that which it exercises over the Washington Monument, the Government will come into possession of a million-dollar property at the expense of very considerably less than helf its cost. Thus its transfer to the Government will be million-dollar property at the expense of very considerably less than half its cost. Thus, its transfer to the Government will be a very good bargain from the standpoint of national interests rather than a loss.

As for future administration, the problem is not only one of economy but of actual necessity, unless the Government is willing to suffer very heavy loss from unavoidable future causes which must ensue if the objects of the bill are not carried out. The memorial has been opened to the public for 20 years, and in all that time has not cost National or State Governments a dollar for operation. All appropriations have been for construction, retaining walls, and landscaping, and no appropriation has ever been necessary for operation, in respect to which the property has been self-sustaining. But 5 years of depression have so reduced the revenues heretofore derived from operation by this commission that we are now without funds to provide against any contingency of unusual expense and are at the mercy of any natural cause which may occur to the property requiring the memorial to be closed to the public. Such a contingency is not imaginary or probably remote in the absence of the enactment of the pending bill. If the memorial were struck by lighting we could not repair it; if any circumstance stopped the operation of the passenger elevator, from which we derive our revenue to pay expenses of operation, all revenue would cease and we could not pay our employees or perform any other necessary labor to maintain operation; if a retaining wall were to give way, damage from erosion would ensue to an incalculable extent without any power to repair it.

Moreover, this memorial performs distinct humanitarian service in aid of navigation and aviation during the season of activity for future administration, the problem is not only one

Moreover, this memorial performs distinct humanitarian service in aid of navigation and aviation during the season of activity on Lake Erie, and the continuation of these functions without cessation is a protection to human life and property in all that region. I refer to the flood-lighting equipment, which has many times saved life in both summer and winter. This function must remain in peril if the property is to be left to operation by the commission rather than the Government.

The Government having taken over the property in accordance with the provisions of the pending bill, there is no reason to anticipate that operation by the Government would cost any more than heretofore by the commission. In normal times operation will pay its own cost, whether by the Government or otherwise, but no system other than Government operation can provide against the reduction of revenues by the depression or against untoward circumstances arising from natural causes. untoward circumstances arising from natural causes.

Your native State of New York was the sixth to join in the memorial enterprise by the appointment of commissioners during the administration of Gov. Charles E. Hughes. It was the special the administration of Gov. Charles E. Hughes. It was the special interest of Governor Hughes in the project that assured the participation of the State, and since that time he has not failed to manifest his continued interest in the memorial. I can say to you in confidence that if he had not projected a European trip at the time, Chief Justice Hughes would have been the principal orator at the dedication of the memorial July 31, 1931. The New York commissioners devoted $30,000 of their appropriation to construction of the memorial, and your State has never been without competent representation in the administration of the property. In particular in this connection I mention the service to our cause rendered by our lamented colleague, the late Federal Judge Simon L. Adler, of Rochester, N. Y., who for 25 years gave the utmost attention to our affairs in every detail.

The financial records of this commission and of its predecessor, our former interstate board, are available in printed form to any person interested. These records are found in the printed records of our annual meetings, and our annual reports to the Secretary of the Interior since 1919. There is a complete file of these documents in the Congressional Library and also in the Interior Department.

Department.

In the earnest hope that these facts will now warrant your cordial support of the pending bill at the first opportunity, I am, Sincerely yours,

WEBSTER P. HUNTINGTON. President.

TURTLE MOUNTAIN BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6499) referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for adjudication and settlement.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been twice vetoed by President Roosevelt, once in the Seventy-third Congress, once in the Seventy-fourth Congress, first session. and it is back again on the calendar. I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK and Mr. RICH also objected.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE, EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11072) authorizing the appointment of an additional district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I object.

MEDAL COMMEMORATIVE OF TEXAS INDEPENDENCE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 10906) to authorize the Director of the Mint to prepare a medal commemorative of Texas independence, and for other purposes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. HOLMES ob-

REGULATION OF WHALING

The Clerk called the bill (S. 3413) to give effect to the convention between the United States and certain other countries for the regulation of whaling, concluded at Geneva, September 24, 1931, signed on the part of the United States, March 31, 1932, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I objected to this bill when it was on the Consent Calendar last for the reason that I was of opinion that it made an improper use of the United States Navy. Since then we have ironed this out and have tentatively agreed on an amendment. I understand that the amendment, if agreed to, is agreeable to the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, is that the amendment the gentleman submitted to me last week?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. As chairman of the subcommittee, I think the amendment is agreeable, and that it really is an improvement to the bill.

FALSE BILLING-SHIPPING ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3467, amending the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a matter of great controversy to the people interested, and some matters have appeared recently which do require a hearing and possibly a change in the bill. I trust the committee will see fit to recommit this bill.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit this bill to be passed over without prejudice? I think there is merit in what the gentleman says.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, by authority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I ask unanimous consent to have this bill recommitted to the committee. It has already been set for hearing on the 28th, as I recall, and notices have gone out for a further hearing on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Bland]?

There was no objection.

ADMINISTRATION AND MAINTENANCE OF THE BLUE RIDGE PARKWAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10922, to provide for the administration and maintenance of the Blue Ridge Parkway, in the States of Virginia and North Carolina, by the Secretary of the Interior, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice

The SPEAKER. One objection only is necessary.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Were there three objections to the last bill?

The SPEAKER. Only one objection is required.

Mr. COSTELLO. Request was made to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington that this bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CLAIM OF GEN. HIGINIO ALVAREZ

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11961, authorizing an appropriation for the payment of the claim of Gen. Higinio Alvarez, a Mexican citizen, with respect to lands on the Farmers Banco in the State of Arizona.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Are there further objections?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think I made a point of order against this bill that it was rightfully on the Private Calendar and not on the Consent Calendar. The Chair ruled that it was properly on the Consent Calendar and undoubtedly the Chair was correct.

I may say that one of the reasons given in the committee report for the passage of this bill is that it will, for all time, settle the title to the Farmers Banco. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that a quitclaim deed from a private citizen of Mexico who, in this case, is Higinio Alvarez, and a quitclaim deed from Mrs. Fishburn will not, in any way, affect the sovereignty of this land. It will affect the individual title to the land, but it will in no way affect the sovereignty of the land. For that reason it would seem to me that in order to accomplish the purpose, some assignment of the sovereignty over this land must be given by the Government of Mexico to the Government of the United States. Otherwise, because of the questions involved, we are going to constantly have before us the right of American citizens to protection on this piece of land. If a controversy should arise between Mexico and the United States, and our armed forces, contrary to treaty, should happen to march onto this land, or if an airplane should happen to be forced to land on this land, contrary to treaty, then it might be used as a basis for trouble between the two countries. So I wonder why the committee did not take into consideration the fact that a quitclaim deed from a private citizen of a country does not in any manner affect the sovereignty of that land?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. I believe that is taken care of in the bill itself. On page 2, line 8, the bill reads:

No payment shall be made unless and until the Secretary of State shall have received from the Government of Mexico satisfactory assurances that no transfer, other than that specified herein, has been made by General Alvarez, or by anyone acting for or under him, of any part of his right, title, or interest in or to the property comprising the Farmers Banco, until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title, and until General Alvarez has given to the United States a quitclaim deed, in such form as may be deemed satisfactory to the Secretary of State, to all of his right, title, and interest in and to all of the land comprising the Farmers Banco, claimed by him under an instrument of grant dated October 22, 1926, signed by the Constitutional President of the United Mexican States, or otherwise.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understood that thoroughly, and I had that particularly in mind when I made objection that the language of the bill does not transfer from the Government of Mexico to the Government of the United States sovereignty over the land. To be sure, the Attorney General determines whether all individual or private title passes with those quitclaim deeds, but the sovereignty of the Farmers Banco, if there is any question about sovereignty, to the extent that there is an unjust claim by Mr. Alvarez, surely there is enough doubt concerning the sovereignty of that land so that the Government of Mexico should assign all of its right, title, and interest to sovereignty over that particular piece of land.

Mr. BLOOM. I believe the Secretary of State and the Attorney General will take care of that when the time comes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That may be true, but if we have got to authorize something contrary to treaty rights, then I see no reason why we should settle private claims of this kind and pay this man $50,000.

Mr. BLOOM. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs just informs me of the treaty existing between this Government and Mexico.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have read the treaty; in fact, I have read the three treaties, and it is because of the phraseology of the three treaties that this controversy has arisen. What right had the Government of Mexico to give a patent to this land to Alvarez if they had no right to it whatsoever? If the Mexican Government had no right to it, then this man Alvarez has nothing whatsoever coming to him. If they had the right to give a patent to this land to Alvarez, they still maintain sovereignty over the land and will continue to maintain sovereignty over the land.

Mr. BLOOM. How many acres of land are involved?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Five hundred and forty-one acres.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object. I think the people at home ought to be taken care of before we take care of Mexican generals who helped kill some of our people. Mr. WOLCOTT and Mr. McLEAN objected.

NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF MILITARY MEDICINE AND PHARMACY, RUMANIA, 1937

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 538, to provide for participation by the United States in the Ninth International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy in Rumania, in 1937; and to authorize and request the President of the United States to invite the International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy to hold its tenth congress in the United States in 1939, and to invite foreign countries to participate in that Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $11,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Ninth International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy to be held in Rumania in 1937, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic reporting and other services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); rent; traveling expenses; purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, and maps; stationery; official cards; entertainment; printing and binding, including the payment of not to exceed $500 to the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States toward the cost of printing the report of the American delegation to the ninth Congress; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to extend to the International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy an invitation to hold its tenth congress

Medicine and Pharmacy an invitation to hold its tenth congress in the United States in 1939, and to invite foreign governments to participate in that Congress

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO LONGSHOREMEN'S AND HARBOR WORKERS' COM-PENSATION ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8293, to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection to permit me to make a statement?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my objection to permit the gentleman from New York to make a statement.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill was on the calendar several times. It was taken off by the Committee on the Judiciary. Some of us thought that when the bill was taken off a provision in the bill previously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary would be eliminated, subdivision 7 of section 14, which puts a limit of $7,500 a year on death or total disability for these longshoremen: but the Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill out again without eliminating subdivision 7 of section 14, and I am glad the gentleman from Virginia is in a position to object to the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TO CHANGE NAME OF DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11642, to change the name of the Department of the Interior, to be known as the Department of Conservation.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have three commissions operating now to coordinate the various departmental organizations of the Government. Until these gentlemen complete this study I think it would be a serious mistake to interfere with their activities. Therefore. I object at this time.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman reserve his objection and yield to me for an observation?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object. Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

COMMEMORATIVE 50-CENT PIECES, TEXAS CENTENNIAL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10317, providing for a change in the design of the 50-cent pieces authorized to be coined in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of independence of the State of Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? This bill requires three objections.

Mr. WOLCOTT and Mr. McLEAN objected.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized and directed to provide for a series of not more than five different designs to be placed on the reverse side of the 50-cent pieces to be coined in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary in 1936 of the independence of Texas, and of the noble and heroic sacrifices of her pioneers, whose revered memory has been an inspiration to her sons and daughters during the past century", approved June 15, 1933, which will appropriately commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the State of Texas. The United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparation for such coinage.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, the reason I wanted the gentleman from New Jersey to yield was that I might make a statement in reference to the bill to change the name of the Department of the Interior to that of conservation. I was just wondering whether the gentleman from New Jersey had not read it correctly and thought it meant conservatism, and feeling that the Republican Party has a monopoly upon conservatism objected to it because the Democrats wanted it?

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the pro-forma amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES IN CELEBRATION OF ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF OPENING OF TRI-STATE TERRITORY OF EAST TEXAS, ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8107, to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in connection with the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the opening of the tri-State Territory of east Texas, north Louisiana, and south Arkansas by Capt. Henry Miller Shreve, to be held in Shreveport, La., and surrounding territory, in 1935 and 1936.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows.

Be it enacted, etc., That to indicate the interest of the Government of the United States in the fulfillment of the ideals and purposes of the celebration commemorating the achievements of Capt. Henry Miller Shreve, there shall be coined by the Director of the Mint silver 50-cent pieces to the number of not more than 50,000, of standard weight and fineness and of a special appropriate design or designs to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the models for master dies or other preparations for this coinage.

SEC. 2. That the coins herein authorized shall be issued at par and only upon the request of the Shreveport Centennial, Inc., or said only upon the request of the Shreveport Centennia, Inc., or its duly authorized agent.

SEC. 3. Such coins may be disposed of at par or at a premium by said Shreveport Centennial, Inc., and all proceeds shall be used in furtherance of the projects of the Shreveport Centennial, Inc.

SEC. 4. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same; regulating and guarding the process of coinage; providing for the purchase of material; and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins; for the prevention of de-basement or counterfeiting; for security of the coin; or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein directed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. A call of the House was ordered.

PATMAN ANSWERS CELLER ON ROBINSON-PATMAN BILL

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and in addition to this extension I ask unanimous consent to include two radio speeches which I delivered last week over national hook-ups.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, a recent radio broadcast on the subject of this bill, by Representative Emanuel Celler, of New York, painted a very menacing picture of the results that would follow its passage.

Mr. Celler adopts, in toto, the objections to the bill that have been set up by the powerful, mass-buying interests whose exactions in the form of special price and other concessions today give them an unequal and unfair competitive advantage over the rank and file of independent merchants.

While Mr. Celler's views coincide identically with those of these special-privileged groups, it is interesting to note that he stands alone, in his sweeping objections, among the membership of the House Judiciary Committee who have spent months in the study of this question. A minority committee report, opposing the bill, bore just one signature—his own.

PREJUDICE-ROUSING APPEAL

Briefly, what are his objections? Well, in the main he seeks to create a prejudice-rousing appeal to the housewife, to labor, and the farmer. These, oddly enough, are always the objects of special solicitude by big business when it is under attack.

Passage of this bill, Mr. Celler said, would be "a raw deal for the housewife, because the consumer will be made the goat."

MONOPOLY BEING CREATED

I contend that the consumer is already the goat under a discriminatory price system that, as shown by a recent Federal Trade Commission report, is rapidly putting independent merchants out of business and creating a condition of monopoly in many lines of merchandising. Price discrimination in favor of the privileged buyers, it is estimated, amounts to some $750,000,000 annually in food products alone. By protecting the competitive position of the independent merchant and the corner grocer, insuring them of proportionately fair and advantageous prices, an additional price protection of $2,225,000,000 annually would be afforded the consumer—not a loss of the claimed $750,000,000.

FARMERS AND LABORERS INTERESTED

As to the interest of labor and agriculture in this measure, it is very specific and direct.

The inequities resulting from the present discriminatory practices in merchandising do much more than merely create competitive conditions unfair to the independent merchant. The unequal concessions exacted from manufacturers and processors, through which the favored few benefit, necessarily press backward on costs and tend to keep down or even to reduce the wages of workers in those industries.

In addition—and even more important—they become a powerful factor in depressing and holding down the prices paid to farmers for their agricultural products.

The reduction in purchasing power resulting from this depressing of wages and agricultural income, I am convinced, amounts to many times any price reductions reaching the consumer. For the effect is not merely to lower wages in the plants of the manufacturers granting the concessions, or prices to the farmers whose products are processed by the manufacturers. The reductions tend to be reflected in the wages of all industry and in the prices paid all farmers for all their produce.

GREATER PURCHASING POWER DESIRED BY PRESIDENT

"Greater purchasing power", President Roosevelt said in his address to Young Democrats at Baltimore recently, "will mean the consumption of more goods—industrial products and farm products. The production of these goods will mean still more employment. Most businessmen believe with us in a greater purchasing power on the part of more people. They know that their businesses will be helped thereby.

"To work in unity toward this end constitutes one form of attack, and there are others which we must not overlook", he said.

HOW PRESIDENT'S OBJECTIVE MAY BE BROUGHT ABOUT

The Robinson-Patman bill, I am convinced, would help bring about this objective which the President has emphasized.

The unequal competitive conditions that result from the various price and service concessions which a few privileged groups are now able to exact, become a bearish factor on our whole merchandising system. They set up an endless chain of chiseling operations that undermine wages, cut away farm income, and weaken our entire business and economic structure. The sooner they are eliminated—as they would be, in large part, at least, under the Robinson-Patman bill—the sooner we will achieve that greater purchasing power which the President holds to be essential. That, I am sure, even Mr. Celler cannot deny.

WHO OPPOSES BILL?

From whom does the objection to this legislation come? It comes from the big, corporate enterprises in the field of distribution.

Economies of great magnitude have been claimed for them. But let us examine that claim for a moment:

If there is a real basis of fact for this vaunted efficiency, why does big enterprise insist on concessions, allowances, and rebates to enable it to compete with independent merchants? Does it fear to put its vaunted efficiency to a test? Is it afraid or unable to compete on equal terms—that is, to start with equal cost for the goods both must sell?

EQUAL RIGHTS FOR ALL ASKED

It is my honest conviction that independent units of industry can and will hold their own with the big units if both are compelled to compete in the game under fair and equal rules. At least the superior efficiency claimed for big business is not proved until it meets this honest test. Under the pending legislation, no special privilege is asked for the independent, small or large. But a demand is made that the unfair, unequal, and unethical practices, including unfair price discriminations, be prohibited by law.

"MENACE OF MONOPOLY" AND ROBINSON-PATMAN BILL

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the Record, I include the following radio address I delivered over the facilities of the National Broadcasting Co. Friday evening, April 17, 1936:

Ladies and gentlemen of the United States:

DUTY OF GOVERNMENT

It is one of the first duties of government to protect the weak against the strong—to prevent men from injuring one another. Every proposed law dealing with business should be carefully considered with reference to its effect upon the consumers who represent our entire population.

We know that many, but not all, of our most powerful and influential citizens are very greedy. That fact has many times been demonstrated. It is perfectly natural that they should seek more power, influence, and greater wealth. It is also true that where there is greed, there is no vision, and the Good Book says that where there is no vision the people perish. Our problems should be considered from the standpoint of the future as well

PRESENT LAWS INSUFFICIENT

Laws have been enacted for the purpose of providing equality of opportunity in business; to prevent powerful organized minorities in business from unfairly destroying their small competitors, based upon the theory that citizens who build our country in time of peace, and who save our country in time of war, are entitled to the same rights and privileges, but no more, as the entitled to the same rights and privileges, but no more, as the entitled to the same rights are entitled corrections in America. entitled to the same rights and privileges, but no more, as the greatest and wealthiest banker-controlled corporations in America. The present laws, however, are not sufficient. Certain weazel phrases crept into our antitrust laws which permitted the Supreme Court to extract the teeth therefrom. It is, therefore, necessary in order to protect the consumers and carry out the policy of this Government to give small business an equal competitive opportunity with big business to change these laws in order that this intent may be carried out.

MONOPOLY

After serving as chairman of a committee that has conducted an investigation this past year of large-scale buying and selling, I

After serving as chairman of a committee that has conducted an investigation this past year of large-scale buying and selling, I am convinced that there is a conspiracy among a few rich, powerful individuals who control corporations of great wealth to obtain a monopoly in retail distribution. It is a group that is naturally greedy and selfish. Big bankers in New York are substantially aiding them in carrying out their purposes. A few years ago there were 600 manufacturers of automobile tires. Today there are 4 manufacturing 80 percent of the tires and less than 25 in all. Practically all the others were crushed by this unholy alliance of great wealth and power.

One large bank in New York City has directorships in more than 4,000 manufacturing, industrial, utility, and other large business concerns. Another large bank in the same city holds more than 2,000 such directorships. The largest concerns in America are largely controlled by Wall Street bankers. The 200,000 independent grocerymen in the country, representing 50 percent of all retail grocery units, are receiving only 22 percent of the volume of business. The 100,000 corporate chain units are receiving 34 percent. When the time is considered ripe, if the present law is not changed, a word from the corporate chains to the manufacturers will cause the voluntaries either to be taken over by the corporate chains or destroyed, since all allowances and discounts may be taken away from them.

Our opponents talk glibly about the number of retail units increasing a few thousand over a period of 4 years. They say nothing about the volume of business and never present the fact that the increases are below normal and only in communities not served by chains or in lines of business in which the chains are not engaged.

Our opponents would have you believe there is no monopoly not engaged.

not engaged.

Our opponents would have you believe there is no monopoly because it is only effective in certain areas where the volume of business is the greatest and in certain lines of business. That is like a doctor telling a 200-pound man not to be afraid of cancer, that it covers only a few ounces of his 200 pounds.

As stated by the general manager of one of the largest concerns in America recently, "New battle lines are now forming. It is the battle to see who shall dominate the distribution of merchandise in the town of 5,000 population and under." As certain lines of business are monopolized in certain areas, greedy monopolists will enlarge their areas and increase their lines of business over which they also expect to gain a monopoly. they also expect to gain a monopoly.

THE ROBINSON-PATMAN BILL

The Robinson-Patman bill as reported by my able colleague, Congressman Hubert Utterback, of Iowa, is intended to give equal

The Robinson-Patman bill as reported by my able colleague, Congressman Hubert Utterback, of Iowa, is intended to give equal rights and a fair opportunity to individual citizens and small businesses, without depriving large corporations of a single right or privilege that they are entitled to enjoy. This bill will force a manufacturer to deal fairly with his customers.

In order to frighten the people, certain selfish groups have advertised that the enactment of this law will cost consumers $750,000,000 a year. That is positively a misstatement of fact. When the independent merchants receive the same prices as corporate chains for the same quantity purchased, the consumers will be benefited billions of dollars annually. We do not propose to make the chains pay a higher price. We do propose that the independents be given the same prices under the same conditions. Much is said about cooperative buying associations without consideration of the fact that manufacturers, under existing laws, are not compelled to recognize them or give them the same benefits as the corporate chains are given. The Robinson-Patman bill will compel them to treat all their customers alike. It provides, however, that they may select their customers, but when selected must be given the same, square, fair deal that is given to all their other customers. There will be no incentive for a manufacturer to charge the same price as other manufacturers. There will be competition between them and competition between the retailers, but each manufacturer will have to treat his own customers exactly alike.

BROKERS AND WHOLESALERS

BROKERS AND WHOLESALERS

Another provision in this bill is in regard to brokerage. It will not compel a broker to be used, as sales may be made directly from the manufacturer to the retailer without using a broker, but it provides against a large buyer bribing the representative of the seller. It is well known that one large seller of potatoes for the farmers on the Atlantic coast was receiving a secret rebate of several dollars a car from a large buyer, who also was large enough to fix the market price. Anyone who is opposed to deceit, fraud, and bribery in business, and who wants the farmers and wage earners to have a square deal should not oppose this provision. Brokers and wholesalers will be benefited by this law to the extent that they render a service that the independent manufacturer and merchant desires to voluntarily pay for and to the extent only that they can perform their distribution functions in a more economical way than anyone else. a more economical way than anyone else.

ADVERTISING ALLOWANCES

It is a well-known fact that certain large manufacturers have been giving their favored customers a greatly reduced price through advertising allowances. Our bill will not stop advertising allowances, but it will require the manufacturer to give every customer he has the same allowances on proportionately equal terms. That is, everyone purchasing the same quantity will get the same price from the same manufacturer and the benefit of the same allowances.

The bill further provides that the Federal Trade Commission may fix quantity limits for manufacturers for certain goods which will prevent a few large concerns from creating a monopoly. This power will only be exercised in the event there is danger of monoppower will only be exercised in the event there is danger of monopoly in any line of business, and where the purchasers in greater quantities are so few as to enable a few large dealers to destroy the smaller dealers. This is based upon the same theory as carload freight rates. A trainload may be shipped for much less cost per car than a carload over a railroad, but the Interstate Commerce Commission has held, and the Supreme Court of the United States has expressed itself as favorable to the holding, that the boxcar limit for most commodities should be designated to determine cost of transportation. Anyone who causes one carload boxcar limit for most commodities should be designated to de-termine cost of transportation. Anyone who causes one carload to be shipped pays the same price per car as one who causes 100,000 carloads to be shipped. The Supreme Court said that if such a quantity limit were not fixed, large dealers would drive the small dealers out of business and this would be detrimental to the small dealers out of business and this would be detrimental to the country's welfare. That is exactly the same situation we have in business today. If something is not done, the small dealers will be driven out of business. Then the consumers will have to pay the price that monopoly fixes and the farmers and wage earners will only receive what monopoly says they should receive. Private monopoly is indefensible. When that stage is reached, Government ownership is inevitable. Therefore our fight today is against eventual Government ownership.

BASING POINT

The House Judiciary Committee added a provision to the Robinson-Patman bill. It relates to the question of price and involves the basing-point question or the old Pittsburgh-plus rate case. Whether or not this provision will remain in the bill will be determined by a vote of the House.

BILL MISREPRESENTED

No other bill has ever been more misrepresented than the Robin-No other bill has ever been more misrepresented than the Robinson-Patman bill. It is not complicated. It is based upon right, justice, and honesty. The same groups that have admittedly ganged up on the President of the United States and have thrown the force and influence of big business in opposition to the administration, have constituted themselves into a wrecking crew to defeat this bill. It is very strange that they say that the bill will hurt th little man in view of the fact that the little ones are for it, and the big ones are against it. This same group is sending a statement over the Nation against taking away chains' saving in prices as though the Robinson-Patman bill would take their savings away from them. It will not do any such thing. It will savings away from them. It will not do any such thing. It will merely assure the same savings to the independents and thereby assist all consumers in getting the benefit of lower prices.

CONCLUSION

Practically every consumer is benefited by good prices and good wages, and not by prices that destroy his buying power. The consumer is entitled to the lowest possible price, consistent, however, with a fair price to the producer, a fair wage to the wage earner, who converts the raw material into the finished product, and a fair profit to those who distribute it. If prices and wages are reduced 50 percent, our debts and taxes are increased 100 percent in what the people have to pay with. Therefore, any policy that causes competition to be destroyed and permits monopoly to fix the price of labor and production, regardless of the low price received by the consumer, is destructive to the best interest of this country.

OPPONENTS

Our opponents have plenty of money, and money can hire brains, so in this fight we are opposed by both money and brains. Some of the same groups that are fighting us tried to fool the farmers through the "cornstalk brigade", placed a spy in an antichain-store association's headquarters to destroy their business, warned their representatives over the country to keep the chains' opposition to certain bills strictly secret, spread propaganda through high schools, have used prominent and influential people as a "front" or "stuffed shirt", and have admittedly attempted to mislead and deceive the independent merchants of the country. It is some of the same groups opposing labor who have been in-It is some of the same groups opposing labor who have been in-strumental in keeping the wage scale down.

MONEY SIPHONED INTO WALL STREET

This is not a bill to levy taxes or to appropriate money. It does not grant a subsidy to independents. It merely provides for equal rights with the chains. It is claimed that the chains save local people money on their merchandise, and this saving stays in the local community. If independent merchants are given the same prices, as provided in the Robinson-Patman bill, the independents will be giving their customers the same savings. Notwithstanding will be giving their customers the same savings. Notwithstanding this claim by the chains, they must admit that what they call a fair profit is taken away from the local community. It is siphoned into Wall Street banks, and it will not take many years to siphon the wealth of the country from the small communities to these large centers.

large centers.

Our bill will not fix prices or reward the inefficient. It will give the same rights and benefits to citizens as are given to big corporations under the same facts and circumstances. If passed, it will cause vacant buildings to be occupied; additional local people to be employed; put more money into circulation in the local community; and make more opportunities for employment of young, ambitious, deserving, and worthy young people. It will protect consumers against monopoly and give them all lower prices by reason of a competitive market. It will protect wage earners and producers against the destruction of their buying power and will enforce the Golden Rule in business. It is a bill power and will enforce the Golden Rule in business. It is a bill to grant equal rights to all and special privileges to none; it invokes the policy of live and let live.

"EQUAL OPPORTUNITY IN BUSINESS" AND THE ROBINSON-PATMAN BILL

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address I delivered over the facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System, Saturday night, April 18, 1936:

Ladies and gentlemen of the United States, I have never known a bill to be so much misrepresented as the Robinson-Patman bill.

CLAYTON ACT TO BE AMENDED

This measure causes an amendment to the Clayton Anti-Trust Act for the purpose of putting teeth into the act and making it effective. The original object of our antitrust laws was to give the small dealer opportunity to exist in a competitive business world. It was not for the purpose of giving him shelter or re-warding inefficiency. But it was designed to give efficient, worthy, legitimate small business the opportunity to exist.

TEETH INSTEAD OF WEASEL PHRASES

The Robinson-Patman bill takes out weasel phrases and puts biting teeth into the act. It plugs loopholes and removes tech-

If enacted, this law will not compel manufacturers to raise prices charged corporate chains or any of their customers. But it does demand that manufacturers give independent merchants the same rights and privileges now granted to corporate chains. Keener trade competition and greater consumer savings will

This measure strengthens the Clayton Act and other antitrust laws which were enacted to wipe out the steel grip of monopoly which always results when vast corporations and combinations dominate and control source of supply and means of distribution.

MONOPOLY NOW HAS TIGHT GRIP ON THROATS OF PEOPLE

Comparison of the business done by corporate chains and independents should be restricted to the areas in which chains operate, and to business in which they engage. It is not fair to say that the chains are doing only 25 percent of our national retail business. The bald truth is that in areas where they operate and in their lines of business they do from 56 to 100 percent of the husiness Confine comparisons to areas served by chains and you are astounded at the tight grip monopoly now has on the throats of our people.

As one line of business is absorbed by chains another line is engaged. If they are not stopped it will not be long before they will be in every line and serve every area where volume of business will possibly justify.

If absentee ownership and control of business is in the interest of public welfare we should not object. But after many years of study and investigation, I am convinced that absentee ownership of business will wreck any country on earth.

The people of this Nation will not tolerate private monopoly very long. It fattens and grows strong on special privilege and advantages made possible by size and power and on unfair, discriminatory advantages which small, independent merchants and manufacturers cannot compel or resist.

EQUAL ADVANTAGES

The Robinson-Patman bill levels off the field of competition so that small independents have equal advantages with all competi-

The opposition wails that the bill is unconstitutional. always been the cry of the privileged few when legislation is proposed to make their special privileges equally available to all. Constitutionality of the Clayton Act has been repeatedly tested and sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

SUGAR INSTITUTE DECISION BY SUPREME COURT

On March 30 the Supreme Court of the United States handed down a most significant decision in the case of the Sugar Insti-tute. This industry, through its institute, formulated a code.

The Supreme Court had before it the legality of provisions in this code. By decision the Court condemned in no uncertain language secret rebates, concessions, and other unethical, unfair trade practices. The Court found, however, that the dominant purpose of the international contractions are considered. of the institute—in the measure they adopted to eliminate these practices—was the creation and maintenance of a uniform price structure. For this reason everything in the plan tending to support and maintain the price structure was held illegal by the

It is significant the Supreme Court noted that unfair trade practices, including rebating and the granting of false allowances, can be prevented by other means. The Robinson-Patman bill is the obvious answer to the Court's finding that unfair trade practices can be stopped in a manner other than that provided by the Sugar Institute Code.

Congress has already condemned, in legislation, unfair trade practices and unfair price discriminations.

The Supreme Court has already held the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Clayton Act constitutional.

The Robinson-Patman bill follows the legal, constitutional path laid down by Congress and approved by the Court.

It prohibits by name and definition certain well-known price discriminations.

The sugar code was condemned because it eliminated competition. The Robinson-Patman bill restores competition, gives the independent business unit no special privilege, but equal rights with all other industry.

GREEDY INTERESTS WANT SPECIAL ADVANTAGES

Doesn't it seem strange that large and powerful chains, fighting this legislation, insist upon the right to buy goods at a lower price than the independent, which goods both must sell to consumers? A child can see that if the large and powerful continue to do this, the independent must perish.

If that day ever comes you will pay whatever monopoly dictates.

The scramble for rebates, unearned concessions, and unearned brokerage has reached the sordid stage of racketeering. It is a national scandal.

If you allow this to continue, your independent merchant will die from commercial starvation. He is public victim no. 1. You, the consumer, are public victim no. 2, because you will pay the price of monopoly.

COMPETITION-NOT PRICE FIXING

The Robinson-Patman bill provides that manufacturers give the same price (under the same conditions) to independent merchants that he gives to corporate chains or other competitors. Manufacturers, of course, will compete among themselves. They will not have the same prices. But each manufacturer must treat his own customers fairly and not discriminate between them.

Under existing law (which is not changed by this bill) a manufacturer has the right to select his customers. But having selected, he is not permitted to discriminate between them.

In other words, the bill allows price differentials, but not price discriminations. When the independent merchants are able to get goods at the same price as the corporate chains they will save the consumers billions of dollars each year.

This is not a price-fixing bill.

It is opposed to price fixing.

It will not grant privilege or benefit to anyone or to any group. It grants the same privilege to all groups.

LARGE SHIPPERS FORMERLY RECEIVED SECRET REBATES OVER RAILROADS More than 40 years ago people were amazed to learn that large shippers were getting special rebates and discounts on transporta-tion charges over railroads.

The Supreme Court stated that this enabled a few large ship-pers to destroy the business of small dealers. This was against public interest because it created monopolies.

A law, which has since been rigidly enforced, was passed providing a quantity limit on railroad rates. The carload is the limit in most cases. The man who ships a hundred thousand carloads pays the same transportation charge per car as the man who ships only one carload. It is admitted that a trainload can be shipped at a lower cost per car, but the Supreme Court said that if this were permitted, monopolies would be encouraged and small dealers would be crushed.

This principle is recognized in the Pohipper Petreen bill and

This principle is recognized in the Robinson-Patman bill, and by it the Federal Trade Commission has the power to fix a quantity limit, differing according to the commodity. This is in order that a few large corporations may not destroy the small dealers and thereby create a monopoly.

and thereby create a monopoly.

Under existing law, manufacturers are not compelled to sell to independent merchants or cooperatives for the same price for the same quantity that they sell to corporate chains. In some instances they have refused.

The measure also prohibits payment or allowance of brokerage, commission, or other sales compensation to buyers.

No provision of the bill compels a seller to use a broker to market his products, nor is he compelled to sell to any one class of customers.

customers.

He may sell by any method and to anyone.
But he is prohibited from bribing purchasers under the guise of brokerage allowances.

Those opposed to deceit, fraud, and bribery in business and who want farmers and wage earners to have a square deal will not oppose this provision.

HOW BROKERS AND WHOLESALERS ARE BENEFITED

Brokers and wholesalers will be benefited by this law to the extent that they render a service that the independent manufacturer and the independent merchant desire to receive and voluntarily pay for and also to the extent that they can perform their distribution functions in a way more economic than anyone else.

ADVERTISING ALLOWANCES

Another provision of the bill prevents a manufacturer from granting advertising allowances to certain favored customers without giving all customers proportionately equal terms.

The manufacturer may refuse to select a customer. That is all right. But, if selected as a customer, the bill compels that he be given the same fair, square deal on advertising allowances that is given corporate chains.

LOWEST PRICE TO CONSUMERS

Would you say that the slogan, "Lowest price to consumers" is a good one?

Is it in the best interest of the country?

Is it in the best interest of the country?
If a few mass buyers have power to reduce prices at will in their effort to favor consumers, they will cause farmers to sell below production cost; they will cause manufacturers to sell at such low prices that buying power of factory wage earners will be destroyed.

Therefore, consumers are entitled to the lowest price consistent with a fair price to the one who produces the raw material, a fair wage to the one converting the raw material into a finished product, and a fair profit to those who manufacture and distribute it.

NOT CLASS LEGISLATION

May I emphasize the point that this is not class legislation. It is not a bill to levy taxes on any group or place any group at a

It is not an anti-chain-store bill.

It is for the purpose of giving every group the same rights and benefits under the same conditions, and to protect you consumers. Today efficient merchants cannot survive because excess profits gained by great concerns are used to destroy independents in other towns. When independent merchants are destroyed, you people pay and pay dearly.

WEALTH DRAINED FROM LOCAL COMMUNITIES

There is a certain profit that goes regularly into Wall Street from communities where chain stores operate. Eventually, this will drain the wealth of our country from small communities into the control of vast banking corporations.

NO VISION THE PEOPLE PERISH

Would you believe that one New York bank has more than 4,000 directorships in the largest manufacturing, industrial, and other concerns in every section of the Nation? Would you believe that another large New York bank has more than 2,000 such directorships? What chance have you in the face of such power and influence? These men may intend to be good, but power naturally begets greed. They seek greater power, influence, and wealth. Where there is greed there is no vision and the Bible says that where there is no vision the people perish.

NOT PIONEER LEGISLATION

My friends, this is not pioneer legislation. Many of you will recall the emphasis laid on it by that eminent New York attorney, Charles Wesley Dunn. In an address delivered at the annual meeting of the Associated Grocery Manufacturers of America, Inc., in New York City on November 15, 1935, Mr. Dunn disclosed that laws against price discrimination are not new. They are embraced in many acts of Congress, such as the Interstate Commerce Act of 1887, the Elkins Act of 1903, the Shipping Act of 1916, the Stockyards Act of 1921, the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, the Motor Carrier Act of 1935, and the Coal Conservation Act of 1935.

SIMILAR TO CANADIAN LAW

In further support, our friendly neighbor Canada has In further support, our friendly neighbor Canada has passed a law almost duplicating the purposes of the Robinson-Patman bill. Consumers in that country report they are greatly benefited since the independent merchants buy as cheaply as the chains. This Canadian law is causing chain-store managers to take advantage of their training and experience to launch out into business for themselves as independent merchants. This is as it should be. Manufacturers in that country are exceedingly anxious to cooperate in enforcement of the new law.

EFFICIENT MERCHANT TO BE HELPED

Many manufacturers already have a policy which is strictly adhered to that their customers shall be treated the same as provided by the Robinson-Patman bill. Monopoly does not kidnap the young, but it kidnaps opportunities of the young. It is for the people to decide which is in the interest of the general welfare—the chain-store system of absentee ownership and control or independent merchants. Under our present system it will not be possible for the efficient merchant to survive very long, as his chain competitor across the street can reduce prices below cost until he is destroyed. The chains' losses are made up from excess profits in the town where they have a monopoly and where the sky is the limit as to price. As the independents are driven out of one town the excess profits gained there can be used to destroy the independent merchants in another town until, just like a cancerous growth destroys a human body, it will destroy our a cancerous growth destroys a human body, it will destroy our country. If it were only the inefficient merchants who were suffering no one would be disturbed.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES LIMITED

The agitation for all forms of relief for different classes and groups is justified in many cases by an economic system that deprives employment opportunities to those who are able, willing, and anxious to work but cannot find jobs. Many large corporations do not employ anyone over 30 or 35 years of age. Laws are passed in different States restricting the number of people who can engage in certain occupations and professions. Absentee ownership of business reduces employment opportunities and destroys purchasing power of producers and wage earners. If the Government is going to stand idly by and permit old people (and those who are not so old) to be discriminated against and deprived of employment opportunities, it is necessary that the Government go to their aid and rescue in some manner.

AMERICA SHOULD WAKE UP

It is time for American consumers to wake up. For your own economic welfare you must not remain indifferent. Your country's welfare is distressingly at stake. Opportunity for the young and security for the aged hang in the balance.

Do you want private monopoly to continue to operate to the benefit and advantage of a few New York bankers?

Or do you want a fair competitive system where equality does not end when one is born?

Do you want community life built and sustained by home-owning, home-loving, independent merchants?

Or one bled white and cold-bloodedly exploited by absentee owners?

In the spirit of sincere public service, I submit the Robinson-Patman bill for your immediate and responsive consideration.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

It is the contemporary crystallization of the present Democratic platform which is pledged to "strengthen the antitrust laws, to prevent monopoly and unfair trade practices."

It broadly aspires to the teachings of the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount.

Ladies and gentlemen, this bill is presented to you as your Colden Bule in business.

Golden Rule in business.

RETIREMENT ANNUITIES FOR LIBRARIANS OF CONGRESS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11848, to authorize retirement annuities for persons who serve as Librarian of Congress for 35 years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. FADDIS, Mr. ZIONCHECK, Mr. RAMSPECK, and Mr. LEHLBACH objected.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it. Mr. CURLEY. What disposition was made of the bill (H. R. 11854) to provide for the erection of a monument to the memory of Gouverneur Morris?

The SPEAKER. The bill was objected to. Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11854) to provide for the erection of a monument to the memory of Gouverneur Morris.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott] withhold his objection so that I may make a statement?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I withhold my objection. Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am the sponsor of this particular bill that the gentleman was so kind to withdraw his objection to.

I think this is an opportune time to take up this matter showing what the people of this country think about the Constitution. I have listened to a good many Members of the House discuss this question since the beginning of the

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I object, Mr. Speaker.

MEMORIAL TO THOMAS JEFFERSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12027, to authorize the execution of plans for a permanent memorial to Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. WOLCOTT and Mr. ZIONCHECK objected.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentlemen will reserve their objections, and if there are any questions, I will be pleased to answer them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I shall be glad to withhold my objection. Mr. ZIONCHECK. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker. Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I may say that this bill is the result of the work of a committee authorized in a resolution passed by the House last year. The committee was composed of 12 members, 3 appointed by the House, 3 by the Senate, 3 by the President of the United States, and 3 by the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission.

We have had plans prepared, and these plans were passed on by the committee and were submitted to the President of the United States. Upon further deliberation we thought a further study could be made of the matter, and in the meantime a bill should be introduced asking for an authorization in the amount of the smallest estimate received for the construction of the memorial, with the proviso that no application for funds should be made this year.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I may say that Thomas Jefferson was one of the world's greatest humanitarians, and Thomas Jefferson would never stand for the Congress of the United States appropriating $3,000,000 to erect a memorial to him if he knew of the suffering going on in the United States today.

Mr. BOYLAN. The Congress of the United States has already authorized the expenditure of much greater sums than this amount in memory of the patriots of our country, men who have rendered signal services to our beloved land. Thomas Jefferson himself was a modest and unassuming man, but it is not a question of Jefferson; it is a question of honoring the memory of Jefferson in these distraught times.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I agree with the gentleman that we should give all honor to the memory of Jefferson, because he was one of the most outstanding men this Nation has ever known, and when the proper time comes, when this Nation can afford it, when the people of New York and Michigan feel that they can afford to spend $3,000,000 to erect monuments, I shall be pleased to go along with the gentleman; but just so long as there is starvation in America, just so long as there is a lack of shelter for the poor people, I think it is unbecoming of us to spend $3,000,000 to erect a memorial even to George Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN BRIDGES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10589, to amend section 32 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to extend the times for commencing and/or completing the construction of other bridges over the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes", approved August 30, 1935.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this with respect to a free bridge, or is it an amendment of a general law?

Mr. STEFAN. This has to do with a free bridge, and is merely a corrective amendment of an item passed in the omnibus bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (a) of section 32 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to extend the times for commencing and/or completing the construction of other bridges over the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes", approved August 30, 1935, is amended by striking out "the village board of the village of Niobrara, county of Knox, State of Nebrasha", and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the county of Knox, State of Nebraska, its successors and assigns."

AMENDING THE ACT AUTHORIZING CERTAIN TRIBES OF INDIANS TO SUBMIT CLAIMS TO THE COURT OF CLAIMS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 10001) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing certain tribes of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes", approved May 26, 1920.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have a report from the Comptroller General on this bill, and I ask unanimous consent to place it in the RECORD at this point, and then I will ask that the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object to the bill's going over without prejudice, I want to call attention to the fact so that it may be considered in the meantime, that this bill is subject to the same objection which has been made against many Indian bills, in that it gives to the Indians an advantage not enjoyed by any other American citizen in prosecuting claims against the Government. This bill provides that the Indians may appeal their claims to the United States Supreme Court, whereas any other American citizen is obliged to take his case to the Supreme Court on certiorari. The technical difference is that the American citizen is confined in his argument before the Supreme Court to points of law, but the Indian when he takes his appeal to the Supreme Court may argue questions of fact as well as of law.

I think we should remove the discrimination in favor of the Indians. The Indians are good enough citizens so that they are not going to ask any advantage not enjoyed by any other American citizen.

I am constrained to object to all Indian claims bills which give the Indians an advantage over other citizens in their appeals to the Supreme Court.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, aside from that, there are other objections to this bill set out in the report of the Comptroller General. The only reason that I ask that the bill go over without prejudice is to give Members a chance to read the report. It is my purpose to object to this bill at the next call of the calendar.

Mr. PIERCE. This is my bill. I know all the conditions and the situation. The Klamath Indians owned a beautiful tract of timberland, 87,000 acres, which was taken from them in one of the timber frauds in Oregon by the Secretary of the Interior. It was stolen for less than 4 percent of its value. The Indians came here to Congress, through my predecessor, Mr. Sinnott, introduced a bill to give the Court of Claims the right to ascertain the facts, a jurisdictional act. That was 16 years ago. The suit was brought in the Court of Claims. It went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that Court found, together with the Court of Claims, that this tract of land was worth $2,980,000. The Indians were paid the magnificent sum of $108,750. It was taken from them fraudulently and wrongfully. The Court said, however, that there was no way to give them redress except to have a new jurisdictional bill. I took up the fight. There never has been a more just, a squarer, or a fairer bill before the Congress. I am sure that upon examination the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Missouri will see the justice of this claim. I ask a few minutes of their time before the next consent day that I may talk personally to both of them. I know this bill is just and right.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to let it go over without prejudice, but the report shows there are of record over $2,000,000 in advances to these Indians.

Mr. PIERCE. Not quite $2,000,000. The property was worth nearly $3,000,000. We do not claim the full $3,000,000. The amount due the Indians is a little less than one million.

Mr. COCHRAN. The amount is $2,207,329.50. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Comptroller's report is as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, Washington, April 20, 1936.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHEAN,

Hon. John J. Cochan,

Chairman, Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Chairman: Further reference is made to your letter of April 3, 1936, which was acknowledged by letter of April 4, 1936, requesting a report on H. R. 10001, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, entitled "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act authorizing certain tribes of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes', approved May 26, 1920", as follows:

1920", as follows:
"That in the suit numbered E-346 heretofore instituted in the Court of Claims by the Klamath and Moadoc Tribes and Yahoo-skin Band of Snake Indians under an act entitled 'An act authorizing certain tribes of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes', approved May 26, 1920, jurisdiction is nereby conferred upon said court and it is hereby authorized and directed to reinstate and retry said case and to hear thorized and directed to reinstate and retry said case and to hear and determine the claims of the plaintiffs on the merits, and to enter judgment thereon, irrespective of any release or settlement, and upon the present pleadings, evidence, and findings of fact, with the right of appeal, rather than by certiorari, to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party: Provided, That any payment heretofore made to the said Indians by the United States in connection with any release or settlement shall be charged as an offset, but shall not be treated as an estoppel."

The act of May 26, 1920 (41 Stat. 623), provided, in part, that all claims of whatsoever nature which the Klamath and Moadoc Tribes of Indians and the Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians might.

Tribes of Indians and the Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians might have against the United States which had not theretofore been determined by the Court of Claims, might be submitted to the court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the amount, if any, due said Indians from the United States under treaties, agreements, or laws of Congress, or for the misappro-priation of any of the funds of said Indians, or for the failure of the United States to pay said Indians any money or other property due; and that the Court of Claims should hear and determine erry due; and that the Court of Claims should hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said Indians against the United States, and to enter judgment thereon. The said act provided further that any payment which might be made upon any claim so submitted should not be pleaded as an estoppel, but might be pleaded as an offset in such suits or actions, and that the United States should be allowed credit for all sums, including traduities therefore usid or expended for the benefit of said gratuities, theretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said Indians or any band thereof.

Pursuant to the said act of May 26, 1920, the said Indians filed three petitions in the Court of Claims in one of which no. E-346, there was set up a claim for a tract of land located in the State of Oregon. No copy of the petition in that case was presented to this office for a report, but under date of June 19, 1928, this office forwarded to the Department of Justice in connection with case no. E-350 a report in detail of disbursements made by the United States under treaty and other than treaty appropriations. In the report of June 19, 1928, there were included possible offsets in the amount of $2,382,435.49.

In an opinion rendered November 5, 1934, the Court of Claims dismissed the petition in case no. E-346 but found that the United States was entitled to set-offs under the act of May 26, 1920, supra, in amounts aggregating $2,207,329.50, the same being a part of the amount reported by this office in case no. E-346 as dis-of the amount reported by this office in case no. E-346 as disbursements under gratuity appropriations for the benefit of these Indians. In the opinion of November 5, 1934, in connection with the payment for the land which the Indians alleged was of a much greater value than the amount paid them, the court said:

"In this case we have not only a payment made and accepted, but a written release, comprehensive in terms, which was intended to and did extinguish any existing liability. No future claim could be based upon the transaction unless Congress waived the legal effect thereof. The issue here is not alone one of payment working an estoppel, but the setting aside of a release which admittedly closed the transaction and extinguished all liability under the claim. If Congress intended to nullify a release, it would have used language clearly evidencing that intention. In the choice of legal terms we cannot assume that Congress intended to set aside a release by using the words 'payment upon a claim.'"

And—

And—
"We have made the findings after a careful analysis of the record, but inasmuch as in our opinion the special jurisdictional act does not confer upon the court authority to determine the court It is so ordered."

In an opinion rendered December 9, 1935, the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the decision of November 5, 1934, of the Court of Claims, and stated in conclusion that "if plaintiffs the Court of Claims, and stated in conclusion that "if plaintiffs are to have additional compensation, it must be obtained through legislation dealing with the merits or authorizing effective judicial determination.

There is nothing before this office suggesting why the Congress should now remove the bar of the payment, acceptance and release for the lands as enforced by the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States in their opinions of November 5, 1934, Court of the United States in their opinions of November 5, 1934, and December 9, 1935, respectively, but whether the Congress shall do so is, of course, a question of policy for its determination. However, if such bar is removed, as proposed in the bill, it would seem appropriate that there be contained in the bill a specific requirement that the courts shall consider and allow as offset against any amount which may be recovered for the lands the gratuity expenditures made by the United States on behalf of these Indians which were determined by the Court of Claims, as above stated, to aggregate $2,207,329.50 which have not been recouped to the United States.

Sincerely yours.

J. R. McCarl., Comptroller General of the United States.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT NATCHEZ, MISS.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 689, H. R. 11729, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I was of the impression that this was another toll bridge. I never have liked toll bridges, and I distinctly dislike them now more than ever. I was going into Charleston, S. C., driving that bad, bad car you know that does so much damage around here, and had just run short of money. I spent the last few dimes I had for gasoline and oil. I did not have any money, assuming that the best highway, the crack highway, from New York to Miami, Fla., so much advertised, would not have a toll bridge upon it; when, lo, and behold, I came to that great toll bridge just before you go into Charleston, S. C. I did not have any money. offered to write a congressional check. I had my check book with me; but no. However, they said they would take a spare tire and then I could come back and get it for 65 cents. I told them I might need the tire, and I would not do that.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It is worth 65 cents to drive over that bridge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi River pleting the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss., authorized by be built by the city of Natchez and county of Adams, State of Mississippi, by the act of Congress approved August 30, 1935, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

COMPENSATION OF DIRECTOR OF FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11616, to fix the compensation of the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement on that.

The SPEAKER. Objection has already been heard. The bill has gone off the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ADMISSIBILITY IN EVIDENCE OF CERTAIN WRITINGS AND RECORDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11690, relating to the admissibility in evidence of certain writings and records made in the regular course of business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. ZIONCHECK, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my objection and I yield to the the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill is intended to cure a condition that developed in Pennsylvania. A circuit judge in Pennsylvania sitting as a district judge-

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I think the gentleman is talking about a different bill. This is fixing the salary of J. Edgar Hoover. Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No.

This circuit judge, sitting as a trial judge, held that record books kept in the ordinary course, would not be admissible in evidence unless the Government produced the individual who had made the entry, who could testify with reference to the making of the entry, and so forth. Of course, according to the manner that books are now kept, many times entries are made by machines. It may be that a dozen or a half dozen people will make entries in a set of books and nobody will be able to swear that he made a given record.

Personally, I am ashamed to ask the House to pass this bill. This holding by this judge is ridiculous. It is worse than that, but that is the situation that has developed up there. I do not understand how any judge can hold, in view of what is generally accepted, that one must bring the identical person who made the identical entry, before that entry can be introduced in evidence where the books kept are regularly and properly kept in the ordinary course of business. But he has held it, and this bill has been introduced for the purpose of curing that situation.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any writing or record, whether in the form of an entry in a book or otherwise, made as a memorandum or record of any act, transaction, occurrence, or event, shall be admissible in evidence in proof of said act, transaction, occurrence, or event, if it shall appear that it was made in the regular course of any business, and that it was the regular course of such business to make such memorandum or record at the time of such act, transaction, occurrence, or event or within a reasonable time thereafter. All other circumstances of the making of such writing or record, including lack of personal knowledge by the entrant or maker, may be shown to affect its weight, but they shall not affect its admissibility. The term "business" shall include business, profession, occupation, and calling of every

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Apparently, Mr. Speaker, one of the most popular illusions that the American people are suffering from today is the illusion that has been deliberately created and built up by the master of fiction, J. Edgar Hoover, the great "G-man." Mr. Speaker, since Congress was kind enough to favor him by allowing his men to run around with guns, machine guns, and sawed-off shotguns, four "G-men" have been killed and eight gangsters, and we cannot find out how many innocent people were killed in the process. Dillinger! Dillinger did not know and could not know that about 17 young boys with shaking hands were all leveled on the place where he was to come, and they let him have it. He looked like a sieve when they got through with him. That is law and order. That is effective justice. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, if you had happened to have been at that theater at the same time, and if you had gone out, you would have been killed. They did hit an innocent person.

But that is not the only case, Mr. Speaker. That was fine. Even Hearst praised them for it. So they continue to do that. An automobile with a gangster—it happened to be a gangster this time-tried to get away, so they sneaked up behind him and got him in ambush and they loaded that car up with holes. They killed the fellow all right. Real American justice! What if that had been a kidnaper? What if the little Lindbergh child had been in the botton of that car in a sack? They would have gotten the Lindbergh baby. They could not have missed it. The dictator, J. Edgar Hoover!

It has been said, Mr. Speaker, or it has been rumored that he may know the answer to the Hauptmann murder.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Everybody in the world knows the answer to that; as pronounced by Jersey justice.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Jersey justice! Does it give cream or skimmed milk? Mr. Speaker, it is rumored that the great "G-man"—"G" not standing for God—may know under whose direction the ladder was built that convicted Hauptmann; that he may know why Hauptmann did not talk, because Hauptmann had nothing to say. He did not know

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from California is recognized in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I do not need that much time. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we have come to a pretty pass when we must listen on the floor of this House to a defense of Dillinger, Hauptmann, and the gangsters. [Applause.]

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Who is defending Mr. Dillinger?

By unanimous consent, the pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORLAND RECLAMATION PROJECT, CALIFORNIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11538, for the relief of the Orland reclamation project, California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does this bill do?

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, this bill does four things: First, it permits the substitution of lands outside the project for lands inside the project to be excluded. The object of this is to exclude nonproductive gravel lands inside the project in order that they may be substituted by lands that can bear their part of the expense of the project.

Another provision is to change the time of payment of operation and maintenance charges so as to make them payable in advance instead of at the end of the year. In this way no annual appropriation by Congress will be required.

A third feature is to extend the time of payment on account of the new reservoir from 17 to 35 years. This is in line with the adjustments made on projects that came under the Adjustment Act of 1926.

The fourth provides for the extension of the canal to reach the new lands outside the project that may be

This bill does not reduce or cancel any obligation of the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to execute or authorize the execution of amendatory contracts with the individual water users of the Orland reclamation project, California, by which (a) the time within which the cost of Stony Gorge Reservoir may be paid shall be 35 years in lieu of the 17 years allowed for such payment under existing contracts, the said annual payments to be graduated as the said Secretary may prescribe, and (b) any construction or operation and maintenance charges due from the individual water users and delinquent as of the date of this act, together with the users and delinquent as of the date of this act, together with the accrued interest or penalties, may be added to their proportionate part of the cost of said reservoir.

SEC. 2. The said Secretary shall classify the lands of the Orland project and the owners of all lands found by the said Secretary to be permanently unproductive may, by supplemental agreement with the United States, be relieved of all liability for further operation and maintenance and construction charges on land so found to be permanently unproductive, and the credit for construction charges theretofore paid on such permanently unproductive lands may be transferred to other producing lands, as the owner of such permanently unproductive lands may designate in writing. The released water rights theretofore appurtenant to such permanently unproductive lands shall be transferred to other productive lands, as the said Secretary may designate and under such regulations as he may prescribe.

Should the estimate by the Secretary of the amount of the operation and maintenance the Secretary of the amount of the operation and maintenance charges for any calendar year or the collections from water users for such year prove to be too small, the water users shall be required to make a further payment in advance of the additional amount then estimated to be sufficient to meet the remainder of the operation and maintenance cost for that year, and the delivery of water shall not be continued (a) to the project unless said additional amount is paid to the United States, or (b) to any water user failing to pay his proportionate share (as determined by the Secretary) of such additional operation and maintenance cost. Overpayments resulting from too large estimates for any year shall be adjusted by credits upon succeeding years after the amount of the overpayment is ascertained.

amount of the overpayment is ascertained.

SEC. 4. For all water users executing supplementary contracts as permitted herein their proportionate share, as determined by the said Secretary, of the operation and maintenance charges for the first year in which this plan is made effective for the Orland project, by the execution of this agreement by at least 90 percent of the water users of the project, as conclusively determined by the Secretary, shall be consolidated with the construction cost of the Stony Gorge Reservoir and paid when such construction cost is paid as herein permitted. Water users failing or refusing to execute such supplementary contracts shall not be accorded the benefit of this act, nor shall they receive the benefit of any moratory construction charge legislation enacted in 1936 or thereafter unless otherwise specifically directed in such moratory legislation. legislation.

SEC. 5. An appropriation of $35,000 from the reclamation fund for the Orland project is hereby authorized to enable the Secretary to make the land classification provided for in section 2 hereof to make the land classification provided for in section 2 hereof and to construct canals and other works necessary to conduct to new project lands the water supply to be released hereunder from permanently unproductive lands. The primary construction charge of $55 per acre on such new lands shall be payable in installments as provided in section 2 of the act of August 13, 1914 (38 Stat. 687). The supplemental construction charges for the new land shall be the same as for the old land, except that each acre of new land shall be required to pay in addition its proportionate part, as determined by the Secretary, of the construction cost of new work as authorized in this section. The supplemental construction charges for the new land shall be payable in mental construction charges for the new land shall be payable in installments over a period of 35 years, the first of such installments to be due 1 year after the due date of the last installment of the original construction charge on the new land. The supplemental construction charge installments for the new land shall be graduated in the same manner as for the old land as provided in section 1 hereof. The dates for the payment of the construc-tion charges provided for in sections 1 and 5 hereof shall be as

Mr. LEA of California. That will be paid out of the reclamation fund.

Mr. TABER. How much will it cost?

Mr. LEA of California. Thirty-five thousand dollars. There are about 3,000 acres inside that may be excluded in lieu of the lands that may be taken in from outside. These inside gravelly lands require too much water and fail to

Sec. 7. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

SALE OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES IN ARMY POST EXCHANGES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11300, to provide that the sale of or dealing in beer, wine, or intoxicating liquor in Army post exchanges and military establishments shall be subject to regulation by the Secretary of War.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the sponsor of this bill inform us whether it will allow intoxicating liquors to be sold in these places without the tax being

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I may state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the author of the bill is unavoidably absent and unable to be present today. I do not believe this bill would waive the payment of tax on any alcoholic beverages.

Mr. RICH. I ask this because they sell merchandise through these commissaries without the regular tax; for instance, a package of cigarettes can be bought there without the tax, and I am just wondering whether, if this bill should pass, they would be able to sell alcoholic liquors without paying the tax.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

IRRIGATION CHARGES WITHIN PROJECTS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1318, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and adjust irrigation charges on irrigation lands within projects on Indian reservations, and for other purposes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill does not cost the Government any money and has been pending for years. It is simply clearing up the title to this railroad property and does not involve a dollar of expense to the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept on behalf of the United States, free from encumbrance and without cost to the United States, all the right, encumbrance and without cost to the United States, all the right, title, and interest of the Gulf Power Co. of Pensacola, Fla., in its railroad tracks located upon the United States Naval Air Station, Pensacola, Fla.; its railroad trestle, including railroad tracks thereon, across Bayou Grande, beginning at the northern end of said trestle and extending across said Bayou Grande to the said naval air station; and its right-of-way 40 feet wide upon which the northern end of said trestle is located, and extending from said northern end of the trestle to the north shore of said Bayou Grande together with all sidings equipment and appurtment Grande, together with all sidings, equipment, and appurtenant structures

R. 3450, authorizing an appropriation for the erection of a memorial to the officers and men of the United States Navy who lost their lives as the result of a boiler explosion that totally destroyed the U. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

COMMEMORATION OF THE BATTLE OF EUTAW SPRINGS, S. C.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 255, to provide for the commemoration of the Battle of Eutaw Springs, in the State of South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I withhold the objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman to give some good reason why he objects to this bill? It does not cost the Government anything and puts the Secretary of the Interior in the position to accept donations of land or money to take care of one of the most outstanding battlefields in the South. We have a favorable report from the Secretary and the matter has been passed upon by the Military Affairs Committee. It will not cost the Government anything.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DISTRIBUTION, PROMOTION, RETIREMENT, AND DISCHARGE OF COM-MISSIONED OFFICERS OF THE MARINE CORPS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 12032, to amend section 10 and to repeal section 16 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes", approved May 29, 1934 (48 Stat. 811), and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes", approved May 29, 1934 (48 Stat. 811), as provides: "and officers in the upper four-sevenths of the grades below brigadier general, subject to selection as established by the first section of this act, shall be eligible for consideration by selection beards and for premotion without record to length of first section of this act, shall be eligible for consideration by selection boards and for promotion without regard to length of service in grade: Provided, That no officer of the Marine Corps shall be ineligible for consideration for promotion by reason of completion of length of commissioned service until he shall have been once considered by a selection board", is hereby amended to read as follows: "and until January 1, 1938, officers in the upper three-sevenths of the grades below brigadier general, subject to selection as established by the first section of this act, shall be eligible for consideration by selection boards without regard to eligible for consideration by selection boards without regard to length of service in grade: Provided, That, except as herein otherwise provided, no officer of the Marine Corps shall be ineligible for consideration by a selection board or for promotion by reason of completion of length of commissioned service or because of age without having at least once been considered by a selection board and if selected shall be eligible for promotion: Provided further, That officers of the Marine Corps of the grade of second lieutenant and above, except those appointed or serving as major general commandant, as assistant to the major general commandant, as the head of a staff department, or whose names appear on an eligible list for appointment as head of a staff department, shall not serve on duty in the Marine Corps Headquarters, Washington, D. UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 525, to enable the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission to carry out and give effect to certain approved plans, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the House joint resolution?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

APPOINTMENT OF ONE ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE EAST-ERN, NORTHERN, AND WESTERN DISTRICTS OF OKLAHOMA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2137, to provide for the appointment of one additional district judge for the eastern, northern, and western districts of Oklahoma

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GASSAWAY. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I withhold my objection.

Mr. GASSAWAY. Mr. Speaker, may I make the statement that this is a bill which provides for the appointment of a roving judge in Oklahoma. That is, an itinerant judge to try cases in all the districts. This has been brought up by the judicial council, which approves of this additional judge. The Department of Justice approves it. I may say that we are at least 3 years behind with our docket down there due to the fact that a great deal of the land in Oklahoma is of Indian extraction so far as the titles are concerned. There has been the opening up of oil wells and all that and the lawyers are really in distress. I think we are entitled to this additional judge.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Being a lawyer myself I am glad to do anything to relieve the distress of lawyers, of course, but I may say that on the calendar today there are bills which will authorize, I think, about five additional district judges.

It seems rather unusual that all of a sudden we determine it necessary to increase the number of our judges throughout the United States. There is one here for Oklahoma, one for Kansas, and one for Kentucky, as I recall it. I, perhaps, would have no objection to these bills if a case were made out. The gentleman knows how easy it is to make out a case on this Consent Calendar, and so I am objecting for the purpose of calling the situation to the attention of the House, in order that the Judiciary Committee may, if, in its judgment, it sees fit to do so, put these in an omnibus bill, bring them out here, and give us an hour or half an hour, it does not make much difference how much time we have to discuss them, so long as we have a full understanding of the need for these judges.

I am protecting the gentleman from Oklahoma in this respect just as much as all the other Members of the House, because the charge has been made that you gentlemen over there, being in charge of legislation, are creating new jobs at the expense of the Federal judiciary. I do not think this is true—in fact, I am sure none of you would do it—and to prevent any stigma attaching to our actions with respect to Federal judges, I am objecting for the purpose of allowing the Judiciary Committee to embody this in one bill. We will then discuss all of them together and in this manner we can get the entire picture, instead of picking out a little bit here and a little bit there and trying to fill it all in and make

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to the gentleman that with regard to this particular bill, as I understand it, there has been a unanimous determination on the part of the Judiciary Committee, Republicans and Democrats, that the situation there requires this additional judge. I believe the record also shows that this judge has been recommended by the council made up of the chief justice and the presiding justice of each of the circuits. I think this is true.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; the judicial council has made a recommendation.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Well, that is all I can say

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 304 OF THE REVISED STATUTES, AS AMENDED

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3258, to amend section 304 of the Revised Statutes, as amended.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is this bill?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill would permit the Treasurer of the United States, in an emergency, to appoint one of his deputies to sign certain routine matters in the Treasury Department, and the bill appeals to me as a meritorious one.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as

Be it enacted, etc., That section 304 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (31 U. S. C., sec. 144), is further amended to read as amended (31 U. S. C., sec. 144), is further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 304. The Treasurer may, in his discretion, and with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, authorize the Assistant Treasurer to act in the place and discharge any or all of the duties of the Treasurer of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasurer's Office any person to be Acting Treasurer during the absence or illness of both the Treasurer and Assistant Treasurer; and the Secretary of the Treasurer may at any time, on the recommendation of the Treasurer, appoint from among the clerks in the Treasurer's Office any one or more of said clerks to be a Special Assistant Treasurer, with authority to sign certificates of deposit, checks, letters, telegrams, and other official documents in connection with the business of the Treasurer's Office, and who shall serve in this capacity without additional salary: Provided, however, That no appointments shall be made under the provisions of serve in this capacity without additional salary: Provided, however, That no appointments shall be made under the provisions of this section until the official bond given by the Treasurer shall be made in terms to cover and apply to the acts and defaults of every person appointed hereunder. Each person so appointed shall, moreover, for the time being, be subject to all the liabilities and penalties prescribed by law for the official misconduct in like cases of the Treasurer."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SECTIONS 109 AND 113 OF THE CRIMINAL CODE AND SECTION 190 OF THE REVISED STATUTES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3781, limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from from Oregon withhold his objection for a moment? I think the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary desires to make a statement.

Mr. MOTT. I withhold my objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we appreciate the importance of what is in the minds of the gentlemen who are objecting to this bill. Of course, we hope to bring it to your attention again, and for that reason I want to make a very brief statement. The bill is going over, I understand, but here is what the measure does and this is the reason for the bill:

Mr. MacLean was connected with the Attorney General's office, and while in that office familiarized himself with this particular matter with reference to which it is desired to employ him. The plain, practical proposition is this: When the Attorney General goes out to employ somebody, as he must, I understand, to take this matter up, the question is whether he should employ this man, who is already familiar with the case, or employ somebody who is not familiar with it. This bill does just one thing. It permits the employment of Mr. MacLean in this particular case and prevents that particular employment from changing his general status with reference to the legislative propositions which deal with the right of persons engaged for the Government taking claims against the Government, and as my colleague reminds me, MacLean won the case in the lower court.

I thank you for the privilege of making this statement now, because I know the measure is going over.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman who has the floor yield to me?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I may say for the information of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee that I have information which the gentleman should have not pertaining to this particular bill but pertaining to one almost identical with it, which was passed during my absence.

There was a man by the name of Calhoun who had some cases against the Government. He had all of his money invested, and they needed this man that I speak of in the worst way because of his expert advice. He was the only man available.

So a bill was passed by the Senate and passed by the House and signed by the President, and this gentleman appears at the Department of Justice arrayed in a cutaway coat, striped trousers, and a daisy or a gardenia. He was somewhat astonished because there were no photographers or newspapermen there when he was to take the oath of office.

Then he was more astonished when there was no oath of office to take.

He was asked what he was going to do. Well, the Department could not get along without him, you know, but they did not know what he was to do, so they inquired. They assumed that by his appearing at the war-risk department it was something that was connected with the war-risk litigation. They asked him, "What do you know about it?" And he said that he knew all about it, generally speaking. They said, "Have you read the act?" And he said, "No; I haven't had time." They asked him what he knew about section 19. He did not know, but he was willing to learn. He broke down-

Mr. WOLCOTT. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOTT. I object.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

VALIDATING PAYMENTS ON ACCOUNTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 3687) to validate payments and to relieve the accounts of disbursing officers of the Army on account of payments made to Reserve officers on active duty for rental allowances.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I object.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will.

Mr. McSWAIN. This bill is to correct technical errors made by disbursing officers in payments to Reserve officers on duty with the C. C. C. It is to validate payments and relieve the accounts of the disbursing officers of the Army on account of payments made to Reserve officers on active duty with the C. C. C. for rental allowances paid to them on the ground that the payments were lawful. The Secretary of War has determined that these payments are not technically legal. This involves a small sum of money which was paid to the officers in charge of the C. C. C. I hope the gentleman will see the reasonableness of it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, the reason I am objecting to this is that if you set a precedent for the Government to pay for the mistakes of its employees, there is no end to what the cost to the United States will be. It goes on back to the time of the adoption of the Constitution.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman let me explain to him that there was a bill before our committee seeking to confer the power to allow such payments to be made general, but the committee turned it down. That was a general bill. This particular bill seemed to us to be so righteous and so fair that it ought to be passed, because these Reserve officers will have to pay the money back, and they are not able to do it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The trouble with a bill like this is that it is like the camel getting his nose under the tent. If this bill passes, then someone will come around, some other and larger group, and will say, "Look what you did to these others; is not this a country of equal justice; why should somebody be treated like birds and others like fowls and others like fish and others like fishhooks?" Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE, EASTERN AND WESTERN DISTRICTS OF KENTUCKY

The Clerk called the bill (S. 3344) to appoint one additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern and Western Districts of Kentucky.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I object. Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. McLEAN. Certainly.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, in the Seventy-first Congress a bill was introduced to create an additional district in the State of Kentucky. That bill was favorably reported by the committee. The minority report was signed by the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and stated as We respectfully differ with the majority of the committee on the method they have adopted to grant relief from crowded court conditions in Kentucky. Some relief may be justified, but if those affected are to be consulted or believed, it should be given by the naming of an additional judge to serve the whole State and not by any creation of a new district.

Several judgeships have been created to serve more than one district as the needs demanded, and have proven highly satisfactory, as testified to by the judges so arranged in South Carolina, Alabama, and elsewhere. Places can be added for holding court as they are needed under this plan, just as they are provided under a new district, and with much more economy as to officials and employees than a new district would require.

This bill merely provides for an additional judge. It does not provide for any of the additional machinery of justice. We all know that the jurisdiction of the United States courts has been greatly increased by reason of the activities of the National Government. Justice delayed is justice denied.

On the facades of the great building where sits the Supreme Court of the United States there are these splendid inscrip-

Equal justice under law.

Justice the guardian of liberty.

But justice is never equal under the law and justice is not the guardian of liberty unless it is expeditiously administered.

One of the reasons assigned by Hamlet for "shuffling off this mortal coil" was the law's delay.

We have experienced this delay in the United States district courts of Kentucky.

The Constitution of the United States provides that in criminal cases the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, and the enjoyment of that right is often as important in civil cases as in criminal prosecutions.

There should be some additional places in the eastern part of Kentucky where this court should be held.

This could be very easily accomplished if an additional judge is appointed.

In Covington, the second largest city in the State, and where there are in unbroken settlement in Kenton and Campbell Counties 175,000 people, there is no marshal and it is difficult, indeed, to obtain provisional remedies because of the lack of adequate officers and organization.

Upon the speedy enforcement of the law depends the strength of our institutions, and certainly the National Government should provide an adequate number of judges to administer the law after sufficient consideration, and expe-

The dockets of Kentucky are crowded, justice is delayed, the litigants suffer.

This bill has been passed by the Senate and reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee of the House. It has been approved by the Bar Association of Kentucky and the people generally are much interested in its passage.

I hope the gentlemen will withdraw their objections.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

TO VALIDATE CERTAIN PAYMENTS TO RESERVE OFFICERS

LOANING BLANKETS, ETC., TO UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 11302) to authorize the Secretary of War to lend to the reunion committee of the United Confederate Veterans 3,000 blankets, olive drab, no. 4, 1,500 canvas cots, to be used at their annual encampment to be held at Shreveport, La., in June 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. It has been the invariable practice of Congress for nearly 16 years to my certain knowledge, to allow the use of cots, blankets, and so forth, to these national reunions of the Confederate Veterans and of the Grand Army of the Republic and similar Nation-wide organizations. There never has been any objection to it in all these years.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Who pays for the freight when these things are sent down?

Mr. McSWAIN. The expenses are paid by the committee having the matter in charge. They are required to give a bond.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does the Government pay for the transportation?

Mr. McSWAIN. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes, Mr. Speaker, if I cannot get some information which the report does not show.

Mr. McSWAIN. We will be glad to give the gentleman the information.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. But I want other information.

Mr. McSWAIN. What is it? I shall be glad to answer any questions I can.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is this done every year?

Mr. McSWAIN. Every year since I have been here-15

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Would it not be cheaper for the Government to give this property to them so that they could haul it around themselves wherever they go?

Mr. McSWAIN. No, indeed. The fact is that the committees are required to give bond to cover all expenses.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The gentleman is not answering the

Mr. McSWAIN. I said no; it would not be cheaper, because it is a good thing for the property to be unpacked to see that weevils, moths, and other insects do not injure or destroy it.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object for the time being.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MERRITT of New York. Will the gentleman reserve his objection and let that bill go over without prejudice?

Mr. LEHLBACH. No. New York Harbor belongs to two States.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will not object if the gentleman will yield for a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR CEMETERIAL PURPOSES IN THE VICINITY OF NEW YORK CITY

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to make an explanation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I am asking this 1 minute to explain the very great urgency for action today on Calendar No. 723, H. R. 10847, to authorize the acquisition of land in the vicinity of New York City, N. Y., for cemetery purposes for United States soldiers and former soldiers. The report is that the existing cemetery facilities will be completely exhausted by June 1. This bill ought to be passed today and rushed to the Senate, so that arrangements may be made to acquire immediately additional ground. I am saying this in great earnestness because it is a matter of emergency and of serious importance.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, for the immediate consideration of H. R. 10847, to authorize the acquisition of land for cemeterial purposes in the vicinity of New York City, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSwain].

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how many dead soldiers are there around that are not buried now?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. McSWAIN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There are not over 200 graves left, and they use about 100 graves a month. Within 2 months' time there will be no place to bury these veterans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise such suitable lands in the vicinity of New York City as in his judgment are required for enlargment of existing na-tional cemetery facilities, and the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appro-priated from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appro-priated, which sum shall remain available until expended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the point of order. Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman withdraw that for a moment?

Mr. TABER. I am willing to withdraw it to allow the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LAMBETH] to come in, but it is costing about $500,000 a minute to withdraw it. I will withdraw the point, Mr. Speaker, to allow the chairman of the Committee on Printing to submit his proposition.

HEARINGS ON REVENUE ACT OF 1936

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a privileged resolution and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 48

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed for its use 2,000 additional copies of the hearings held before the said committee during the current session on the bill entitled "The Revenue Act of 1936."

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the concurrent resolution.

The House concurrent resolution was agreed to.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request, and that is that business on Calendar Wednesday this week may be dispensed with.

We are very anxious to take up the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the majority leader going to have any day set aside for the consideration of the omnibus claims bills?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let me answer the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I am getting tired of hearing this same question propounded every day.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not tired of hearing it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Go ahead. Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Iowa must understand, I hope he will accept my assurance that I am trying to find an opportunity to have the omnibus private claims bills considered. I should not have consented to the memorial day being set for tomorrow had my attention been called to the fact that was the regular day for the consideration of these bills. So far as I am concerned, I shall be delighted to meet here next Saturday to consider these bills, but the gentleman knows what the program is. We regard it as a matter of considerable importance to dispose of the tax bill, these appropriation bills, and the relief bill. The gentleman is not meeting with any opposition on my part to the consideration of this calendar. I would be delighted, I may say to the gentleman in all candor, to try to get it up by submitting a request.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I notice only a few thousand dollars is involved in this bill. I think we can save time and our tempers by raising a collection around here and getting this claim paid off. I will contribute.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman spoke of the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that last year we appropriated for this Department $77,000,000. The bill passed by the House this year carried $81,221,000, but as it comes back to us from the Senate the amount has been raised to $170,-000,000, an increase of 110 percent. If we pass this bill as sent to us by the Senate, it will include one item which, while asking for only $200,000 now, will cost over $20,000,000 before it is completed.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. Robsion of Kentucky, for 2 days, on account of ill-

To Mr. BLACKNEY (at the request of Mr. MAPES), indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes on Wednesday after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request for the present. I shall be glad to confer with him about it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address which I delivered at a Jefferson Day banquet in Charleroi, Pa., on April 14:

We are gathered here tonight to honor the birthday of one of our country's most illustrious citizens—the man to whom more than all others we are obligated for national greatness, solidarity, and a status as individuals which makes us the envy of most of the earth.

Thomas Jefferson was one of the titans of history. He gave the world a new philosophy of government founded upon the theory that government to be practical should be conducted in the interest of all the people and be participated in by all the people. He was the champion of the rights of the masses as opposed to the privileges of the classes.

Time—that relentless annihilator of all that is unsound and unfit—has proven the value and soundness of his philosophy. It is a matter of record that every leader of our Nation, regardless of his political faith, has turned to it during national crises in order his political faith, has turned to it during national crises in order to save the Nation. Jackson's political philosophy came from Jefferson. Lincoln's "government of the people, by the people, and for the people" had its genesis in the principles of Jefferson. So did Theodore Roosevelt's "right of the people to rule." Woodrow Wilson borrowed heavily from Jefferson's deathless ideals during the trying days of the World War. Today even Franklin D. Roosevelt is adopting them to the needs and conditions of the times.

Jefferson's philosophy of government was utterly his own. History afforded him no similar pattern from which to copy or draw upon. In fact, all that history could show him was a record of tyranny, oppression, bloodshed, and the ruthless theory that might was right and that most men were born to be serfs. To him this was all wrong. He held that all men were free and equal and merited a place in the sun. Looking back today, it is amazing that he was able to have his theories considered, much less adopted.

less adopted

Never an eloquent speaker but a prolific writer and a tireless student, he was entirely separated from the least suspicion of demagoguery. His modesty is best illustrated by his remarks at the French court where he had gone as American Minister: "I have not come to replace Franklin but rather to succeed him." He was not one to play to the grandstands. His works and his He was not one to play to the grandstands. His works and his ideals spoke for themselves by the power of their logic and their conformity to reason. "He stood for freedom, a boundless faith in the potentialities and the ultimate supremacy of the masses—for democracy and the equality of the human race. His creed was in the Declaration of Independence. His life was its embodiment.

Never did man come to the Presidency better trained. He had served in the Virginia House of Burgesses. He was a member of the Continental Congress. He served as Governor of Virginia, Minister to France, Secretary of State, and Vice President. In the Declaration of Independence he wrote the birth certificate of the United States of America. He had a first-hand knowledge of the foreign affairs of this Nation and an intimate personal contact with its domestic affairs—industrially, economically, politically, and socially. From the very first his viewpoint was national and his determination was for popular government. His vision was proved by the Louisiana Purchase and the expeditions he encouraged to explore the West. He knew the Pacific Ocean would soon be the western boundary of the growing Republic. During the real formation of the Nation—namely, the adoption

During the real formation of the Nation—namely, the adoption of our Constutition—his hand and genius molded that document into an instrument of government, popular and not autocratic in form. At this time our two major political parties came into being. The school of thought represented by Alexander Hamilton sought to establish a government founded upon the autocracy of the classes. Hamilton's forces were well organized and brought to the convention a constitution already drafted which they intended to railroad through. It provided for a President and Senators elected for life. Members of the House were to be elected for 3 years. Governors of the various States were to be elected for 3 years. Governors of the various States were to be appointed by the Federal Government and were also to serve for life, as were the judiciary officials. The veto of the President or Governor was to be final. The Senate could declare war, and the ballot was restricted by property ownership.

Jefferson brought to the Convention only his faith in the people and his diplomatic genius. He knew that time was his ally, and, by his logic and reason, one by one, his ideas were written into the Constitution, and it was written an instrument of popular government. It is interesting to note that the only concession to the Hamiltonians was the life tenure in office for judicial officials. Since that time our Constitution has stood—the only bulwark of the people against the onslaught of the privileged classes.

Let us compare our Nation as it was when Jefferson established his theory of government and as it is today. Then we were a fringe of States along the Atlantic seaboard. Today we stretch from ocean to ocean. Then we had less than 3,000,000 population, for the most part of Anglo-Saxon derivation. Today we have more than 120,000,000, composed of the blood of all the nations of the world. In these days our principal industry was agriculture. than 120,000,000, composed of the blood of all the nations of the world. In those days our principal industry was agriculture. Today every known industry functions within our borders. Then we had very few enormously rich and very few wretchedly poor. Today we have many enormously rich and many, many more wretchedly poor—so poor, in fact, as to be bordering on actual starvation were it not for Federal ald. Then there were a few well-educated, but the masses were mostly illiterate. Today the difference in education is not so great.

During Jefferson's time the largest percent of our population was practically self-sustaining. Land was cheap and plentiful and each community produced almost everything it needed. Today we are practically interdependent upon each other for our livelihood and certainly dependent upon the aristocracy of wealth for greater opportunities than a mere living. In those days they had the Hamiltonians, who upheld class privilege. Today we have the Liberty Leaguers embattled in defense of the same principle.

We hear a great deal of mourning today that the Democratic Leaguers embattled in defense of the same principle.

We hear a great deal of mourning today that the Democratic Party has deserted the principles of Thomas Jefferson. Strange to say, it comes from those who have always been exponents of the Hamiltonian idea. They would like the people of this Nation to believe that they are the real unadulterated, thoroughbred champions of the people. Why are they so suddenly solicitous regarding Jeffersonian doctrines? Let me tell you how it comes about. Sometime after it became quite apparent that Hoover's meadows in the streets were going to be quite as complete failures as were his chickens in every pot and cars in every garage, the Republican board of strategy recalled how they had fooled the people of this Nation for ever so many years by pretending to represent the policies of Abraham Lincoln.

Of course, most of us know that they had never followed these policies of Abraham Lincoln.

Of course, most of us know that they had never followed these principles since the day of his assassination, nor had they even consistently been behind him during his tenure of office. It was a good bait, however, with which to catch the not inconsiderable Negro vote. It was a good trick as long as it worked. By the way, can you picture Lincoln, that man who had such a deep love for the common people, at a Liberty League dinner? He would have been even more out of place than was Al Smith.

The board of strategy quickly realized from the results of the even more out of place than was Al Smith.

The board of strategy quickly realized from the results of the 1932 election that the people had become educated to the fact that the Republican Party no more represented Lincoln's idea of government than they did those of Voltaire. Bewildered in defeat they decided to go further back into history and fasten onto the shade of someone with whom the people were seemingly not so well acquainted. It almost baffles understanding, but they selected the finest Democrat of all time and then, like vain men blowing at windmills, tried to sell the country on the idea that President Roosevelt and the Democratic Party has renounced the Jeffersonian principle.

Jeffersonian principle.

They also decided to raise the cry of State rights, freedom of the press, and freedom of the individual; to cease to wave the bloody shirt and wrap themselves in the Constitution. In their desperation they even conceived the despicable idea of issuing millions of sets of poster stamps consisting of ridiculous caricatures of President Roosevelt. These were to be added to letters by the faithful. How quickly they changed their minds about this when the temper of the people made itself known! By any means, fair or foul, apparently, they seemed bent on trying to destroy the faith of the Nation in the most popular President this destroy the faith of the Nation in the most popular President this Nation has ever had since the time of Jefferson.

Then there came that Liberty League dinner at which the speaker of the evening was the very man against whom 8 years ago they had raised the skull and crossbones of religious prejudice. Did it mean anything to them that the Constitution guaranteed religious freedom? Not so! Let us, as our erstwhile friend, Al Smith, says, examine the record. The record will tell us whether or not we have fallen into evil ways. Jefferson advocated a government in the interest of the masses and not the classes. Can anyone deny that Franklin D. Roosevelt is not doing everything within his power for the common people whom years of republicanism had almost submerged into the abyss of despair?

Let those who object to changes in government remember the Let those who object to changes in government remember the immortal words of Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence— "That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among "That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, and whenever any form of government becomes destructive of those ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such forms, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness." These words prove that Jefferson realized that it is necessary for government to keep pace with changing economic and social conditions. conditions.

Jefferson, in his vision and wisdom, saw this Nation expanding until it reached from ocean to ocean. He knew that from utter necessity methods of government must change to meet the demands of territorial expansion, and he also knew the same of our inevitable industrial expansion. He knew that the Constitution was for the welfare of the Nation, and that to accomplish its purpose it must be elastic. He even admitted, when he purchased the Louisiana Territory, that he stretched it until it cracked. Show me a man today who dares to say he was not justified in that purchase. justified in that purchase.

A practical farmer, Jefferson clearly saw what floods and dust storms are teaching us in bitter lessons today—that poorly and ignorantly handled soil becomes a great national disaster.

In 1813, writing about his own farm, he said:

"Our country is hilly and we have been in the habit of plowing our country is filly and we have been in the habit of plowing in straight rows, whether up or down hill or however they lead, and our soil was all rapidly running into the rivers. We now plow horizontally, following the curvature of the hills and hollows on dead level, however crooked the lines may be. Every furrow thus acts as a reservoir to receive and retain the waters, all of which go to the benefit of the growing plant instead of running off into the streams."

off into the streams."

Now, a century and a quarter later, we are writing his principle of soil conservation into national law.

It must be recognized that there are certain fundamental principles which cannot change if popular government is to survive. Time and conditions may make necessary administrative changes in keeping these fundamental principles alive, but the great ideals of human freedom for which Thomas Jefferson stood are still as vital as ever.

Government is only a means to an end. Its form is immaterial, and its value can only be weighed by its contribution to the people in the way of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. In the final analysis, the objective of government must be the happiness and contentment of the majority of the people. To this end, neither property nor contract rights can be absolute.

If, by exercising personal freedom, an individual were able to use his property to the detriment of his fellow men, then freedom would have given way to license and privilege. The rights of society must always continue to be paramount to the rights of the individual, else society will cease to exist.

Let us remember that the most severe critics are those who have either never tried or else who have tried and failed. Witness Mr. Hoover. Criticism becomes malignant in proportion to the passions of the critic or else helpful when his attacks are motivated by good intent.

by good intent.

Woodrow Wilson said, "The immortality of Thomas Jefferson does not consist in any one of his achievements, but in his attitude toward mankind." That quotation will apply as well to Jackson, Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt, Wilson, and Franklin D. Roosevelt, or indeed toward any great world leader. The happiness, contentment, and well-being of the majority of the people is the sole reason for the existence of government. Jefferson, in all of his works and writings, recognized this fact and labored toward that end. Although we know that he believed in as little government as possible, we also know that he believed in all that was necesend. Although we know that he believed in as little government as possible, we also know that he believed in all that was necessary to accomplish the welfare of the people.

Let the press of this Nation plaster the front pages with dire prophecies, but the financial pages with their records of increasing dividends contradict this propaganda. Let the children freed from labor, the bank depositors whose savings have been guaranteed, the boys in the C. C. C. camps, the home owners of the land, the laboring man, the honest investor who has been protected, the farmer with his increased income, the people from the homes and fresides of this Nation testify to the attitude of Franklin D. Roosevelt toward his fellow man. They are the vast majority of "we, the people of the United States", for whom the Constitution was written.

Theodore Roosevelt summed up the present situation and the personality of his illustrious cousin in a manner which could have been no more fitting if he had written it for the express time and individual:

"It is not the critic who counts; not the man who points out how the strong man stumbled, or where the doer of deeds could have done them better. The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena; whose face is marred by dust and sweat and blood; who strives valiantly; who errs and comes short again and again; who knows the great enthusiasms, the great devotions, and spends himself in a worthy cause; who at the best knows in the end the triumph of high achievement; and who at the worst, if he fails, at least fails while daring greatly, so that his place shall never be with those cold and timid souls who know neither victory nor

CONGRESSMAN GREEN'S RECORD

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a statement of the services in Congress of my colleague the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, our colleague from Florida, the Honorable R. A. (Lex) GREEN, has a record of achievement which is worthy of our commendation. Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following statement of Mr. Green's record and services:

The value of a Member of Congress rests largely in his understanding of the needs of his people and of the Nation; his vision to foresee the needs of the future and to meet these needs by appropriate action. His value is tested not by the number of bills introduced, but by the importance, directly and indirectly, of such bills, and their bearing upon legislation finally enacted.

During his service in Congress Mr. Green has proposed many bills of great importance. Among these measures are the following:

CANAL ACROSS FLORIDA

In his campaign for Congress 12 years ago, he promised his constituents to work for a canal across Florida, connecting the waters of the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico. On February 1, 1926, a few weeks after he was sworn in as a Member of Congress, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, he introduced H. R. 8742 which provided for preliminary examination of the proposed waterway across Florida. This bill was included in the general river and harbor bill and passed Upon completion of preliminary examinations by the War Department, he introduced on February 7, 1930, H. R. 9650 which provided for actual physical survey of the proposed canal across Florida. This bill passed, became a law, and surveys involving the expenditure of about $400,000 and several years' work by the Board of Army Engineers were made.

Upon the basis of this survey, on January 3, 1935, he introduced H. R. 2785 providing for actual construction of a sealevel ship canal across northern Florida, connecting the waters of the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico.

During the past 11 years he has traveled, at his own expense, to different parts of the United States and addressed many audiences, including the National Waterways Association, in the interest of this project. At Wilmington, N. C., October 7, 1930, speaking before the twenty-third annual convention of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, in part he said:

Today the most important inland waterway project of the United States is the proposed canal across north Florida, connecting the Atlantic Ocean with the Gulf of Mexico. The canal across Florida is the missing and final link of entire waterways chain, and it is obvious that the time is not distant when this final link will be

Through his efforts and the efforts of other friends of the project, endorsement was obtained by such important waterways organizations as the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, the Mississippi Valley Association, and the National Rivers and Harbors Congress.

He has addressed the House of Representatives a large number of times, but one of the most effective addresses ever delivered on the subject was made by him on the floor of the House on February 14, 1935. He spoke at length on the subject, using charts, maps, and diagrams, and explaining in detail the feasibility, the practicability, and the economic soundness of the project. He in part said:

The American shippers and consumers will save approximately The American shippers and consumers will save approximately $36,000,000 annually in transportation costs alone after this canal is constructed. It will carry one-third to one-half more tonnage every year than is now carried by the Panama Canal. This canal, when constructed across the State of Florida, according to conservative estimates, will carry from 42 to 60 million tons of commerce annually. It will give the United States an unparalleled advantage and absolute supremacy in all of the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico. It will make quite impossible our attack by annual from the court of the scattle of the control of the caribbean. attack by enemy from the south or by south Atlantic. It will make secure our position.

Our railroads and highways will act as feeders for tonnage traversing this canal. They will benefit.

Employment will be given to some 30,000 people over each year of construction. Seventy-five percent to eighty percent of the funds expended for construction will go direct to labor, and as an unemployment-relief project it is thoroughly justified. Thirty-eight States of the Union will be directly affected. Every one of them will have an indirect benefit. It will develop every great basic industry in our lend. industry in our land.

He has discussed the subject a large number of times over radio. On February 9, 1935, in speaking over a national hook-up, he said in part:

Vast natural resources of this great valley will be developed and realized. Millions of acres of available lands in the States of the lower Mississippi and the lower Southeast will be filled with the lower mississippi and the lower Southeast will be filled with people who are now living to a disadvantage in congested centers. The pulp and timber industries in Florida, the iron industry in Alabama and Tennessee, the oll industry in the entire Mississippi Valley, the naval-stores and cotton industries, the manufacturing industries of the East, in fact, 95 percent of the capital now invested in industries of America will redound great benefits from the construction of this waterway.

He conferred several times with President Hoover, urging the President's approval. As a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, he had discussed this subject a number of times with President Roosevelt prior to April 5, 1935. At a lengthy conference held with President Roosevelt on this occasion, he pointed out to the President the national importance of the project, and also the national support which the project had, and urged the President to begin construction. At the conference he was joined by Senator Fletcher and other members of the Florida delegation. The President that day gave assurance that the project would be begun. On the 3d day of September 1935 actual construction was begun on the project as a result of allocation of $5,000,000 by the President from special funds. Since construction began, Judge Green, as a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, has been active and aggressive in his efforts to carry on the project to completion.

On February 12, 1936, he addressed the House of Representatives at length on the subject and urged the Congress to continue appropriations for construction. On April 10, 1936, in addressing the House Committee on Appropriations, he in part said:

President Roosevelt properly began construction under general authority and direction given him under the emergency relief bill of 1935; the Chief of the Board of Army Engineers has approved and is carrying on the projects; the Director of the Budget has recommended funds to continue construction; the people of Florida have bonded themselves and are furnishing the right-of-way: more than 6,000 people are actually employed on the project; the Congress is actually and morally bound to complete the project, and should and will appropriate funds for completion. President Roosevelt and the Congress must and will keep faith with the people of Florida and of our country by completing the project.

IMPEACHMENT OF PEDERAL JUDGE RITTER

On May 31, 1933, Congressman Wilcox, of Florida, introduced a resolution to investigate the conduct of Halsted L. Ritter, a judge in the southern district of Florida. On the morning of February 14, 1936, the House Judiciary Committee, by a majority vote, adopted a report made by Congressman Miller, a member of the Judiciary Committee. This report turned Ritter loose. On the afternoon of the same day Mr. Green took the floor of the House and impeached Ritter for high crimes and misdemeanors. He filed nine specific articles of impeachment and at length discussed Ritter's unfitness for the bench. On March 2, 1936, on the floor of the House, speaking on the subject, he said in part:

Ritter's usefulness on the bench has expired; he is corrupt. Will you not give us this relief? I plead with you, as the only court to which we can plead, to give my people this relief.

The Federal judiciary should be above suspicion. If there ever

The Federal judiciary should be above suspicion. If there ever was a time in the history of our country when we should have an honest judiciary where people's rights are protected, it is now. The American people should never be permitted to lose faith in the judiciary. It has always been their haven of protection and refuge from injustice, inequality, and oppression. If we are going to permit a Federal judge to unlawfully and corruptly not only deny the people of their rights in courts but to accept bribes, gratuities, and favors from those who are trying to defeat justice, then undoubtedly the last respect which our people have had for the judiciary will vanish.

Ritter was flagrant, unconscionable, and deaf to justice and equity; and he and his fellow conspirators preyed upon and bled litigants who sought the protection of his court. The public has always regarded the courts of our land as a place of honor, dignity, and justice. To permit Ritter to continue his pernicious practices on the Federal bench will diminish the faith of our people in our courts; and, in fact, cause them to believe that our entire system of government is filled with collusion, corruption, entire system of government is filled with collusion, corruption, and selfishness. Do not destroy their last vestige of hope in justice by vindicating one shown by the evidence so unworthy as is Ritter. I urge you to purge the judiciary of corruption by voting to impeach this man.

The House that day voted by a substantial majority to impeach Ritter. After several days of trial by the United States Senate, Ritter was on April 17, 1936, by a two-thirds vote, convicted and removed from office.

SOLDIERS' HOME

April 15, 1929, Mr. GREEN introduced a bill for the establishment of a national home for disabled soldiers in the State of Florida. This bill was passed and actually led to the establishment, not only of the home in St. Petersburg. Fla., but of similar institutions in Alabama, Mississippi, and South Carolina. It was one of the most important pieces of soldiers' relief legislation ever passed.

On December 1, 1930, he introduced a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to return to Florida the silver service set donated to the U. S. S. Florida by the Florida people. The legislation was passed.

TROPHY CANNON FOR UNITED DAUGHTERS OF THE CONFEDERACY

On December 12, 1930, he introduced a bill providing for construction of post office buildings as an unemployment relief measure. His bill gave impetus to the gigantic Federal building program and led directly to the building of the Federal building at Lake City, Fla., and also of many other Federal buildings in Florida.

At his suggestion, a magnificent Federal building was in 1935 erected at Perry, Fla., and the Treasury officials have promised him to begin within the next few weeks construction of a Federal building at Madison, Fla. He has special bills pending for Federal buildings to be constructed at Jasper, High Springs, Williston, Starke, and Green Cove Springs. He hopes for favorable action on these bills at the next session of Congress.

TURPENTINE EXPERIMENT STATION

On December 21, 1929, he introduced a bill directing the establishment of a naval-stores experiment and demonstration station on the Osceola National Forest in Florida. The legislation was approved and the station established at Olustee, Fla., and is giving untold benefits to the naval-stores and pine-tree industries. It benefits not only Florida but the entire South.

During the past several days he has been in conference with the naval-stores producers of Florida and the officials of the Department of Agriculture in an effort to assist in working out a program whereby this great industry can share in benefits under the recent Farm Act.

CONFEDERATE GRAVE MARKERS

In 1928 and 1929 he introduced legislation providing for the Government to furnish tombstones or grave markers for the graves of Confederate veterans. It led to the appropriation of funds for this purpose, and today thousands of these stones have been distributed to Confederate graves throughout the country.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

On December 10, 1931, he introduced a bill providing for payment of pension benefits to widows and orphans of World War veterans, regardless of the cause of the veteran's death. The substance of this legislation passed the House but died in the Senate. He has now pending H. R. 11715, which is a similar bill, and is before the committee. He also has introduced H. R. 9164, which is now before the committee. It would reestablish disability allowance for disabled World War veterans. It would allow for non-service-connected disability of 25 percent, $12 per month; 50 percent, $18 per month; 75 percent, $24 per month; and total disability, $40 per month. He is doing all possible to pass before adjournment these meritorious bills. On March 10, 1936, he addressed the House, urging prompt action. He signed a petition to bring up the soldiers' bonus bill and voted for its passage, and has been a consistent supporter of all veteranrelief legislation. He has assisted hundreds of veterans with their claims before the Veterans' Administration and the Pension Director. He has even taken them personally before the rating boards and urged for them just compensation benefits.

VETERANS' HOSPITAL, LAKE CITY

Mr. Green has earnestly worked for the enlargement and improvement of the hospital at Lake City, and many facilities have been added upon his request. On April 25, 1935, he introduced a bill calling for an appropriation of $600,000 for added facilities in this institution. As a result of same, on April 12, 1936, the Veterans' Administration assured him and American Legion representatives of Florida that $200,000 would be spent on improvements for this institution within the next few months. Mr. Green is also leading an effort to cause Negro patients of this hospital to be placed in a hospital of their own, and thus have separate institutions for the two races. In March, April, and May 1935, he entered a series of protests against mixing Negroes and whites in this institution, and has obtained assurance that this matter will be worked out satisfactorily in the hospital expansion program.

LEGION DISTINGUISHED-SERVICE MEDAL

The American Legion Post of his home county awarded him the Legion Distinguished Service Medal for 1933.

PEDERAL ATD FOR ROADS

He has supported all legislation for Federal aid to roads, and on May 3, 1933, introduced a bill to appropriate $200,000,-000 for highways. A greater amount was appropriated. On April 16, 1936, he addressed the House, favoring passage of the Cartwright road-appropriation bill. The bill passed.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR FRUIT-FLY DAMAGE

In 1930 Mr. Green introduced a bill for survey of fruit-fly loss in Florida and has consistently worked for this reimbursement. He now has a reimbursement bill before the Agriculture Committee.

FEDERAL FARM LOANS

On March 10, 1933, he introduced a bill providing for extension of time on Federal land-bank mortgages, and for other purposes. This bill gave impetus to the administration's legislation extending time on loans and permitting additional loans by the Federal land banks throughout the country. He has also been very active for legislation providing for crop loans. He has actively supported every farmrelief measure since he has been a Member of Congress. He is actively supporting the Frazier-Lemke farm bill and has signed petitions to force its consideration by the House.

SCREW-WORM CONTROL

On January 3, 1935, he introduced H. R. 3020, providing $2,000,000 for screw-worm control and for continuance of the tick-eradication program. Funds were provided for both purposes in the 1935 appropriation bill. About 2 months ago he appeared before the Director of the Budget and urged continuance of screw-worm control appropriation and voted for this appropriation which passed the House recently.

REFUND OF TOBACCO TAX

Mr. Green and a prominent southern Senator are now trying to work out legislation which will direct the refund of tobacco tax collected from noncontract tobacco growers. He hopes for refund of these moneys at the present session of Congress.

He has introduced bills for monument markers for Indian forts in his district. He has obtained departmental approval and expects favorable action.

NO JOBS FOR ILLEGAL FOREIGNERS—ALIEN DEPORTATION

Mr. Green has introduced and has now pending before the House Immigration Committee H. R. 7079, which would not only deport habitual alien criminals, enemies of our Government, dope peddlers, alien smugglers, racketeers, and gangsters, but would restrict immigration almost entirely. Also, H. R. 11740 which would require the registration, photographing, and fingerprinting of all aliens and deportation for failure of aliens to have same. Also, H. R. 12083 which would prohibit giving employment or relief to illegally entered aliens. On many occasions he has addressed the Congress urging passage of these bills. On April 1, 1936, he urged his colleagues to pass these bills before adjournment.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

Early during the Roosevelt administration he introduced a bill giving Federal pension to the aged without State contribution. He supported and voted for the administration of the old-age pension and security bill but worked for more liberal provisions, including Federal pension without State contribution. He now favors more adequate old-age and disability pensions, including the passage of the Townsend plan.

RAILROAD-RETIREMENT PENSION

He supported and voted for both of the Crosser railroad employees' retirement bills and has a consistent record favorable to labor legislation. He recently successfully protested consolidation of terminal facilities at Jacksonville on the ground that it would throw railroad employees out of positions. Recently in a public address, Mr. Green said: "I believe in the dignity of labor and the majesty of toil. There is no aristocracy except that of honor, and no rabble save that of crime. I have wielded both the sledge hammer and the broadax and am not too good to do it again if necessary. I honor the man who earns his bread by the sweat of his brow."

PAY-BANK DEPOSITORS

During the last Congress he joined in an effort to obtain payment of deposits in closed National and State banks. The Banking and Currency Committee gave favorable action upon a bill for this purpose, but it failed of passage. He is still working for this legislation.

RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. Green is an active member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and has obtained Federal funds for the improvement of the harbors at Cedar Key and Fernandina, Jacksonville, and the Suwannee River. He has obtained committee approval for surveys of a large number of projects in his district and has been instrumental in the authorization of millions of dollars' worth of improvements to rivers and harbors throughout the entire State of Florida. He very recently obtained assurance from the Board of Army Engineers that jetty improvement on the harbor at Fernandina and dredging of the terminal channel at Jacksonville would be begun in the very near future.

STEINHATCHEE RIVER

In the 1934 river and harbor bill he included an item for the improvement of the lower Steinhatchee River. Surveys were made and, after two appearances before the Rivers and Harbors Engineering Board, the Board agreed to expend $68,300 to dredge and improve this river. This improvement will give accommodation to the sponge industry and general commerce.

SHORE EROSION

On April 13, 1936, he introduced H. R. 12258, which is a bill to provide for Federal cooperation to prevent erosion and destruction of beaches and water fronts throughout the country. This bill is referred to mittee, of which he is a member. This bill is referred to the Rivers and Harbors Com-

P. W. A. AND W. P. A.

He has been very instrumental in obtaining approval of projects and allocation of funds for a large number of improvements in his district. The Florida tuberculosis sanatorium, added facilities in the State institutions of higher learning, courthouses, city halls, armories, and a large number of other applications have received his successful support before the W. P. A. and P. W. A. officials.

AGAINST CARPETBAGGERS

On August 22, 1935, Mr. Green introduced House Joint Resolution 398, which provides that employees of the Federal Government shall be bena-fide residents of the State in which they are serving for a period of 2 years prior to appointment to such Government position. This was aimed to stop the practice of carpetbagging which was growing up in the Government. The introduction of this bill had a most wholesome effect for the employment of bona-fide citizens for Government positions.

BURAL ELECTRIFICATION—SUWANNEE VALLEY

On January 20, 1936, the House of Representatives passed H. R. 8300, introduced by Mr. GREEN. It provides for a survey, looking toward flood control in the Suwannee River Valley. Upon his suggestion, Hon. Morris L. Cooke, Administrator, Rural Electrification Administration, is now considering a survey looking toward the establishment of a monster rural electrification project in the Suwannee River Valley. Mr. Green has in mind the establishment there of a project similar to the Tennessee Valley and Muscle Shoals project for the production of fertilizer and electrical current.

In reviewing the record of my colleague [Mr. Green], I am reminded of an address made on March 16, 1916, by former Speaker Champ Clark at the Washington Press Club reception, and printed in the Congressional Record on March 17, 1916, as follows:

It is a high honor to be a Representative in Congress, if for only one term, and with the number of terms the honor increases in geometrical rather than in arithmetical proportion. A Mem-ber's usefulness to his country should increase in the same pro-portion. A man has to learn to be a Representative just as he must learn to be a blacksmith, a carpenter, a farmer, an engineer, a lawyer, or a doctor.

"Poeta nascitur non fit"—a poet is born, not made—says Horace; but Congressmen—that is, useful and influential Congressmen—but Congressmen—that is, useful and influential Congressmen—are made largely by experience and practice.

The old Charlotte district in Virginia knew this and kept John Randolph, of Roanoke, in the House till he became a great national figure. Then the Old Dominion sent him to the Senate and General Jackson sent him to St. Petersburg. These are sporadic cases of similar action in other districts.

It is an unwise performance for any district to change Representatives at short intervals. A new Congressman must begin at the foot of the class and spell up. Of course, the more brains, tact, energy, courage, and industry he has the quicker he will get up. If he possesses these qualities, and if his constituents will keep him in the House, he is as certain to rise as the sparks are to free him in the House, he is as certain to rise as the sparks are to fig upward. No human power can keep him down. It is only fair and rational to assume that every Representative's constituents desire to see him among the "topnotchers."

Let us take the present House and see how long the men who hold the high places have served. I cannot name all, but will cite a few as samples.

Mr. Speaker Cannon is serving his fortieth year. He holds the record, or, in puglistic parlance, "he holds the belt", for length of service in the House in our entire history. In several Congresses he was chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations and then was Speaker 8 years, only one man, Henry Clay, having and then was Speaker 8 years, only one man, Henry Clay, having been Speaker longer.

I am serving my twenty-second year; Minority Leader Mann is serving his twentieth year; Mr. Kitchin, chairman of Ways and Means, his sixteenth; Mr. Fitzgerald, chairman of Appropriations, his eighteenth; Mr. Moon, chairman of the Post Office and Post Roads, his twentieth; Mr. Jones, chairman of Insular Affairs and "father of the House", his twenty-sixth; Mr. Flood, chairman of Foreign Affairs, his sixteenth; Mr. Hay, chairman of Military Affairs, his twentieth; Mr. Glass, chairman of Banking and Currency, his sixteenth; Mr. Adamson, chairman of Interstate and Foreign Commerce, his twentieth; Mr. Stephens, chairman of Indian Affairs, his twentieth: Mr. Slavden, chairman of the Library dian Affairs, his twentieth; Mr. Slayden, chairman of the Library, his twentieth; Mr. Henry, chairman of Rules, his twentieth; Mr. Lever, chairman of Agriculture, his sixteenth; Mr. Padgett, chairman of the Navy, his sixteenth; Mr. Lloyd, chairman of Accounts, his twentieth; and Mr. Sparkman, chairman of Rivers and Harbors, his twenty-second. There are other big chairmanships, but these will suffice to show that as a rule the big places go to old and experienced Members, for most of the men who rank close to the chairmen are old-timers. The same thing holds good with reference to members of the minority. As an illustration, Messrs. Gillett and Cooper, who are serving their twenty-fourth year, are the ranking Republicans on Appropriations and Foreign Affairs, almost certain to be chairman thereof should the Republicans ever again have a majority in the House, as in that event, in all probability, Mr. Mann will be Speaker, unless he is nominated for President next June.

Go through the whole list and you will find, with few excep-

Go through the whole list and you will find, with rew exceptions, that the men of long service have the high places.

New England and the cities of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh have understood the value of long service all along, and, having elected a fairly good man to Congress, they kept him in the harness. The Member of longest consecutive service is called the "father of the House." Five Philadelphians in immediate succession bore that honorable title—Randall, Kelly, O'Neill, Harmer, and Bingham. Then it went to Mr. Dalzell, of Pittsburgh. When General Bingham announced the death of General Harmer, his immediate predecessor as "father of the House". he stated that the five Philadelphians in the stated that the stated that the five Philadelphians in the stated that the stated that the five Philadelphians in the stated that the stated predecessor as "father of the House", he stated that the five Philadelphia "fathers of the House" had served a total of 147 years, and he served 8 or 10 years after making that interesting statement.

In the second and third Congresses in which I served, Maine, with only four Members, had the Speakership and the chairman-ship of the great Committees on Ways and Means, Navy, and Public Buildings and Grounds—a most remarkable circumstance—giving the Pine Tree State an influence in the House and the country out of all proportion to her population and wealth. These four men—Reed, Dingley, Boutelle, and Millikin—each served in the House 20 years or more. Other States might profit by her example.

No man should be elected to the House simply to gratify his ambition. All Members should be elected for the good of the country.

The best rule, it seems to me, is for a district to select a man

The best rule, it seems to me, is for a district to select a man with at least fair capacity, industrious, honest, energetic, sober, and courageous, and keep him here so long as he discharges his duties faithfully and well. Such a man will gradually rise to high position and influence in the House. His wide acquaintance with Members helps him amazingly in doing things.

I can speak freely on this subject without violating the proprieties, for my constituents have kept me here 22 years, and for 20 years have given me nominations without opposition, for all of which favors I thank them from the bottom of my heart. Their generous action and unwavering friendship have enabled me to devote all my time to the public service. I have not been compelled to spend any portion of my time in "mending my fences." My constituents have attended to that. God bless them.

The speech of Speaker Champ Clark is deserving of the thoughtful study of every voter of the country.

It is a nationally known fact that those districts which have retained their Representatives in Congress for the longest continuous terms have received the best service and the greatest recognition. The present Speaker of the House, Mr. J. W. Byrns, has been in Congress for 28 years. The majority floor leader has been in Congress for 20 years. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and the chairman of the Judiciary Committee all have been Members of Congress for more than 22 years—the longer the successive tenure of office the greater the service and usefulness of the Representatives. Why should a constituency exchange experience and efficiency for inexperience? The Congress, since the inauguration of President Roosevelt, has responded nobly to the call of duty and should receive the endorsement and approval of a nation now upon the high road to recovery.

EXTRACT FROM MR. GREEN'S ANNOUNCEMENT FOR CONGRESS

My record is an open book; upon it I stand. There is nothing hidden, and your examination of it is invited. During the past 11 years as your Congressman I have done all within my power to bring to you every possible protection and assistance from our Federal Government. Possibly, mistakes have been made, because we all make mistakes, and probably none are without fault. I shall be satisfied, however, if upon examination of my record you will give careful consideration to each vote cast and official acts which I have performed; place the good on one side of the scales and the errors on the other side of the scales and vote for the side that weighs heavier. I have no fear of the outcome of such ballot, because I feel certain that you will find in my record more merit because I feel certain that you will find in my record more merit and perfection than demerit and imperfection.

I bring this high office back to you without stain or tarnish. Even my most severe critics have always admitted that I have been Even my most severe critics have always admitted that I have been honest and industrious and that I have always been faithful to the interest of the plain people and loyal to my esteemed friends. I trust that it may be your desire to continue me as your Congressman for another term.

Many of you will recall how I was criticized during my first campaign 12 years ago. The special interests and two or three hostile newspapers have continued to oppose and persecute me ever cincer. Their criticism has been very source during the next 3 or 4.

since. Their criticism has been very acute during the past 3 or 4 years, but such is to be expected during the unusual and tragic times through which we are now passing. Those in public office must suffer criticism and persecution. This is one of the penalties of public office, especially during times so trying. I hold no ill will against my accusers, because they have been misled, and are now being daily misled by the whisperings of the enemy.

WHISPERING CAMPAIGN

WHISPERING CAMPAIGN

The special interests are conducting a whispering campaign against me although I am 800 miles from the district, here in Washington at my post of duty trying to represent you. I can hear these whisperings conveyed to me by my friends throughout the district. Do not be misled by the whisperings, because you have known me these long years. My belief in the fundamental principles of democracy and my sincerity of purpose to serve the plain people of our district shall never change. My sympathy and effort for the laboring man and the underprivileged will be forever paramount. My ardent belief in the true principles of Americanism and white supremacy grows stronger with age, and with a keener sense of the importance of same.

In defending the weak and aiding the helpless I am happy. In honestly serving to the best of my ability my fellow man I am content. I am the same man you voted for 12 years ago. My faith in you, my friends, is founded upon the strong rock of hope and confidence. We shall withstand the whisperings of the enemy, and I have no fear.

RIVERS AND HARBORS COMMITTEE

Among other things, my committee assignments have been criticized. I am chairman of the Territories Committee, which is the only chairmanship held by a House Member from our State. As chairman of this committee I have been able to prevent passage of legislation which would have proved detrimental to Florida. I of legislation which would have proved detrimental to Florida. I am very near the top of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. This, to Florida, is the most important of all committee assignments. Through the defeat of Congressman Sparkman, almost 30 years ago, Florida lost an assignment on the Rivers and Harbors Committee and was unable to obtain another assignment on the committee until recently. This committee is the key to further necessary legislation for the Florida canal. This project has got to be authorized by direct legislation. This legislation must go through the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I am on this committee, have a canal bill pending before the committee, and shall get favorable action on it during the next Congress.

action on it during the next Congress.

This committee also handles legislation for improvement of harbors and rivers on Florida's 1,300 miles of coast line. This committee last session approved twelve or fifteen million dollars' authorization for Florida waterway improvements. It approved my survey bills for the Florida canal, and if I remain on it I am confident that our Florida canal legislation will be approved at the next session of

SOLDIERS' BONUS

I have been criticized adversely for voting for the payment of the bonus. I have voted for it for the past 5 years and believe that its payment this summer will do more to stimulate and help business than any other measure passed. I also believe it to be a just debt and have no apolegy to make for voting to pass it.

Many of these ex-service men left good businesses and good jobs to go to the World War, and the payment of the bonus represents only a small emount compared to wages that were noted by products.

only a small amount compared to wages that were paid by industry during that period. We have also during the past 3 or 4 years spent billions of Government money for other purposes, and I think it only right and proper to pay the veterans for the adjusted-service

I have been severely criticized on the account of postmaster I have been severely criticized on the account of postmaster appointments. All Democratic Congressmen have likewise. This is a very unpleasant duty that we have to perform. By party custom it is a responsibility falling on a Member of Congress, and I have not dodged or ducked this responsibility, as unpleasant as it has been. It is impossible to give the postmastership to everyone who desires it or to everyone who merits it. Only one can be appointed, and I have tried in each case to recommend a Democrat who will give heavet and conscioutious express to the patterns of the trief. give honest and conscientious service to the patrons and to the Government.

Postmasterships should be taken out of patronage and placed absolutely under the civil service, and I am earnestly supporting the Ramspeck bill for this purpose. Members of Congress have plenty to do without the responsibility of appointment of postmasters, and, furthermore, it would be better for the service. We are trying to pass this bill now.

The special interests have carried on a whispering campaign about relatives on the pay roll. The facts are none of my family are on my pay roll. My secretaries are Miss Essie Coleman, Miss Carolyn Hutto, Miss Freda Lopatin, and Miss Arline Mann. In addition to these, Mrs. Green works daily in the office without remuneration.

these, Mrs. Green works daily in the office without remuneration. Thus also giving her services free of charge to the people of our district. I have had since I have been a Member of Congress from three to six clerks all of the time and have paid them from my own pocket when the allowance for this purpose has been exhausted. I have also paid rent for an office in the district at my own expense. Since President Roosevelt's inauguration I have endorsed about 17,000 Democrats for appointment to Federal positions. Many of these have been given places. Listed in this 17,000 are 3 or 4 relatives who secured minor positions. Should I have withheld my endorsement of them because they were related to me? What would you have done under the circumstances? In your own busiwould you have done under the circumstances? In your own business, whether it be a farm, office, or store, would you refuse employment to someone because he was related to you? Many of President Roosevelt's relatives are assisting him in key positions in his administration. Vice President Garner's wife has been his secretary for many years. I do not deem it dishonorable to try to assist one's

When you elected me to Congress I promised to give up my law practice and serve no interest except the best interest of the people of the Second Congressional District. This promise has been faithfully kept, and I am giving to the people of our district the very best service of which I am capable. Many congressional offices are closed during the vacation of Congress, but your Washington office has been kept open every day except Sundays since I have been your Representative, and in addition to this I have kept for your service an office in Starke during the vacations of Congress. In these offices I have had the assistance of competent secretaries who have cooperated for your interest.

PAYS OWN EXPENSES

Our critics have had considerable to say in newspapers and from the stump about Congressmen traveling on junketing trips. I have never traveled a mile on any junketing trip at the expense of the

NOT FED BY LOBBYISTS

Neither have I been dined by the special interests and the lobby-ists. I have paid for meals that I have eaten in Washington since I have been a Member of Congress.

ANSWERS REQUESTS PROMPTLY

I have spared no efforts or pains in my desire to be of service to my people. No constituent of mine in all these 11 years can say that he ever asked a service within my power which I did not cheerfully perform, even though such services often kept me away from meals and needed hours of sleep. No letter, regardless of how poorly written or how humble the writer, has gone unanswered. It has given me pleasure to comply promptly with the requests and wishes of my people. If I were President and possessed a vast fortune, I still would want the same friends which I now enjoy. In Holy Writ we read, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." In this I firmly believe.

HAS ANSWERED ROLL CALLS

It is my earnest desire to meet and shake hands with each of you and personally ask you to vote for me before the primary election, but such probably will be impossible, because I feel that my first duty is to work for and guard the interest of my people here in the Capitol while the Congress is in session. The Florida canal appropriation matter and two or three other matters of vital interest are priation matter and two or three other matters of vital interest are pending. I hope that these can be disposed of in time to permit me to return home before the primary, but I expect to stay here at my post of duty just as long as occasion demands same even though my political interest would require that I be in the district.

Twelve years ago, when you elected me, I promised you that I would answer your roll calls unless providentially hindered. It gives me much pleasure to tell you that this promise has been faithfully kept. Until 3 or 4 years ago I never missed a single roll call or meeting of the House of Representatives. This perfect record was kept for over 8 years. On one occasion I was at the White House in conference with President Hoover and left this conference to return to the Capitol to answer a roll call. On another occasion I was confined to a Washington hospital with influenza ference to return to the Capitol to answer a roll call. On another occasion I was confined to a Washington hospital with influenza and left my sickbed and, slipping out, went to the Capitol and answered your roll call. This record has not been made, I believe, by any other House Member or Senator, and was broken only recently through my own very severe illness and that of a member of my family. During these trying and critical times a Congressman should be on the job here in Washington, and believing that this is my first duty, and that I can do more here working for you than I can annoying you with political speeches, I shall remain here while important matters are pending before the Congress, and leave my fate for the present in the hands of my loyal friends in the district. They have never failed me.

ASSISTANT DEMOCRATIC WHIP

During the 11 years which I have served you, all except the last 3 have been under the Republican rule. Even under Republican domination I did all that I could for legislative proposals which were for the interest of my people, and, as my record will reveal, were for the interest of my people, and, as my record will reveal, many comprehensive and constructive bills introduced by me were written on the statute books. With the coming in of the Democrats I am now in a position to render greater service to my district, State, and country. The Speaker of the House and Whip of the House saw fit to appoint me as assistant majority whip before President Roosevelt's inauguration, which, so far as I know, is the first party honor accorded a Florida House Member during the past half century. I was reappointed by Speaker Byrns, and I am most gratefs: for this party honor at the hands of the Roosevelt administration.

gratefs. for this party honor at the hands of the Roosevelt administration.

During my 11 years in the House I have made friendships with the Speaker, the leader, high Government officials, and Senators, which are all of great assistance to me in presenting all just claims for my constituency. With this experience and these friendships I can, during the next 2 years, render you better service than I have ever been able to in the past.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS

In my campaign 10 years ago I promised to work toward definite goals. Among these were the following: First, to convert Muscle Shoals into a plant for the production of fertilizer. I voted for the Muscle Shoals bills twice during the Republican administration and it was vetoed by President Hoover and President Coolidge, but under President Roosevelt I voted for the Muscle Shoals bill and he signed it. Second, cheaper freight rates. Freight rates have been reduced and should and will be further reduced in the future. Third, increased loans to farmers. Since the Democrats came into power we passed the Federal farm-relief bills which have loaned to Third, increased loans to farmers. Since the Democrats came into power we passed the Federal farm-relief bills which have loaned to the farmers of our Nation more than a billion dollars. Also, the A. A. A. and other farm measures which have doubled and trebled prices of farm commodities. Fourth, Federal aid to schools. The Government is now expending a greater amount in this direction. Fifth, increased Federal aid for roads. Since I have been a Member of Congress we have appropriated probably five times as much for Federal roads as during any other similar period. Sixth, extended hospital treatment for veterans. Hospital facilities for veterans have been about trebled since I have been a Member of Congress. Seventh, restriction of immigration. We have restricted immigration about 90 percent since I have been a Member of Congress. Eighth, the construction of a canal across Florida. I have introduced and the Congress passed bills on the canal since I have been in Congress and work is now going on on the canal.

If continued in Congress, I will work for: First, the actual completion of the Florida canal. As a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and as author of the legislation, I promise, if I am returned to Congress, the canal will be completed. Second, I will support and vote for the passage of the Townsend old-agepension plan. I am for an adequate pension for the aged and disabled, and voted for the present Federal old-age-pension law. It was the best obtainable at that time. Third, I will continue my efforts for the reimbursement of Florida growers for damage sustained during the fruit fly eradication campaign. Fourth, I have pending a bill for the payment of depositors in closed National and Fourth, I have pending a bill for the payment of depositors in closed National and State banks. If we can obtain passage of this legislation, our financial troubles will be practically over. Fifth, I shall continue my efforts for disability pensions for all World War veterans, regardless of the cause of disability, and for pensions for widows and orphans of veterans, regardless of the cause of the veteran's death. I also will support all other legislation endorsed by organizations of World War veterans and/or Spanish-American War veterans. I shall continue my efforts for segregation of white and Negro soldiers in separate veterans' hospitals. Sixth, I shall continue my efforts for adequate Federal assistance for public roads and public education. Seventh, I shall support all farm-relief measures which are for the best interests of the farmers of our district. This includes the Frazier-Lemke bill, the passage of which I have signed a petition for. I am earnestly working for the refund to our growers of tobacco tax paid. Eighth, my efforts will continue for rural electrification project and flood control in the Suwannee River Valley. Ninth, you can depend upon my further earnest efforts for immitrification project and flood control in the Suwannee River Valley. Ninth, you can depend upon my further earnest efforts for immigration restriction, the deportation of undestrable aliens, and taking illegal aliens off relief rolls; and also my efforts will continue for a Government-owned building for every second- and third-class post office in the district. Tenth, I shall carry out Democratic principles in tariff matters and shall support all legislation which is for the benefit of the turpentine, lumber, forestry, and other industries of our district.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S ADMINISTRATION

A clear understanding of the President's emergency-relief pro-A clear understanding of the President's emergency-relief program is needed. In order to thoroughly understand and fully appreciate the scope and purpose of this gigantic relief program, it is well to refresh our memories of the chaotic condition which faced the American people about 12 months before his election. At this time business and industry was at its lowest ebb since the beginning of the depression. Agriculture was in the depths of despair; 10 or 12 million idle men and women were walking the highways and streets in increasing numbers, looking for jobs. By the 1st of March 1933 a banking holiday had been declared in many States of the Union. The people had almost lost confidence in the ability of their Government to bring about a recovery. Economic chaos threatened the country to a more alarming extent than in the darkest days of the preceding years. Wheat had sold as low as 18 and 25 cents per bushel; cotton 5 to 6 cents per pound; and corn as low as 10 or 12 cents per bushel; in fact some of the corn growers of the Middle West were burning their corn for fuel, while the coal miners were without food and in need of this very corn for food for themselves and families. There was an abundance of wheat, corn, cotton, wool, and meats, yet millions of people hungry for the want of these foodstuffs and cold from lack of cotton and woolen garments. Granaries and warehouses were filled to capacity, yet railroad cars stood idle and rusting out in the railroad yards, and idle freight boats rode at anchor throughout the harbors of our country. Industry was paralyzed, credit was destroyed. In fact, local credit was almost nonexistent. The old custom of 150 years ago of trade and barter and exchange was in common use. One individual would trade and barter products or commodities for gram is needed. In order to thoroughly understand and fully apago of trade and barter and exchange was in common use. One individual would trade and barter products or commodities for some other needed product or commodity, in order to obtain cloth, food, fuel, and necessities of the body. Agriculture was on the very brink of bankruptcy. Money had either gone into hiding or was locked up in bank vaults.

locked up in bank vaults.

The then remaining banks in the country were closing in alarming numbers, carrying with them the life savings of honest American citizens. Church and charity funds and the trust funds of orphans were not even spared. There was a deficit even in the Budget of our Federal Government which had occurred for the past 3 years and which aggregated over $5,000,000,000. But what was even worse than all of this, there were forces of doubt, suspicion, and destruction at work in our midst which threatened our social and civic institutions and the very foundation of our Government itself. In part, these were the chaotic conditions which faced the American people in the most trying times in the peacetime history of our country; but our American Government was founded through valor and courage, and in its darkest hours it has always produced leadership. The American people have in this darkest hour of the country's history found courageous and able leadership which has country's history found courageous and able leadership which has come forth and proceeded unafraid. A New Deal was not only required but a leader of kind heart, firm hand, and quick decision was needed to put the New Deal into effect and to inspire that confidence in the American people which was all-essential to recovery. Such leadership appeared in the person of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Probably the most fateful hour and fateful minute in the history of the American Republic was on the 4th day of March 1933, when, the interpretable decrease he said. in his inaugural address, he said:

"So, first of all, let me assert my firm belief that the only thing we have to fear is fear itself, nameless, unreasoning, unjustified terror which paralyzes needed effort to convert retreat into advance. In every dark hour of our national life a leadership of frankness and vigor has met with that understanding and support of the people themselves which is essential to victory. I am convinced that you will again give that support to leadership in these critical days."

To this clarion call the American people in all walks of life have responded most nobly and have almost shaken off the shackles of depression. President Roosevelt is a man of action. Through his able leadership, the Congress has passed during the past 3 years a series of measures which have reshaped the economic and industrial able leadership, the Congress has passed during the past 3 years a series of measures which have reshaped the economic and industrial life of the Nation. I will briefly mention a few of these measures.

First among all is that of farm relief. Through the bills passed on this subject, 30,000,000 citizens of our country who dwell on the farms have had returned to them an increased purchasing power of $2,773,000,000 during the past 3 years. This was brought about through the passage of the A. A. A. bills, the Mortgage Refinance Acts, and a number of others. Muscle Shoals, which had been idle for 12 years, has been converted into a fertilizer and power-producing plant. It is reducing the price of fertilizer and electrical power to consumers throughout the country.

The Glass-Steagall Banking Act, the deposit insurance or guaranty law, and other bills passed have stabilized the currency; reopened banks throughout the country; loosened up credit in practically all places; made sound the general finance institutions in our country; and given adequate protection to money deposited in banks now and in the future. The safety of our finance institutions and the loosening up of credit have started the wheels of industry and progress to turning in all parts of the country.

The Federal Securities Act provides for Federal supervision through the Federal Trade Commission of interstate traffic in investment securities and is protecting the American public against flotation of securities of doubtful value. It has almost stopped excited the securities in securities.

flotation of securities of doubtful value. It has almost stopped windling and cheating in securities.

Under the Home Owners' Loan and Housing Acts, hundreds of thousands of homes have been protected from foreclosure and people of limited means have been enabled to build their own homes, thus relieving unemployment and stimulating the building industries.

employment of the needy and heretofore unemployed but have given lasting improvements to communities throughout the United States.

Under a special act, the President was given power to fix and adjust tariff rates in the interest of American producers and consumers. Also, he was given power to impose embargoes to meet damaging foreign competition, made possible through depreciating currency. He is using this power in what he believes to be for the best interests of the American people. In the revenue acts which have been passed during this administration consideration has been given to those least able to pay and the burden and financial responsibility of the Government has been largely shifted to those responsibility of the Government has been largely shifted to those most able to pay. This is particularly the purpose of the tax bill which will be presented to the Congress this week.

In the benefits brought to the American people through these various measures Florida has indeed received a great portion. Millions of dollars of Federal money have been expended in Florida by the administration. Upon payment of the bonus this summer twenty or more millions additional will be sent to Florida and will be turned into the changes of business trade and industry.

be turned into the channels of business, trade, and industry.

It is true that mistakes have been made during the Roosevelt administration, but I have far greater respect for the one who tries and does something, even though mistakes are made, than I do for the one who sits idly by and criticizes and obstructs.

Splendid results toward recovery have occurred in all parts of the country. Practically every industry in the country is now manufacturing twice the amount of goods as was manufactured in 1932. More automobiles are being made now in 2 or 3 months than were made during an entire year before Roosevelt went in. Bank deposits have increased from $41,643,000,000 on December 31, 1932, to $44,771,000,000 in December 1934. A large increase has occurred since this date. There are now almost $4,000,000,000 more deposited since this date. There are now almost $4,000,000,000 more deposited in banks than when Roosevelt was inaugurated. The annual farm income has increased about $3,000,000,000. The cotton growers of the South have themselves received about $1,000,000,000 of this farm increase. The farmers of the South during the 3 years under President Roosevelt have received more benefits than they did all the other time since the World War. Factory pay rolls have increased 50 percent or more. Four or five million who were out of work have een employed. Banking institutions are safe now and are beginning to loan money again.

TIMES BETTER

Practically every farm and business man in your country is better off now than he was 3 years ago. I have done all that I could to assist in this great program and, on every occasion, protected, the very best that I could, the interest of our people. Times are growing more normal now and the Federal Government should, as rapidly as possible, revert to normal governmental functions, duties, and operations. Such experiments as have been inaugurated which have not proved for the best interests of our people should be promptly abandoned, and I frankly believe that they will be at the next session of Congress. We should jealously guard the financial integrity of our Nation and retrench expenditures in such places as this can be done. All Government agencies which have served their purpose should be disbanded and give room for local industries, local capital, and local agencies to perform. If President Roosevelt is reelected, and I am confident that he will be, it is my belief that the next Congress will initiate rapid returns to sane, conservative, democratic principles of government. This I favor. Through all of these turmoils and trials I have stood with the Democratic Party and have in the Congress voted for what I felt was for the best interests of the constituents whom I represent, and the Democratic Party. I do not believe that you would want me to vote one day with the Democrats and the next day with the Republicans.

DON'T SWAP HORSES IN THE MIDDLE OF THE STREAM

Times are improving and conditions are better, yet the battle is not won, because the reconstruction adjustment period is now facing us. I am familiar with the conditions here and earnest in facing us. I am familiar with the conditions here and earnest in my service for the best interests of the people of our district. I should like to serve you another term. If you had a house almost completed, I do not believe you would change carpenters without good cause. If you were improving from a serious illness, I do not believe you would change doctors if your doctor was faithful and sincere. If you were almost to the end of your journey I do not believe you would stop to trade automobiles if the one you had was running smoothly. If you had a faithful and experienced employee in your own business, I do not believe you would replace him with one without trial and experience. While I have had 11 years' experience in Congress, I am still only 44 years of age, at the time of life when I should be able to render you the best services. It is my desire to do this, and I hope that the people of our district will see fit to continue my services here. I hope you will not swap horses while in the middle of the stream. You have kept me here long enough for me to be a committee chairman and to hold high and responsible committee assignments which will benefit the interests of our district. My friends and acquaintances here are beneficial of our district. My friends and acquaintances here are beneficial to me in obtaining the things to which our district is entitled. My assignment on the Rivers and Harbors Committee was very instruassignment on the Rivers and Harbors Committee was very instru-mental in persuading the President to begin work on the Florida canal, and even if work should cease on this project, we still will have had expended in our State more than five and one-half mil-lion dollars and great benefits in purchasing power to our people; however, rest assured, if I am returned to Congress, the canal will be completed and more adequate pensions will be paid to the aged of our country. of our country.

If you send me here for another term, I shall continue to labor for the things of interest and benefit to our district and for the cause of the plain people. Enemies of the Florida canal are trying to defeat me. Big money and the special interests are also trying to defeat me. They are trying to betray and mislead my friends into voting against me because I have stood by the masses and in into voting against me because I have stood by the masses and in the interests of the rank and file. This I shall do as long as I live. I cannot forget my own handicaps and struggles in trying to obtain an honest education. I plowed, hoed, dug ditches, chipped pine gum, and cut cross ties. I can do it again if necessary. I believe in the dignity of labor and the majesty of toil. There is no aristocracy except that of honor and no rabble save that of crime. I honor the man who earns his living by the sweat of his honest brow. For his betterment my ark covenant is launched. I do not light my candle and place it under a bushel. I am out in the open, fighting against the special interests and will fight to the end. I will go up or I will go down in the cause of the common people, and I urge that you do all that you can for me. Every victory I have won and every worth-while accomplishment has been made possible only through the efforts of my loyal friends. You have stood by me in the past and never permitted me to go down in defeat. My faith in you abides.

LOUIS M'HENRY HOWE

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, on Saturday last, April 18, Louis McHenry Howe, a resident of Massachusetts, secretary to and a trusted and intimate friend of the President, died. The extent and character of his public service is so conspicuous that references to it made through editorials published in the press should be embodied in the Congressional RECORD. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that several editorials commending the loyal and devoted service of Mr. Howe be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of Apr. 20, 1936]

LOUIS M'HENRY HOWE

It is reiterated in the obituary summaries of Louis McHenry Howe's career that he was the "no" man of the President's entourage. "The Colonel" himself would have subscribed to the statement. From the beginning, when this Albany newspaper correspondent first recognized the possibilities of young Senator Roosevelt, of Dutchess County, and forthwith enlisted in the Roosevelt forces, he saw that his principal service would lie in balancing his older years and broader political experience against the eager enthusiasm of the younger man. "To provide the toe weights", was Mr. Howe's description of his own role.

But, in another sense, Mr. Howe was Mr. Roosevelt's "yes" man. He it was who took up the banner when, at the opening of the Dutchess County campaign for reelection, the young senator was stricken with typhoid fever. "Yes", Louis Howe said, "you can be reelected." And, undertaking a campaign by proxy, he returned his man to office. The partnership was scaled.

reelected." And, undertaking a campaign by proxy, he returned his man to office. The partnership was sealed. Up through the ranks these two friends progressed together.

Up through the ranks these two friends progressed together. When Mr. Roosevelt became Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Howe, for his effective behind-scenes maneuvering, earned the jocular title of "Daniels' spy", which pleased him greatly. Their next campaign, for the Vice Presidency, is said to be one of the few instances in which the older man's advice was disregarded. Then poliomyelitis struck. Again Louis Howe offered his encouragement and advice. Mr. Roosevelt's destiny, he argued, was not necessarily affected; and, ever at his friend's side, he plotted the political strategy and supervised its execution to win their way first to the Governor's mansion in New York State and from there to the White House. White House

It is declared that the friendship of the two men is without parallel in the history of American politics. For one man to dedicate himself utterly to another's progress is not a common sight. Of course, Mr. Howe himself would have been the first to point out Of course, Mr. Howe himself would have been the first to point out that in so doing he was advancing his own hopes. He was fated for politics. With a high talent for complete analysis, a sureness in gaging men, and a flair for the dramatic, he was admirably equipped for the game. Add to these a delight in success and the result is political genius. Such a man was Louis McHenry Howe; and, because his ability was always tempered with honesty and loyalty, the Nation will share with Mr. Roosevelt what must be for him a deep sense of loss in the passing of his "fidus Achates."

[From the Boston Post of Apr. 20, 1936] LOUIS M'HENRY HOWE

The President loses an old and trusted adviser with the passing of his secretary, Louis McHenry Howe.

When the chronicle of the Roosevelt administration is written

When the chronicle of the Roosevelt administration is written the place of Mr. Howe will be an important one.

He was gifted with an insight into political trends. This quality is strong in Mr. Roosevelt, but there are many who know the situation who say that Mr. Howe was the real political sage of the President's official family.

Many shrewd observations which have been credited to Mr. Farley actually came from Mr. Howe.

His effectiveness was greatly enhanced by his newspaper training and contacts. No President has ever occupied the White House who was more popular with newspaper correspondents.

The country will sympathize with the President in the loss of this trusted adviser, small in stature but long in wisdom.

[From the Washington Star of Apr. 20, 1936] LOUIS M'HENRY HOWE

Fate has dealt Franklin D. Roosevelt a cruel blow in robbing him of his friend, Louis McHenry Howe. Thousands of their fellow citizens, understanding the relation between the two men, will sympathize with both in their hour of parting.

Mr. Howe was one of that small company of persons who live to see their fondest dreams come true. He persuaded millions to idolize his idol, to trust his captain as he trusted him. No more striking example of consummate devotion is to be found in modern history than that of the journalist who elevated a New York ern history than that of the journalist who elevated a New York State senator to the position of President of the United States. But destiny required of Mr. Howe that he should pay the inevitable price of such unselfish love. He exhausted himself in the service of his chief. Unremitting labor, constant tension and strain ruined his health and cut short his career. His work, it seems, was finished on March 4, 1933. After that date he was but a member of the White House chorus. Mr. Roosevelt necessarily enlisted other advisers, and illness accelerated the decline of "the colonel's" influence.

And it was the Nation's loss that it should have been as the latter of the colonel's influence.

of "the colonel's" influence.

And it was the Nation's loss that it should have been so. Mr. Howe was not a radical. His voice was for moderation. A basically honest sanity was part of his genius, and those who opposed him paid him a merited compliment when they judged him "too cautious." Mr. Roosevelt, however, was not deceived. Down to the last he still desired to consuit his old and deeply appreciated companion in arms. It was his regular practice to telephone "Louis" whenever "things were popping." And from his bed in the naval hospital as recently as only last week the dying veteran still kept in touch with developments, still sought to employ his fading powers to his country's benefit.

Mr. Howe, it should be mentioned, always entertained a vast fading powers to his country's benefit.

Mr. Howe, it should be mentioned, always entertained a vast affection for the people. In his mind there never was any doubt about their elementary claim to freedom, prosperity, and peace. A generous and kindly heart prompted him to give all that he had in the interest of one he believed was endowed with the qualities of leadership which they needed. The President was conscious of his idealism, respected it and often was governed by it. Hence it may be said of the departed partner that he strove to high purpose, achieved much for which millions should be grateful and will be remembered as a good and faithful servant to the human family in an age when unselfishness and loyalty are sadly wanted.

sadly wanted.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of Apr. 20, 1936] LOUIS M'HENRY HOWE

In the death of Colonel Howe, President Roosevelt has sustained a loss whose magnitude, though best known to him, is also obvious to the country at large. The long, intimate partnership between the two men, begun more than 25 years ago, had a significance unique in history. No doubt there has been much exaggeration of Colonel Howe's influence in shaping the President's career. of Colonel Howe's influence in snaping the President's career.

Mr. Roosevelt's own qualities are far more responsible for his political success than the wisdom of his faithful mentor. Nevertheless it is quite easy to believe that Mr. Howe's instinctively shrewd appraisal of men and measures—the balance which he contributed to the Roosevelt buoyancy—was an asset of extraordinary value to the President, both before and after he attained the White House, and one which he will miss very acutely, indeed, the White House, and one which he will miss very acutely, indeed, especially in a campaign year.

The country itself will be a sufferer from the absence of Louis Howe's counsel. In fact, it has already had reason to mourn the year's illness which incapacitated him, and which has now finally removed him from the mortal scene. Washington commentators, familiar with his peculiar sagacity, believe that had his advice been available when the N. R. A. decision foreshadowed the collapse of the New Deal structure, Mr. Roosevelt would never have made the parade he did of his chagrin or have gone on from his "horse and buggy" interview to drive Congress through a sweltering summer of preposterous legislation. This, of course, is mere conjecture, but by no means implausible, and it reflects the very solid esteem in which the slight, self-effacing little invalid was held by those who had occasion to know him best. His was an alert mind and a devoted spirit. We shall all be the poorer for their departure. their departure.

[From the New York Times of Apr. 20, 1936] A FAITHFUL FRIEND AND AIDE

It is doubtful if American political history could furnish an exact parallel to the relation which existed between President Roosevelt and his chief private secretary, Col. Louis Howe, who died on Saturday. Other Presidents have had their familiars and advisers. Andrew Jackson had his "kitchen Cabinet." President Cleveland often turned to his Buffalo and Albany intimates. But Cleveland often turned to his Buffalo and Albany intimates. But not even the remarkable case of Colonel House and President Wilson presented a picture of long and utter devotion such as Colonel Howe gave to Franklin Roosevelt for 25 years. His death will be a keen personal loss and grief to the President, who repaid loyalty with loyalty.

For years Colonel Howe was a firm believer in the high political destiny of Mr. Roosevelt. He unswervingly followed the star of the man for whom he must have had a deep affection, as well as a confident anticipation of a great career. For himself Colonel Howe wanted nothing except opportunities to serve his friend and, through him, the public. He had a perfect genius for self-effacement. He shrank from publicity with all the zeal which many show in seeking it. A shy, retiring man, with an enormous capacity for work and painstaking thoroughness, he accumulated an extraordinarily wide knowledge of American politics and politicians which dinarily wide knowledge of American politics and politicians which he had marked sagacity in applying for the benefit of the man whom he delighted to honor and advance. It will be long before we shall look upon his like again.

OPINIONS OF SENATORS IN RITTER IMPEACHMENT CASE—EXTENSION OF TIME LIMIT

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, on April 16 an order was entered allowing Senators 4 days within which to file their opinions in the Ritter impeachment case. At the request of several Senators, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended to 10 days from that date instead of 4 days.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order heretofore entered is modified accordingly.

OPINIONS OF SENATORS IN IMPEACHMENT CASE OF HALSTED L. RITTER

Pursuant to the order entered on the calendar day Thursday, April 16, 1936, and modified this day, allowing each Senator 10 days after final vote on the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, within which to file his individual opinion, the following opinions, one by Mr. Austin, one by Mr. Benson, and one by Mr. McAdoo, were filed and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

MEMORANDUM OPINION OF SENATOR AUSTIN IN THE MATTER OF THE IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

MEMORANDUM OPINION OF SENATOR AUSTIN IN THE MATTER OF THE IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

Within the 4 days provided in the rules for filing opinions in the trial for impeachment of Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, I now file an opinion that the respondent was not found guilty by vote of two-thirds of the Senators present of an impeachable offense.

The ruling of the President pro tempore overruling the point of order based on the three grounds that—

1. Article VII is an omnibus article, the ingredients of which are stated in articles I to VI;

2. A vote of two-thirds of the Senators present is necessary;

3. The sum of six acquittals cannot be a conviction; in effect admitted the last two grounds and avoided them by holding that the first ground was unsound because article VII "is a separate charge from any other charge", namely: "general misbehavior." This seems to recognize that six legal naughts cannot become a legal unit.

The opinion now filed is intended to develop by citation of authorities the principle that impeachment does not lie for acts without evil intent, corruption, or illegality.

Article VII did not charge any of these ingredients, and the votes on the six specific articles preceding found the respondent not guilty of any of them. Therefore, the judgment is for an offense not impeachable.

The opinion, which I ask may be printed, under the order of the 16th instant, as a part of the impeachment proceedings, is as follows:

The seven articles of impeachment, briefly analyzed, charged as follows:

The seven articles of impeachment, briefly analyzed, charged as follows

Article I: Misbehavior and high crime and misdemeanor in Article I: Misbehavior and high crime and misdemeanor in office by corruptly and unlawfully accepting from his former law partner $4,500 out of the avails of a decree made by the respondent.

Article II: Misbehavior and high crime and misdemeanor in office by conspiring with his former law partner and others to continue property in litigation, promoting the conspiracy by keeping jurisdiction of a foreclosure proceeding contrary to the motion of the plaintiff in person, on the basis of interventions filed in the case, appointing as receiver a person alleged to be involved in the conspiracy, granting exorbitant fees, and corruptly and unlawfully accepting from such fees $4,500.

Article III: A high misdemeanor in office by practicing law contrary to the Judicial Code and accepting $2,000 from his client his services $7,500.

Article V: A high misdemeanor by violating 146 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1928 in not returning the above-mentioned fees in his income-tax return for the year ending December 31, 1929.

Article VI: A high misdemeanor in office by violating 146 (b)

Article VI: A high misdemeanor in office by violating 146 (b) of the Revenue Act of 1928 in not returning $5,300 gross taxable income for the year ending December 31, 1930.

Article VII: Misbehavior and high crimes and misdemeanor in office by accepting large fees and gratuities, to wit, $7,500 from J. R. Francis on or about April 19, 1929, said J. R. Francis having large property interests within his territorial jurisdiction as a judge, and on, to wit, the 4th day of April 1929 accepting $2,000 from Mulford Realty Corporation and a large amount of the securities of Olympia Improvement Corporation, organized to develop holdings within his territorial jurisdiction.

Also, "by his conduct as detailed in articles I, II, III, and IV hereof, and by his income-tax evasions, as set forth in articles V and VI hereof."

The respondent was acquitted of the specific charges in articles I to VI by the following votes:

Article	Guilty	Not guilty	Page of Record
I	55 52 44 36 36 46	29 32 39 48 48 48	5602 5603 5604 5605 5605

The respondent was adjudged guilty, as charged in article $\overline{\text{VII}}$, by the following vote:

Article	Guilty	Not guilty	Page of Record
vii.	56	28	5606

Thereupon the point of order was made:

"That the respondent is not guilty, not having been found guilty by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present.

"Article VII is an omnibus article the ingredients of which, as stated on page 36, paragraph 4, are stated on page 36, paragraph 4, are * * *

"The first reason for the point of order is that here is a combination of facts in the indictment, the ingredients of which are the several articles which precede article VII, as seen by paragraph marked "4" on page 36. The second reason is contained in the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Members present. The third reason is that this matter has been passed upon judicially, and it has been held that an attempt to convict upon a combination of circumstances * * * of which the respondent has been found innocent would be mon-tempt to convict upon a combination of circumstances of which the respondent has been found innocent would be monstrous. I refer to the case of Andrews v. King (77 Maine, 235).

"The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A point of order is made as to article VII, in which the respondent is charged with general mishehavior. It is a separate charge from any other charge, and the point of order is overruled." (RECORD, p. 5606.)

Thereupon, a judgment order was directed by the President protempore as follows:

tempore, as follows:

"Judgment

"The Senate having tried Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, upon seven several articles of impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Representatives, and two-thirds of the Senators present having found him guilty of charges contained therein: It is therefore "Ordered and adjudged, That the said Halsted L. Ritter be, and he is hereby removed from office."

he is hereby, removed from office."

The ruling on the point of order that "It is a separate charge from any other charge", and that by article VII "the respondent is charged with general misbehavior" must be interpreted as adopting for the gist of the article that part of it reading as follows:

"The reasonable and probable consequence of the actions or conduct of Halsted L. Ritter, hereunder specified or indicated in this article, since he became judge of said court, as an individual or as such judge, is to bring his court into scandal and disrepute, to the prejudice of said court and public confidence in the administration of justice therein, and to the prejudice of public respect for and confidence in the Federal judiciary, and to render him unfit to continue to serve as such judge": (Proceedings, p. 34). The ruling must be considered in the light of the acquittal of the respondent of any crime specifically alleged in articles I to VI. This seems to be in accord with the principle discussed in Andrews v. King (77 Maine at 235), thus:

Andrews v. King (77 Maine at 235), thus:

"In special courts, established for the trial of officers alleged to be unfaithful, such as courts of impeachments and courts-martial, we believe it is the universal practice for the court to while it held and owned large interests in his jurisdiction, and accepting a large amount of securities from his client of a corporation organized to develop holdings within his jurisdiction.

Article IV: A high misdemeanor in office by practicing law on another occasion contrary to the Judicial Code, and receiving for the court. There might be as many charges as there were members of the court, and no one charge receive the assent of more than one member, yet that member vote to sentence, on account of his belief in the truth of that one charge, which all his associates believed to be false.

"If each member did so, there would be sentence, without conviction and without guilt. Such a result would be monstrous, and hence the practice of first ascertaining and declaring whether the court agrees, or concurs, upon any one charge as proved."

The ruling by the President pro tempore not only expressly characterizes the charge as separate from the other charges and as a charge of "general misbehavior", but in logic it denies the claim made in the point of order, that article VII is an omnibus article the ingredients of which are the several crimes of which the respondent has been found not guilty.

The necessary conclusion is that a Federal judge has been removed from his office for "general misbehavior" not amounting to a crime. This must be on the theory that he has willfully broken the term of his office, that is, by conduct with evil intent, corruption, or illegality. Of the necessary ingredient of evil intent, corruption, or illegality, there is no charge in article VII. The respondent was found not guilty of this ingredient by six previous votes. previous votes.

Article III, section 1, of the Constitution declares the term as follows:

follows:

"* * The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, * * *."

Since this seems to be the first time that the words "high crimes and misdemeanors", in section 4 of article II, and "offenses against the United States", in section 2, clause 1, of article II, and the words "the trial of all crimes", in section 2, clause 3, of article III, and the words "the party convicted", in section 3, clause 8, of article I, have been interpreted to connote "general misbehavior" where the respondent has not been found guilty by a two-thirds vote of the Senators present on any article which charged evil intent, corruption, or illegality, and where the article charging misbehavior does not charge evil intent, corruption, or illegality, the following precedents are made a part of the record of this trial.

The parts of the Constitution referring to impeachment are as

The parts of the Constitution referring to impeachment are as

"The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; * * *"

Article II, section 2, clause 1:

law."

All of these provisions deal with crimes and misdemeanors.

In law a "misdemeanor" is a crime less than a felony.

In law the word "offense" has no technical meaning; but it is sometimes used specifically for an indictable crime, as in the British Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878 (41 and 42 Vict., c. 731), and sometimes for a misdemeanor or a wrong punishable only by fine or penalty. Sometimes a distinction is made between offenses and quasi offenses, as in the following citation: "Offenses are those illegal acts which are done wickedly and with the intent to injure, while quasi offenses are those which cause injury. tent to injure, while quasi offenses are those which cause injury to another but proceed only from error, neglect, or imprudence" (Edwards v. Turner, 6 Rob. (La.) 382).

In law the words "convicted" and "conviction" mean proved or found gulity, and so far relate to crime that the word "convict" is used for one convicted of and under sentence for a crime.

The following cases lead to the judgment that there is no definition clearly delimiting the scope of impeachment trials, but they lay down principles according to the common law requiring the same quantum of proof as in criminal trials, and surrounding the respondent with the same safeguards against prejudice from a had-sounding indictment as are granted to reconsider to principal. bad-sounding indictment as are granted to respondents in criminal causes, namely, the presumption of innocence on behalf of the respondent, the burden of proof beyond a reasonable doubt imposed on the prosecution, and the necessity of establishing evil intent.

All of this is inconsistent with the theory that general mis-behavior without evil intent, without corruption or fraud, will support a conviction in an impeachment for misbehavior and high crimes and misdemeanors in office.

These authorities should be applied to the instant matter on the basis that the evil intent, the corruption, and unlawfulness charged was not found. On every charge of that character the charged was not found. On every charge of that characteristics respondent was found not guilty.

Article VII omits any charge of fraud, corruption, or unlawfulness, or evil intent, and stands upon the sole ground that, regardless of the intent, "the reasonable and probable consequences of the actions or conduct * * * is to bring his court into scandal and disrepute * * and to render him unfit to continue to and disrepute * * serve as such judge."

the actions or conduct * * * is to bring his court into scandal and disrepute * * and to render him unfit to continue to serve as such judge."

If "to bring his court into scandal and disrepute" should be an impeachable offense, the least that ought to be required is that there be some evidence to establish the fact that he brought his court into scandal and disrepute. This case was determined without such proof. Final judgment was entered on mere surmise that the alleged misbehavior had resulted as charged.

In State ex rel. Attorney General v. Buckley (1875) (54 Ala. 599 at 620). Held: "We feel constrained to hold (1875) (54 Ala. 599 at 620). Held: "We feel constrained to hold that impeachment, under our Constitution, is a criminal prosecution."

The opinion cites Mr. Story in his commentaries on the Constitution, section 688, after stating that in England "articles of impeachment are a kind of bill of indictment, found by the Commons, and tried by the Lords", adds:

"In the Constitution of the United States the House of Representatives exercises the functions of the House of Commons in regard to impeachment; and the Senate, the functions of the House of Lords, in relation to the trial of the party accused. The principles of the common law, so far as the jurisdiction is to be exercised, are deemed of primary obligation and government. The object of prosecutions of this sort in both countries is to reach high and potent offenders, such as might be presumed to escape punishment in the ordinary tribunals, either from their own extraordinary influence or from the imperfect organization and powers of those tribunals. These prosecutions are, therefore, conducted by the representatives of the Nation, in their public capacity, in the face of the Nation, and upon a responsibility which is at once felt and reverenced by the whole community. The notoriety of the proceedings, the solemn manner in which they are conducted, the deep extent to which they affect the reputations of the accused, the ignominy of a conviction wh of the holding:

"6. Another question which is suggested in this connection is the character of this proceeding, viz, whether it is to be regarded as a civil action or as a criminal prosecution for the purpose of the production and the quantum of proof to warrant a conviction. It may be safely asserted that the decided weight of authority in this country and England, if, indeed, there exists a diversity of opinion on the subject, is that impeachment in that respect must be classed as a criminal prosecution, in which the State is required to establish the essential elements of the charge beyond a reasonable doubt * * *"

This Nebraska case also cites with approval impeachment of Barnard (1872) thus: Barnard (1872) thus:

"* * But we are fortunately not without judicial authority on the subject. In the impeachment of Barnard (1872) the judges of the Court of Appeals of New York sat with the Senators and appear to have been consulted upon all doubtful questions. Chief Justice Church (p. 2070), speaking upon the subject under consideration, said: 'If I felt warranted in balancing the evidence and in determining that question in a civil action, I might come to the conclusion that the evidence of payment was not reliable; but we are here in a criminal case, where the respondent is entitled to the benefit of every reasonable doubt, both upon the facts and the law, oenent of every reasonable doubt, both upon the facts and the law, and I cannot say that the evidence which has been produced is not sufficient to create some doubt.' Judge Andrew (p. 2071) said: 'I shall vote 'Not guilty' upon this article upon the principle that this defendant is entitled to every reasonable doubt, and that that doubt as to his guilt, according to the charge, exists in my mind upon the evidence in the case.' Like views were expressed by other judges, but there was no dissent from the opinions above quoted * * *."

There was a dissenting exists a continuous content of the charge, and the content of the charge, exists in my mind upon the evidence in the case.' Like views were expressed by other judges, but there was no dissent from the opinions above quoted * * *."

There was a dissenting opinion in the Nebraska case, but even the dissenting opinion stated the necessity of finding a willful disregard of duty:

"* * There is considerable conflict in the authorities as to what constitutes an impeachable offense. Under the common law the grounds of impeachment are 'high crimes and misdemeanors.' In a number of cases under this law it has been held that the cause of accusation must be a crime punishable under the criminal law. In England impeachment has been to some extent considered a mode of trial to punish crime, although a judgment of guilty was no bar to an indictment and conviction for the same offense. In this country, while some of the cases hold that to constitute an impeachable offense it must be such as could be punished under the criminal law, yet in the majority of cases it is held that this requirement is unnecessary, and we are constrained to adopt the latter view. Judge Lawrence, in 6 American Law Register (N.S.) 649, in discussing the meaning of the word, says: "The word "misdemeanor" has a common law, a parliamentary, and a popular sense. In a parliamentary sense, as applied to officers, it means maladministration or misconduct, not necessarily indictable." Demeanor is conduct, and misdemeanor is misconduct in the business of his office. It must be in matters of importance and be of a character to show a willful disregard of duty. * *"

The article in the American Law Register (September 1867), vol-

The article in the American Law Register (September 1867), volume 15, page 641, by Judge William Lawrence, of Ohio, referred to above, develops the propositions that—

Constitution are not limited to crimes defined by statute or as Constitution are not limited to crimes defined by statute or as recognized at common law" (p. 647).

"That the word 'high' applies as well to 'misdemeanors' as to 'crimes' (2 Chase's Trial, 383; note, p. 645).

"The result is that an impeachable high crime or misdemeanor is one in its nature or consequences subversive of some fundamental or essential principle of government or highly prejudicial to the public interest, and this may consist of a violation of the Constitution, of law, of an official oath, or of duty, by an act committed or omitted, or, without violating a positive law, by the abuse of discretionary powers from improper motives or for an improper purpose" (p. 680).

The majority opinion in the Nebraska case has been cited as controlling and commented on in State v. Donohue (1912) (91 Nebr.

purpose" (p. 680).

The majority opinion in the Nebraska case has been cited as controlling and commented on in State v. Donohue (1912) (91 Nebr. 321), Hiatt v. Tomlinson (1916) (100 Nebr. 57), Keifer v. Smith (1919) (103 Nebr. 677). It was differentiated in the dissenting opinion in State v. Donohue, supra, and it was cited with approval in Hoffman v. Yoe (1899) (9 Kans. App. 415), Garff v. Smith (1906) (31 Utah at 109), State v. Robinson (1906) (111 Ala. 485), Ferguson v. Maddox et al. (1924) (114 Tex. 85 at 96).

The principle declared in these cases is contrary to the theory that "general misconduct" without corruption, fraud, or evil intent will support a judgment in impeachment:

State v. Donahue (91 Nebr. at 321): "This construction has been adopted by this court: 'But where such act results from a mere error of judgment or omission of duty without the element of fraud, or where the alleged negligence is attributable to a misconception of duty rather than a willful disregard thereof, it is not impeachable, although it may be highly prejudicial to the interests of the State', State v. Hastings (37 Nebr. 96)."

In one of the dissenting opinions, holding that the above citation was not in point, the principle was not disputed, but recognized (at p. 337) and the practice under the statute differentiated from that under the Constitution:

"The precedents show that the word 'willfully', as used in a statute imposing duties on a public officer and providing penalties for the violation of those duties, does not mean, as stated in the opinion of the majority, 'some evil intent, or legal malice, or at least be without sufficient grounds to believe that he is performing his duty.'

or at least be without sufficient grounds to believe that he is performing his duty."
"In State v. Hastings (37 Nebr. 96) cited to sustain the opinion

"In State v. Hastings (37 Nebr. 90) cheet to sustain the opinion of the majority, the court was trying an impeachment for 'misdemeanor in office'—a technical term used in the Constitution. Its meaning is not the same as the term construed in this case—willfully fail, neglect, or refuse to enforce any law.' The case

'willfully fail, neglect, or refuse to enforce any law.' The case is not in point.

High v. Tomlinson (100 Nebr. 51) was an action on a statute for removal of a supervisor of a county from his office. The majority opinion held that it must be clearly shown that the action of the official was prompted by some evil intent or legal malice, or at least without sufficient grounds to believe that he was properly performing his duty, and said:

"The holding of the trial court is in harmony with the law as announced in the above cases (many of which had been

"The holding of the trial court is in harmony with the law as announced in the above cases (many of which had been digested) and is also well within our holding in State v. Hastings (37 Nebr. 96)."

Some of these cases have a State statute for removal from office for cause less than high crimes and misdemeanors as their legal premise. Therefore their value as judicial statements of what is the law is high. the law is high.

the law is high.

In Hoffman v. Yoe (9 Kans. App. 394) the action was civil—quo warranto—but the court held (p. 409) that "the charge is of a criminal nature." At page 410: "The power of removal conferred by the statute must be pursued with strictness according to its terms." At 413: "It is the duty of the court to determine whether the findings of the committee constitute an offense in the eyes of the law to justify the act of removal. It was so considered in Rogers v. Morrill (55 Kans. 737, 42 Pac. 355)." At 414: "The law intends that an officer shall be removed for cause only, and those causes are specifically enumerated in the statute. * * * It is causes are specifically enumerated in the statute. * * * It is evident that the legislature did not intend that these State officers should be at the caprice or mercy of the Chief Executive, or of a legislative committee convened at his suggestion. Substantial and not frivolous charges against the officer are necessary to secure his removal." (Cites many authorities, including State v. Hastings 37 Nebr. 96.)

Garff v. Smith ((1895) 31 Utah 109) holds that a public officer is not liable even in a civil suit for damages resulting from the performance of judicial duties in the absence of averment and proof formance of Judicial duties in the absence of averment and proof that he acted with malice or through fraud and corruption.

The opinion cites many authorities in support of this principle, including State v. Hastings (37 Nebr. 96, 55 N. W. 774), and Daniels v. Hathaway (65 Vt. 247, 26 Atl. 970, 21 L. R. A. 377).

It follows that a Federal judge is not liable in impeachment to ouster in the absence of averment and proof that he acted with malice or through fraud and corruption.

State or real Attorney General v. Robinson ((1895) 111 Ala 482).

State ex rel. Attorney General v. Robinson ((1895) 111 Ala. 482), an impeachment proceeding trying a judge of probate for habitual intoxication, held:

"As to those officers impeachable by and before the courts, the proceeding is strictly judicial. Whatever may be the rules of procedure of the Senate, sitting as a court for the trial of an impeachment case, as to those officers now or formerly triable before that body, it is certain that in the trial of an impeachment cause by a court of justice, in any of those cases now committed to the judicial department for trial, the court proceeds to make strict judicial cial department for trial, the court proceeds to make strict judicial investigation, according to judicial methods. Such proceedings are criminal in their nature, and are governed by the rules of law applicable to criminal causes. Before a defendant can be convicted it is incumbent on the State to prove his guilt to the satisfaction of the court beyond reasonable doubt. The constitutional and statutory provisions on the subject are to receive strict construction. (Exparte Buckley, 54 Ala. 559; The State v. Seawell, 64 Ala. 228; The State v. Tally, 102 Ala. 25.)

"* * As said by Judge Story, it is not compatible with the genius of our institutions to make that a crime at one time, or in one person, which would be deemed innocent at another time or in another person (1 Story on Constitution, sec. 797; The State v. Hastings, 37 Nebr. 115)."

another person (1 Story on Consuttation, Hastings, 37 Nebr. 115)."

Ferguson v. Maddox ((1924), 114 Tex. 85; 263 S. W. 888): The questions certified for decision involved the question whether the difference between the Federal Constitution and the Texas Constitution in respect to the omission from the Texas Constitution of the designation of impeachable offenses leads to the conclusion that Governor Ferguson "was convicted of and punished for ofthat Governor Ferguson" was constitution and laws of this State" fenses not defined by the constitution and laws of this State" (p. 90).

The brief for Governor Ferguson contained the following: "It will be noted that while the Constitution of the United States defines the acts or offenses for which the President, Vice President, and other civil officers of the United States may be impeached and removed from office there is an entire absence from our constitution of any such definition or statement of the acts or offenses for which a Governor may be impeached or removed from office" (n. 38) acts or offenses for which a Governor may be impeached or removed from office" (p. 88).

The brief for Mr. Maddox contained the following:

"Article 15, Texas Constitution, is self-enactive, and leaves it to the senate to convict on such offenses as in their judgment are sufficient for removal and disqualification

* * "" (p. 89).

The court decided and held that * * the constitution sufficiently indicates what offenses are impeachable * * ""

In arriving at that decision the Court said:

In arriving at that decision the Court said:

"While impeachable offenses are not defined in the Constitution, they are very clearly designated or pointed out by the term impeachment", which at once connotes the offenses to be considered and the procedure for the trial thereof.

"Impeachment", at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, was an established and well-understood procedure in English and American parliamentary law, and it had been resorted to from time to time in the former country for perhaps 500 years. It was designed, primarily, to reach those in high places guilty of official delinquencies or maladministration. It was settled that the wrongs justifying impeachment need not be statutory offenses or commonlaw offenses, or even offenses against any positive law. Generally speaking, they are designated as high crimes and misdemeanors; which, in effect, meant nothing more than grave official wrongs.

"In the nature of things, these offenses cannot be defined, except in the most general way. A definition can, at best, do little more than state the principle upon which the offense rests. Consequently, no attempt was usually made to define impeachable offenses, and the futility, as well as the unwisdom, of attempting to do so has been commented upon.

"In the Constitution of the United States impeachable offenses are designated as 'treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors' (Constitution of the United States, art. II, sec. 4). Substantially the same language is used in many of the State constitutions. In others 'misdemeanors in office', 'maladministration', 'oppression in office', and the like, are declared to be impeachable offenses.

"When the Constitution of Texas was adopted it was done in the

"When the Constitution of Texas was adopted it was done in the light of, and with the full knowledge and understanding of, the principles of impeachment as theretofore established in English principles of impeachment as theretofore established in English and American parliamentary procedure. The Constitution, in this matter of impeachment, created nothing new. By it something existing and well understood was simply adopted. The power granted to the House to 'impeach' and the Senate to try 'impeachment' carries with it, by inevitable implication, the power to the one to prefer and to the other to try charges for such official delinquencies, wrongs, or malfeasances as justified impeachment according to the principles established by the common law and the practice of the English Parliament and the parliamentary bodies in America. The grant of the general power of 'impeachment' properly and sufficiently indicates the causes for its exercise.

"It is said this construction of the Constitution confers arbitrary and unrestrained power on the Senate. Not so at all. There is no such thing under our Government as arbitrary power. As has often been said, it is a government of laws, and not a government of men. We most emphatically repudiate the idea that any officer may be arbitrarily impeached. In the exercise of its exalted jurisdiction the Senate must proceed according to law" (pp. 96, 97).

And the Court further said (p. 98):

"There is no warrant for the contention that there is no such thing as impeachment in Texas because of the absence of a statutory definition of impeachable offenses."

The Court referred to authorities, including State v. Hastings

(37 Nebr. 96), saying at page 99:
"The following, among others, have been consulted and generally support the conclusions reached ..."

The Maine case cited supra uses language assuming that the proceeding is criminal in character, thus:

"In special courts, established for the trial of officers alleged to be unfaithful, such as courts of impeachments and courts martial, we believe it is the universal practice for the court to pass first upon the truth or falsity of each charge before passing sen-

Handbook of American Constitutional Law, by Henry Campbell Black, fourth edition, 1927, pages 142–143 states:

"Impeachment

"Treason and bribery are well-defined crimes. But the phrase other high crimes and misdemeanors' is so very indefinite that practically it is not susceptible of exact definition or limitation, practically it is not susceptible of exact definition or limitation, but the power of impeachment may be brought to bear on any offense against the Constitution or the laws which, in the judgment of the House, is deserving of punishment by this means or is of such a character as to render the party accused unfit to hold and exercise his office. It is, of course, primarily directed against official misconduct. Any gross malversation in office, whether or not it is a punishable offense at law, may be made the ground of an impeachment. But the power of impeachment is not restricted to political crimes alone. The Constitution provides that the party convicted upon impeachment shall still remain liable to trial and punishment according to law. From this it is to be the party convicted upon impeachment shall still remain liable to trial and punishment according to law. From this it is to be inferred that the commission of any crime which is of a grave nature, though it may have nothing to do with the person's official position, except that it shows a character or motives inconsistent with the due administration of his office, would render him liable to impeachment. It will be perceived that the power to determine what crimes are impeachable rests very much with Congress. For the House, before preferring articles of impeachment, will decide whether the acts or conduct complained of constitute a 'high crime or misdemeanor.' And the Senate, in trying the case, will also have to consider the same question. If, in the judgment of the Senate, the offense charged is not impeachable, they will acquit; otherwise, upon sufficient proof and the concurrence of the necessary majority, they will convict. And in either case there is no other power which can review or reverse their decision." decision.

SIX LEGAL NAUGHTS CANNOT BECOME A LEGAL UNIT OF GENERAL MISBEHAVIOR

SIX LEGAL NAUGHTS CANNOT BECOME A LEGAL UNIT OF GENERAL MISBEHAVIOR

An able defense of a judgment of guilty against Judge Robert W. Archbald on a blanket count, charging a general course of misconduct which embodied all the various acts alleged in 12 other articles, was made by Hon. Wrisley Brown, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, who conducted the original investigation and assisted in the trial of the case before the Senate (see XXVI Harvard Law Review 684). But in Judge Archbald's impeachment he was convicted by an overwhelming vote on the first, third, fourth, and fifth articles (48 Congressional Record, 9051). All of said articles except fourth charged the respondent with the use of his official power and influence to secure business favors and concessions in transactions relating to coal properties, from railroad companies and their subsidiaries having litigation before his court. The fourth-article, of which he was convicted, charged secret correspondence between the respondent and counsel for a railroad company regarding the merits of a case then pending before his court. This was collectively using specific convictions involving corruption and evil intent to make a unit. It cannot be regarded as a precedent for collectively using six acquittals—all of the specific charges—to make a unit for conviction.

The principle of government endangered by interpretation of the words "high crimes and misdemeanors" to connote transactions like the foregoing is similar to that referred to in Rathbun v. U. S. (May 27, 1935), which turned upon the removal of William E. Humphrey from the Federal Trade Commission by the President, without the existence of any of the causes enumerated in the Federal Trade Commission Act. The Supreme Court held:

"* * as to officers of the kind here under consideration, we hold that no removal can be made during the prescribed term for which the officer is appointed, except for one or more of the causes named in the applicable statute."

The Court stated the principle thus:

"Fo

And Mr. Justice Story in the first volume of his work on the Constitution, fourth edition, section 530, citing no. 48 of the Federalist, said that neither of the departments in reference to each other "ought to possess, directly or indirectly, an overruling influence in the administration of their respective powers." And see O'Donoghue v. United States, supra, at pages 530-531.

"The power of removal here claimed for the President falls within this principle, since its coercive influence threatens the independence of a commission, which is not only wholly disconnected from the executive department but which, as already fully appears, was created by Congress as a means of carrying into operation legislative and judicial powers and as an agency of the legislative and judicial departments."

Assuming that the decision by the Senate did not find, by a two-thirds vote of Senators present, any of the allegations in articles I to VI, then we are left with only two alleged transactions to support "general misbehavior", which received the requisite two-thirds majority, namely:

April 4, 1929, the respondent accepted $2,000 and a large amount of securities of Olympia Improvement Corporation, a corporation or securities of Olympia improvement Corporation, a corporation organized to develop holdings within the jurisdiction of the court, as a fee or gratuity from Mulford Realty Corporation;

April 14, 1929, the respondent accepted $7,500 as a fee or gratuity from J. R. Francis, who then held large property interests within the jurisdiction of the court.

It is my opinion that as a matter of law which should govern the Senate these transactions without evil intent corruption or

MEMORANDUM OPINION OF SENATOR BENSON IN THE MATTER OF THE IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

Aside from all the legalistic reasoning of the learned lawyers and the managers on the part of the House, these facts remain:

The United States Senate has been sitting as the highest Court in the land; this prosecution on the part of the House is the highest form of prosecution known to our law, and the punishment to be inflicted is the most severe that can be imposed upon a man in public office.

The managers on the part of the House have made sweeping statements which are not supported by the evidence. There have been insinuations and suspicions, but were we to convict this man been insinuations and suspicions, but were we to convict this man on mere suspicion and insinuation?

Ordinarily I fear that I would be more critical of any judge or court than would be the average citizen, and surely more critical than the average Senator, but when we are asked to sit as a court and judge this man, then I am constrained by the fact that I sit as a judge or juror, charged with the responsibilities and bound by the restrictions that should restrain any judge or juror trying a present charge against any American citizen. I am bound by the criminal charge against any American citizen. I am bound by the principles of American justice, which require that before finding a man guilty I must be convinced of that guilt "beyond a reasonable doubt." I could not, on the evidence presented, pronounce this respondent guilty and still remain at peace with my own con-

The respondent is of a political faith that constitutes a minority The respondent is of a political faith that constitutes a minority in this Court and a minority in his district where opposing political domination is decisive and powerful. Every inch of his pathway in public life has been critically and minutely examined. He has tried more than 7,000 cases. In only 1 of those 7,000 cases was there any cause for suspicion, and from that one arose the seven criminal charges which were filed against him. I can condemn him for folly, but I cannot convict him of this crime and punish him in the manner prescribed.

The very capacity in which we sit as the highest Court in the land constrains us to divorce ourselves from every political character that attends our normal functioning as lawmakers, and to put aside every thought of partisanship.

only 11 times in the century and a half of our national life has the Senate sat as a Court of Impeachment. In only three of these instances has there been a finding of guilt.

Many of the more than 200 Federal judges in the United States have rendered decisions on issues clearly drawn between the welhave rendered decisions on issues clearly drawn between the welfare of the public and the welfare of concentrated capital. So frequently have the rulings favored wealth and power against public interest that, whether justly or unjustly, our Federal courts too often have come to be publicly viewed as oppressors of small offenders and refuges for vested interests. Even under instances of equal evidence of guilt, I would much rather be a party to removing from office the Federal judge who violates his public trust by undue favoritism shown special privilege, or one who abuses his great powers by rendering political or economic decisions, or one who misuses his judicial cloak by making political public utterances, than I would be a party to removing one accused of more clearly defined offenses, the effect of which may be far less detrimental to the public interest.

But I am not convinced of the respondent's guilt, and in bespeaking condemnation of political decisions and economic decisions by the Federal courts I feel that we, sitting ourselves as a Court, must exercise caution that we do not fall into the error of injustice which we ourselves condemns. injustice which we ourselves condemn.

ELMER A. BENSON.

MEMORANDUM OPINION OF SENATOR M'ADOO IN THE MATTER OF THE IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

I do not take the view that an impeachment of a judge of the I do not cake the view that an impeachment of a judge of the inferior Federal courts under the Constitution of the United States is a criminal proceeding. The Constitution itself has expressly denuded impeachment proceedings of every aspect or characteristic of a criminal proceeding. This is made clear in article II, section 3, which provides:

"Judgment in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States; but the party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law."

Upon conviction, removal from office is the sole punishment unless the Senate shall, by vote, add to it "disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States." The last sentence of this same article II, section 3, expressly provides that the convicted party "shall nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment, according to law."

according to law. Obviously, the purpose of the framers of the Constitution was primarily to remove from office and disqualify from holding office a judge found guilty of misbehavior, or a want of good behavior within the meaning of the Constitution; but, if, as elements of misbehavior, it was shown in the trial that the accused had been guilty of crimes or misdemeanors under the laws of the United States, he could be punished therefor in a criminal proceeding in the courts of proper jurisdiction. It was not, therefore, necessary to prove the respondent guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, as is the rule in cases where persons are accused of crimes or misdemeanors involving loss of life, liberty, or property.

I approach this subject from the standpoint of the general con-approach this subject from the standpoint of the general conduct of this judge while on the bench, as portrayed by the various counts in the impeachment and the evidence submitted in the trial. The picture thus presented is, to my mind, that of a man who is so lacking in any proper conception of professional ethics and those high standards of judicial character and conduct as to constitute misbehavior in its most serious aspects, and to render him unfit to hold a judicial office.

Among other things, the impeachment charges that the Respondent Ritter allowed his former law partner, A. L. Rankin, a fee of $75,000 in the Whitehall Hotel receivership case; that out of said fee Rankin paid Ritter $4,500 in cash—$2,500 on December 24, 1930, and $2,000 in April 1931. The fact that these payments were made in cash instead of by check and that they are the only transactions between Ritter and Rankin where cash passed be-tween them, Rankin having given Ritter checks for all other payments made to him, evidences a guilty stain which no explana-tion can erase. The explanation advanced is that Rankin owed Ritter $5,000 for the purchase, some 2 years previously, of the interest of said Ritter in the partnership firm of Ritter & Rankin. It is significant that no payments were made on account of the alleged sale to Ritter by Rankin out of any moneys received during that period except from the $75,000 fee allowed by Judge Ritter to Rankin.

It is significant, too, that when Judge Akerman, at Judge Ritter's request, allowed Rankin a "conservative fee" of $15,000 in the spring of 1930, not one dollar of this amount was paid to Judge Ritter. This appears to have been clean money. Would not an Ritter. This appears to have been clean money. Would not an honest debtor have hastened to pay Judge Ritter out of this $15,000 fee at least a substantial sum on account of the $5,000 honest debtor have hastened to pay Judge Ritter out of this $15,000 fee at least a substantial sum on account of the $5,000 debt? He did not do it. He waited until the $75,000 fee, fixed by Judge Ritter, had been paid, and then, within the secret walls of the Judge's chamber, where each expected that the transaction would never become known, actual cash, amounting to $4,500, was handed to Judge Ritter by Rankin. It is incompatible with any theory of the high judicial integrity, which I conceive to be essential in a judge on the bench, to have been a party to such a transaction. The explanations are not convincing. Upon reading the evidence one is impressed with the suspicion, if not the belief, that the alleged $5,000 debt of Rankin to Ritter was an afterthought and that it was presented as the means for justifying this cash transaction of such a questionable and incriminating character. Would not, in the circumstances, an honest judge have said to Rankin when the cash was tendered: "I will not accept cash, because it invests the transaction with a quality which I cannot endure. You honestly owe me $5,000, and if you wish to make a payment on account, let it be made by check, as is usual between men of honor in transactions of this nature."

I am impressed with the fact that the commendable considerations which Judge Ritter advanced in his letter of July 2, 1930, to Judge Akerman when he asked that judge to relieve him of any embarrassment in fixing "the total allowance to be made Judge Rankin in the Whitehall receivership case" did not prevail with Judge Rankin, December 24, 1930. In view of the fact that Rankin owed him at that time $5,000, that its payment might be made out of the fee he might allow Rankin, that Rankin was his former law partner, would not any judge have seen clearly the impropriety, at least, of his rendering judgment in favor of Rankin in such circumstances? The explanation that all of the attorneys had agreed upon the fee does not satisfy, because a judge should look beyond the agreements of attorneys in matters of this sort when they are administering great trusts in their courts. That the part of this fee which went to Rankin was grossly excessive, in view of the services performed by him, is clear to my mind from the testimony adduced in the case.

I shall now pass on to the failure of Judge Bitter to report this

I shall now pass on to the failure of Judge Ritter to report this $2,500 cash payment in his income-tax return for the calendar year 1930. This return was filed March 14, 1931. It is not a 2,500 cash payment in his income-tax return for the calendar year 1930. This return was filed March 14, 1931. It is not a complicated income-tax return. On the contrary, with the amount of income Judge Ritter had, it is a simple matter to have made a full and correct return. He willfully, or intentionally, omitted to include this $2,500 cash payment. I cannot account for this omission on any other ground than that he knew that these were stained or tainted dollars, and that he did not wish to attract the attention of the revenue agents to this item when his tax return was being audited. Judge Ritter swore that his tax return for 1930 was "a true and complete return made in good faith for the taxable year stated, pursuant to the Revenue Act of 1928 and the regulations issued thereunder." Judge Ritter cannot claim ignorance of the law. It is a well-established rule that ignorance of the law excuses no man. Certainly ignorance of the law cannot excuse a judge, who must know the law in order that he may perform his duty to enforce it. Part V, section 51 (a), of the Revenue Act of 1928 requires "every individual having a gross income for the taxable year of $5,000 or over, regardless of the amount of his net income" * * * to "make under oath a return stating specifically the items of his gross income and the amount of his net income" * * * to "make under oath a return stating specifically the items of his gross income and the deductions and credits allowed under this title."

Section 146 of the same act provides (a) that "any person required under this title * * * by law or regulations made under authority thereof, to make a return, keep any records, or supply any information for the purposes of the computation, assessment, or collection of any tax imposed by this title, who willfully falls * * * to make such return, keep such records, or supply such information at the time or times required by law or regulations, shall, in addition to other penalties provided by law, be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both, together with the costs of prosecution."

1 year, or both, together with the costs of prosecution."
That Judge Ritter, a district judge of the United States, should have willfully and intentionally filed a false return under oath to have willfully and intentionally filed a false return under oath to the Bureau of Internal Revenue is to me incomprehensible. This fact alone would, in my judgment, warrant his impeachment, Judge Ritter's explanation is as follows:

"In 1930 I had a loss of $4.874 and some cents, which is fully explained in my income-tax return. * * * I made out that report on the 14th of March, just the day before it was due, and I put down that loss and I did not in my report put down $5.300 (this includes the $2,500 cash payment from Rankin) that I had taken in because after taking out my exemption, it left only $1,800 over against $4,800, which showed no income payable. * *

"There would not have been one dollar due if I had put in that money that I had received, and my loss was O. K.'d by the Department and was accepted and marked 'paid.'"

This explanation is wholly untenable. He was, under the mandate of the statute, required to make a true and complete return This explanation is wholly untenable. He was, under the mandate of the statute, required to make a true and complete return of all of his income in order to enable the Bureau of Internal Revenue to audit his account and to make "the computation, assessment, or collection" of any tax that might be due from him to the United States. No taxpayer is permitted to audit his own return and determine for himself whether his losses outbalance his income, and therefore omit to make "the true and complete return" required by law. If every taxpayer was permitted to do what Judge Ritter did in this instance, the Government would be defrauded of hundreds of millions of dollars in income taxes. Judge Ritter attempts to justify his false return by saying: "My loss was O. K.'d by the Department and was accepted and marked 'paid." This, of course, means nothing. If the "Department", or Bureau of Internal Revenue, O. K.'d his incomplete return without having made any effort to discover whether or not the judge had made a complete return of his income, this endorsement is of no value and does not signify that the Bureau of Internal Revenue approved a false return, which it did not know was false. It perhaps presumed that a judge of the United States court would not, under oath, falsely state the amount of his income.

In the matter of the appointment of a receiver for the Whitehall Building & Operating Co. I cannot find any justification for the assertion by Judge Ritter of jurisdiction in that case. Holland had the required amount of bonds ($50,000) to maintain a foreclosure suit against the property. Upon the solicitation of Rankin, and in collusion with Richardson, Metcalf, Sweeny, and Bemis, Holland had been induced to employ Rankin to bring an action in Judge Ritter's court.

Before the suit was actually filed, namely, on October 10, 1929.

Beenis, Holland had been induced to employ Rankin to bring an action in Judge Ritter's court.

Before the suit was actually filed, namely, on October 10, 1929, Holland telegraphed Rankin to "withhold filing foreclosure bill until further advice." The next day, October 11, Rankin telegraphed Holland: "Foreclosure bill mailed clerk court Miami esterday afternoon."

On October 10, the same day that he received Holland's telegram, Rankin wrote the clerk of the court at Miami, enclosing bill of complaint in the Whitehall case, naming Holland et al as complainants and requesting the clerk to "lock up this bill as soon as it is filed and hold it until Judge Ritter's return, so that we will not have any newspaper publicity before our application is heard before the judge." This unquestionably reflects an evil purpose. Rankin was about to lose his prey. He could easily have withdrawn the bill from the clerk, as requested by Holland, but, instead of doing that, he busied himself in an effort to secure intervenors in the case so that he might, if possible, file the bill in spite of Holland's directions and make it stick upon the interventions.

Why should the bill be held until Judge Ritter's return? This brings out in bold relief the pattern of the design which was to carry out the plan predetermined by Richardson, Rankin, Metcalf, and others to secure a receivership of the Whitehall Hotel, Ritter was essential.

In reply to further telegrams from Holland, dated October 14 and October 16, Rankin wired Holland October 17: "As requested, will not make application for you for receiver Whitehall pending instructions"; and on October 18 Rankin again wired Holland, saying: "Other first-mortgage bondholders Whitehall have intervened and will apply court tomorrow 10:30 a. m. for appointment of receiver."

Holland was in Miami on October 28, 1929, and testifies that Holland was in Miami on October 28, 1929, and testifies that he "met Mr. Rankin in the courthouse corridor" before the case was called for hearing. He testifies further that he said to Rankin that he "was there in person" * * and that he "desired to appear for" himself, and "did not want his (Rankin's) services longer." On the same day, October 28, 1929, the case came on for hearing before Judge Ritter. Rankin had been discharged as attorney for Holland and had been told by Holland not to prosecute, in his behalf, the application for a receivership.

Holland, who is a lawyer of reputation in Boston, Mass., appeared in person in Judge Ritter's court, and, according to Ritter's own testimony, Holland said: "I am a lawyer; I reside in Boston; I am the plaintiff in this case, and I do not desire anything done in this case." This was tantamount to a request by Holland for a dismissal of the action. Judge Ritter testified before the Senate that he said, in reply to Holland: "Well, have you been paid?" Ritter further stated: "Naturally, the inference occurred to my mind that the plaintiff had been bought off, or that he was instituting this case and wanted to keep it on the that he was instituting this case and wanted to keep it on the books as a sort of a hold-up proposition. I could not tolerate such a thing of that kind in my courts; and I told him that I did not think that a nonresident should come into my court and did not think that a nonresident should come into my court and start a case, when he had counsel present; and if he was to control the case, it occurred to me, when he had lawyers present, and I should act upon what he said, I did not see how we could ever make progress in the case and get it to final conclusion. If a nonresident had to be notified about the case, and was conducting his own case, I did not see how we could ever push the case through."

case through."

In the first place, Judge Ritter was, without justification, insulting to Holland when he asked, "Well, have you been paid?"
There was certainly nothing in the record to warrant such an assumption on the judge's part. Moreover, why did the judge say to him that he "did not think that a nonresident should come into my court and start a case and then stand up when it came up on this important matter of a receivership and say that he did not want anything done in the case when he had counsel present"?

Holland is an American citizen. It is true that he was a resi-

Holland is an American citizen. It is true that he was a resident and citizen of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, but one of the distinct reasons for the jurisdiction of the United States courts is diversity of citizenship. Holland, as a "nonresident", had as much right to the protection of Judge Ritter's court as a citizen of the State of Florida. He was particularly entitled to courteous treatment by the court, especially in view of the fact that he did not have "lawyers present", since he had discharged Rankin as his attorney and was, of necessity, forced to appear in his own healt.

Rankin as his attorney and was, of necessity, forced to appear in his own behalf.

I think that Holland was entitled to a dismissal of the proceeding, without regard to technicalities. Apparently the suit was not dismissed because the proceeding would have failed since Holland was the only complainant who could qualify the action with the required amount of bonds; namely, $50,000. It appears that an effort had been made to introduce, hastily, intervenors in the action, representing, in the aggregate, some $7,500 of bonds; but with Holland out, the court could not take jurisdiction. The assertion of jurisdiction in this case seems to me to have been essentially arbitrary and tyrannical.

As recently as April 6, 1936, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of J. Edward Jones, petitioner, v. Securities and Exchange Commission, rendered a decision which is directly in point:

"The general rule is settled for the Federal tribunals that a plaintiff possesses the unqualified right to dismiss his complaint at law or his bill in equity unless some plain legal prejudice will result to the defendant other than the mere prospect of a second litigation upon the subject matter (Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Transportation Co., 171 U. S. 138, 145–146). In announcing the rule, this Court approved and cited as authority the decision rendered by Chief Justice Taft, then circuit judge, in Detroit v. Detroit City Ry. Co. (55 Fed. 569). The opinion in the latter case, reviewing the English and American authorities, states the rule as follows:

"It is very clear from an examination of the authorities."

"'It is very clear from an examination of the authorities, English and American, that the right of a complainant to dismiss his bill without prejudice, on payment of costs, was of course except in certain cases. * • The exception was where a

Wadleigh (11 Pet. 55, 61-62); Confiscation Cases (7 Wall. 457-458). The foregoing decisions, together with others, are reviewed in an opinion delivered by Chief Justice Taft in Ex parte Skinner & Eddy Corp. (265 U. S. 86), and the conclusion stated

as follows:
"The right to dismiss, if it exists, is absolute.

"The right to dismiss, if it exists, is absolute. It does not depend on the reasons which the plaintiff offers for his action. The fact that he may not have disclosed all his reasons or may not have given the real one cannot affect his right.

"The usual ground for denying a complainant in equity the right to dismiss his bill without prejudice at his own costs is that the cause has proceeded so far that the defendant is in a position to demand on the pleadings an opportunity to seek affirmative relief and he would be prejudiced by being remitted to a separate action. Having been put to the trouble of getting his counter case properly pleaded and ready, he may insist that the cause proceed to a decree."

The law and the testimony in this case convince me that the

The law and the testimony in this case convince me that the The law and the testimony in this case convince me that the plaintiff had the unqualified right to dismiss the bill. None of the categories described in the foregoing decisions of the highest Court of the land was present in this case. But a receiver was appointed, nevertheless. The weight of evidence seems to me to establish the fact of a conspiracy because each man who was a party to the effort to promote the receivership was recognized in the particular position which he expected to receive if the court took jurisdiction. Richardson was receiver; Metcalf was his attorney; Sweeny and Bemis ran the hotel, and Rankin continued to represent Holland, who had dismissed him as his attorney. Ritter represent Holland, who had dismissed him as his attorney.

had functioned perfectly.

One must judge these matters by the effect of men's actions in order to determine the motive. All that happened in this case was not mere coincidence. It was design.

The gift from Francis was not explained to my satisfaction. No honest judge should, for one moment, accept gifts of large amounts of cash or valuable things of any sort. The donor in this case may not have had an evil purpose. I grant that he had not, but that does not alter the standard which I think should not, but that does not alter the standard which I think should govern the judges of every court in the land. We get a picture of the mind of this respondent by one answer he gave. Senator Reynolds propounded this question to Judge Ritter: "Why did you accept a $7,500 gift from Mr. Francis?" Judge Ritter replied: "Why, I accepted it because it was a gift—he was a friend of mine—just the same as I would accept a gift from anybody." (The italics are mine.) Does not this answer betray a perverted state of mind for any man who wears the judicial ermine? Does not this give an illuminating view of the ethical standards which govern of mind for any man who wears the judicial ermine? Does not this give an illuminating view of the ethical standards which governed him? Would not the general acceptance of the practice of taking gifts "from anybody", which by every implication of Judge Ritter's answer, he considers proper, destroy all confidence in the administration of justice in our courts? I cannot, myself subscribe to any such theory or practice. If Judge Ritter would accept a gift "from anybody", how could he impartially discharge the duties of his high trust?

The Good Book says: "A gift doth blind the eyes of the wise and pervert the words of the righteous." (Deut. 16:19.)

This great truth from Holy Scripture has come down to us through the ages and is as definite a guide for human conduct as it was when first uttered.

through the ages and is as definite a guide for human conduct as it was when first uttered.

Good behavior, as it is used in the Constitution, exacts of a judge the highest standards of public and private rectitude. No judge can besmirch the robes he wears by relaxing these standards, by compromising them through conduct which brings reproach upon himself personally, or upon the great office he holds. No more sacred trust is committed to the bench of the United

No more sacred trust is committed to the bench of the United States than to keep shining with undimmed effulgence the brightest jewel in the crown of democracy—justice.

However disagreeable the duty may be to those of us who constitute this great body in determining the guilt of those who are entrusted under the Constitution with the high responsibilities of judicial office, we must be as exacting in our conception of the obligations of a judicial officer as Mr. Justice Cardozo defined them when he said in connection with fiduciaries that they should be when he said, in connection with fiduciaries, that they should be held "to something stricter than the morals of the market place. Not honesty alone, but the punctillio of an honor the most sensitive, is then the standard of behavior" (Meinhard v. Salmon, 249 N. Y 458).

REGISTRATION OF VOTERS IN PITTSBURGH AND ADMINISTRATION OF RELIEF

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, yesterday my colleague [Mr. Guffey] had printed in the Record an article from the Pittsburgh Press of April 14 concerning registration of voters in Pittsburgh.

My colleague stated that this article had been placed in the Record for my information. I was not unaware of the facts which he sought to call to my attention, because I was in Pittsburgh on Friday evening and heard these matters fully discussed.

My colleague seeks to inform me, according to his statement of yesterday, that the Democratic Party is now the majority party in the city of Pittsburgh for the first time since the Civil War. This, indeed, is not news to me. Having lived in Pittsburgh and vicinity most of my life, I have seen it go Republican regularly. However, as a matter of fact, I recall that there have been times before this when the city of Pittsburgh had two mayors belonging to the Democratic Party. Believing as I do in minority as well as majority representation, I have not taken exception to political circumstances of this kind.

I might also say, Mr. President, that we now have a Democratic mayor in the city of Pittsburgh.

My colleague asserts that the article in the Pittsburgh Press shows how the Republican lead in registration has been reduced. Having read the article carefully and observing the statistics given, I fail to see any explanation as to how the reduction in the Republican registration was accomplished. An article in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette of April 15 seeks to explain how the reclassification of voters is effected. I shall ask that this article, which will be of interest to the Senate generally, may be printed in the Record at the conclusion of my remarks.

I introduce this article in the RECORD with regret, for it reports rumors concerning Edward N. Jones, State supervisor of the W. P. A. in Pennsylvania, which I do not wish to believe true, because Mr. Jones and I have been friends for many years. When he came to Washington for confirmation of his appointment to his present post I urged him to take care of the relief needs of our State and to keep politics out of relief. We have known each other for years and are friends. I feel that partisan politics have no place in relief and that rumors of activities of that kind are injurious to a man's political reputation. I believe that those against whom these charges are being made in the newspapers deserve to be heard before a regularly appointed Senate committee. I do not believe that the floor of the Senate is the proper place for a consideration of these issues, because more adequate provision can be had in committee hearings. These are matters of public business which require consideration in a thoroughgoing way and should not be left to the discretion or indiscretion of back-stairs gossip.

Newspapermen have informed me that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, in whose hands authorization of an appropriation for an investigation of these matters has been committed, has decided to take no action in this matter. Knowing the high character of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the chairman of that committee, I cannot believe that this is true, else he would have so informed me. I have been led to believe that action has been delayed only temporarily. If this is not the case, I should appreciate a direct statement concerning the interment of the proposed investigation

I have no personal feeling on these issues. I desire to injure the reputation of no one. Public welfare is the deep concern of all of us. Public welfare demands that relief and work relief be continued, that they be purged from partisan politics, and the taxpayer's dollar be used as effectively as possible. In an election year I believe that charges and counter charges of misuse of relief money for political purposes deserve more consideration than on the front pages of our newspapers. If conditions in the Works Progress Administration are as they should be, those who administer this program should not object to an impartial investigation. If conditions in the Works Progress Administration are half as bad as current rumors indicate, an investigation should be authorized at once.

The only justification of an investigation of relief agencies is to discover practical ways of using Government appropriations to the best possible advantage of the taxpayers of this

Mr. President, I now ask that the article from the Pittsburg (Pa.) Post-Gazette of April 15, 1936, to which I have referred, may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Post-Gazette of Apr. 15, 1936] PROBE BARES JONES TERROR RULE IN W. P. A.—WORKERS HELD PAWNS OF STATE MACHINE DIRECTOR—"SYSTEM" EXPLAINED—RECLASSIFICA-TION PLAN GIVES POLITICIANS FULL CONTROL OF JOBS

The methods by which policial terrorism was exercised on W. P. A. workers to drive them into line to establish a Democratic ajority in Pittsburgh's registration were disclosed yesterday. These facts came to light as Federal Works Progress Administrator Harry L. Hopkins' private investigators were reported yesterday to have obtained information linking high Democratic officials with the forcing of political backs on the W. P. A. pay

The "system" perfected by Eddie Jones, ex-police superintendent and political aide of various Republican and Democratic leaders over a period of years, takes the question of the livelihood of W. P. A. workers out of the hands of the theoretically nonpolitical Federal-State employment agency and puts it directly Eddie's control.

HOW THE SYSTEM WORKS

It isn't done with the aid of mirrors. It is done through what is known as a "reclassification board" that takes over the list of names of needy men when the project they are working on runs

Under the surface of the W. P. A., the "reclassification board", Eddie's own appointed group, holds sole control over whether a W. P. A. laborer gets on another project soon or at all.

The system of W. P. A. runs like this:

When a man goes first on a W. P. A. job, his name is taken from the relief rolls through the agency of the Federal-State employment agency. There the names are supposed to be picked by lot. There have been reports that Jones and his aides sometimes had something to do with the picking, as at the time, the day before last fall's general election, when 1,300 colored voters from the hill were picked, shipped to a project where there were no tools, brought back and given a "holiday" with pay on election day.

GO INTO JONES' CONTROL

But in theory the political W. P. A. staff doesn't have anything to do with picking these men. So Republicans do get on W. P. A. jobs. That was apparent Monday, when they were blackjacketed into coming into the registration office and changing to Democrats. These men selected by lot go out on their W. P. A. jobs. The project they are working on runs for a while and then ends. And then the names don't go back to the Federal-State agency lists to then the names don't go back to the Federal-State agency lists to be picked by lot again.

They go instead to Eddie Jones' hand-picked "reclassification board", answerable to Eddie and no one else—unless Hopkins decides ultimately to look into the State's political rule in W. P. A. If the "reclassification board" approves, the workers go to another project. If it doesn't approve, the workers can go—somewhere else, so far as Eddie is concerned. They might get back on relief, if they can.

REGISTRATION CHECKED

It is when they reach the "reclassification board" that the registration of workers is looked up, if they haven't been checked

With that kind of a system, Pittsburgh "went Democratic" Monday. It day. It went Democratic under protest, but the protests weren't very loud. They weren't loud enough to reach the ears of the political bosses who rule W. P. A.

ADDRESS BY SIR WILMOTT LEWIS AT ANNUAL LUNCHEON OF ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, on yesterday in the city of New York, at the annual luncheon of the Associated Press, Sir Wilmott Lewis, the American correspondent of the London Times, delivered a brilliant and penetrating address on the press. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I inquire if the address referred to comes within the rule which has been suggested

Mr. MINTON. I will say to the Senator that it does. It will take less than two pages of the RECORD. I have consulted the Printing Office about it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not mean that rule. I mean the rule-unless I am in error, and I hope the Senator will correct me if I am—that nothing shall be placed in the RECORD except that which is said by our own citizens. Is there any such rule? If there is not, I make no objection.

Mr. MINTON. I know of no such rule. If there is, the request is clearly out of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not clear about it. I make no objection particularly because of the gentleman who delivered the address, although I do not think it is a very good practice to regale ourselves in the RECORD with the remarks of those from other countries.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of Apr. 21, 1936]

Text of Address by Sir Willmott Lewis, American Correspondent for the London Times, at the Annual Luncheon of the Asso-

This year the Associated Press has chosen to draw two men from the writing craft to be its speakers on this occasion, and I am honored to be one of them. In the presence of so large and distinguished a group of publishers and editors it might be fitting that I adopt what Sydney Smith said bishops desired of their curates—a "dropping-down deadness of manner"—but I make no pretense to assume it. We know that our press is free, and this afternoon let us believe that every writer such as I am is also free to give his testimony "without fear or favor, affection or ill will", as the English oath demands of a witness. I shall not burden you with praise of yourselves as individuals, or with eulogy of the great organization (the greatest of its kind known to me) which you collectively represent. The cat has looked at the king, and his majesty long since found favor in the sight of the cat.

We have been told that the duty of the newspaper is to comfort the afflicted, and to afflict the comfortable. I heartily agree. Today, when economic science, so-called, seems unable to grapple with the problems of the poor, when the comfortable among us are tempted to consider their own security as the first and indispensable element of general progress, when the question of all questions—within nations and between nations—is whether the remedies for the ills we suffer may not be as unbearable as the ills themselves—today, if ever, the injunction of Finley Peter Dunne should be remembered.

TRILOBITES TREATED NEW IDEAS HARSHLY

Let me offer you an apologue borrowed from an English scholar. Once upon a time, much longer than 6,000 years ago, the trilobites—small marine organisms now extinct—were the only people that had eyes, and they were only just beginning to use them, and some even of the trilobites had as yet no signs of coming sight. So that the utmost they could know was that they were living in darkness and that perhaps there was such a thing as light. But at last one of them, more advanced than his fellows, happened to come to the surface of the water in the davfellows, happened to come to the surface of the water in the day-time, and he saw the sun.

So he went down and told the others that in general the world was light, but that there was one great light which caused it all. Then they killed him for disturbing the commonwealth, but later they came to consider it implous to doubt that in general the world was light and that there was one great light which caused world was light and that there was one great light which caused it all. And they had great disputes about the manner in which they had come to know this. Afterward another of them, advanced beyond his fellows, happened to come to the top of the water in the nighttime and saw the stars. So he went down and told the others that in general the world was dark, but that, nevertheless, there was a great number of little lights in it. Then they slew him also for maintaining false doctrines. But from that they they was division amount them. that time there was division among them, some maintaining one thing and some the other.

When all could see, there was perhaps an end of the matter, though I do not know whether at any time all trilobites could see. Nor do I know whether the peoples of the English-speaking nations, who are lifted to a level incredibly above that of the trilobites—and with whom I am exclusively concerned this afternoon—can yet see with that sight which is better than bodily vision.

TOLERATION TODAY FOUND A HARD DISCIPLINE

It is true that no longer, as once, do we kill the bearers of contradictory or unwelcome tidings, but the toleration we now practice is a hard discipline, a lesson to be learned anew with each generation. This brings me to the press, which is the life of all of us, and it is of the press as the servant of toleration, and thus as the servant of democracy, that I would speak here. We must put the servant of democracy, that I would speak here. We must put toleration and democracy together, for without the one the other would be unworkable. And we must put toleration first, for until it had been learned, and institutions had been made (as were yours) or adapted (as in my country) to its uses and enlargement, democracy could not live. We know that absolutism and intolerance or together but do we allowed or encountry to the country. democracy could not live. We know that absolutism and intolerance go together, but do we always or enough remember that power, even though it be short of absolutism, is the enemy of toleration? Having asked the question, let me turn to a wise and understanding student of the minds and conduct of men, Graham Wallas, who described the poston of the press as "now the most inschible replication of the press as "now the most insoluble problem of democracy."

Why? Because, said Wallas, as long as his newspapers pay, and the telephone from his house to the editorial offices is in working order, the owner of a group of papers has more absolute irresponsibility in the use of great power than any other living man. If he is to use his power in a way helpful to the community he must aim at the two virtues, veracity and seriousness—that is to say, the more obvious virtue of taking trouble to secure that his belief is well founded. But nothing in his position, says Wallas, or in the qualities necessary to reach that position, encourages either of these virtues; and the anonymous writers whom he hires to carry out his orders have neither the personal independence of artists nor the public responsibility of experts.

I am speaking as an Englishman of England, and I say to you in all seriousness that Graham Wallas was guilty of no exaggeration. There are in the conditions of English life the elements which make this concentration of power possible—a little island, thickly populated, provided with all the modern agencies of distribution, where circulation can be, and is, national rather than regional.

NEWSPAPER OWNERSHIP "PLUTOCRACY" SUGGESTED

This has brought into existence a sort of plutocracy of newspaper ownership, metropolitan and provincial, such as I do not believe to exist anywhere else. And it leads me gravely to doubt whether the freedom of the press, in that sense of the phrase which makes it precious to us, can without serious adjustment be long allowed to cover such a condition. Remember that the day on which Macaulay pointed to the reporters' gallery and declared that there would be found a fourth estate is infinitely remote from us. The press is no longer fourth in the hierarchy of national powers—it is hardly less than the first in the sweep and continuity of its influence. It is "affected with a public interest" to a degree greater even than a common carrier, for it does not transport the bodies or the goods of men; it plays ceaselessly on the minds of men. "Few episodes in recent history are more poignant", said Walter Lippmann in a little book he published in 1920, "than that of the British Prime Minister, sitting at the breakfast table with that morning's paper before him, protesting that he cannot do the sensible thing in regard to Russia because a powerful newspaper publisher has drugged the public." And

Mr. Lippmann has my heartfelt, my passionate agreement when he adds that the incident is a photograph of the supreme danger which confronts popular government, because the news is the chief source of opinion by which government in democratic countries must proceed.

I feel it to be peculiarly fitting that I should speak of these things here, because I am addressing the members of a great organization whose purpose is not private profit but the provision of a service of news, foreign and domestic, which shall be not only full but utterly impartial, and whose record is a source of justifiable pride. I have spoken of my own country, and have no desire or intent to invite comparison with yours. But this I can say—I hope without indiscretion—that both in England and the United States the danger which confronts what we call freedom of the press is not chiefly from without, for that we can meet, but from within. It is, as I see it, a danger which grows with the growth and with the increasing integration of the newspaper system—the danger that the freedom which makes us great and useful may make some among us too great, that individuals may acquire a power which, if the freedom we demand is to be ours, they cannot be prevented from harnessing in the service of personal ambition power which, if the freedom we demand is to be ours, they cannot be prevented from harnessing in the service of personal ambition rather than of the community from which their strength flows. We are all of us, each in his place and degree, among the guardians of freedom, but "quid custodiet ipsos custodes?" asked the stern old Roman—who shall guard your own guards? I beg you earnestly to believe that these doubts are not mine alone, but that they preoccupy the minds of innumerable men within my own craft, which is that of writer, not publisher.

FEARS EXERCISE OF WILL INSTEAD OF JUDGMENT

Something of what I and my colleagues mean is to be found in one of Alexander Hamilton's Federalist papers, on the subject of the judicature, where he dwelt upon the possibility that judges might "exercise will instead of judgment."

He could not see what the press was to become, but he was speaking prophetically to the most powerful among us. Nor, when he wrote, was there anything to show him that, in a country chiefly agricultural and whose industries he was anxious to advance there would arise a corporate structure so vast and so potent as one day to demand no less than a reexamination of the ultimate problem of political economy—the problem of the relation of private property to public welfare. There has never lived, and there will never be born, a man wise and good enough to be entrusted with the irresponsible power over human thought, and the action that follows thought, which ownership of many newspapers conveys in the modern world, and the freedom to exercise it in the service of his own interests. To say that his interests might also be those of the community is to say something which might be episodically true, but cannot be generally true, it is to forget human pride and human weakness and to break with history. break with history.

RESPONSIBILITY OF PRESS IN INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

To speak as I have spoken is, I frankly admit, to raise more argumentative hares than can be run down in a year of discussion, but so it has always been when such questions as the rights of property or the uses of freedom have been raised. Even if there were no such problem as I have suggested, there would be others as compelling, chief among which I should put the part played, or rightly to be played, by the press in the relationship of nations.

tionship of nations.

There was a time when peoples did not like each other because they were strangers. How is it that today they do not like each There was a time when peoples and not like each other because they were strangers. How is it that today they do not like each other when there is so amazing a daily diffusion of international consciousness? Is that that they know too much, or that they do not yet know enough, of each other? Here, to a degree which would make a man humble, responsibility falls on the foreign correspondent. If I may be pardoned a personal reference, I should like to say that after living in many lands, and for many years in this, I have come to see that a man's vision of a country not his own is like the reverse side of a brocade—all the threads are there, but not the sublety of color and design. When this is so of men trained by travel and experience, how should it not be so of the myriad readers whose minds are daily divided between a hundred imperfect images, none of which can be even approximately realized? It does not appear that the thinking capacity of the job is enlarging, but it is obvious that the demands upon it multiply indefinitely; and a witty friend of mine has said that mental culture reverses the process of agriculture and passes from the intensive to the extensive, going to seed over a wider and wider area, regardless of the fertility or infertility of the soil.

All this leads nowhere, or only to one point—that man may be area, regardless of the fertility or infertility of the soil.

All this leads nowhere, or only to one point—that man may be smaller than his own aspirations, but should not be allowed to forget them. The press may be a daily reminder of all or some that is best in the world, and will be if it is true to a great tradition of toleration, which is not the smallest part of its heritage. The newspapers of today are not in all hands free but where they still have liberty and defend it—against enemies without and within—where they stand for discussion and agreement, setting themselves unbreakely against the regimentation of custom and of obedience unbreakably against the regimentation of custom and of obedience by goose-step, even the cynic may find a place for hope.

PRINCIPLES OF JEFFERSON-ADDRESS BY GOVERNOR EARLE, OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Hon. George H. Earle, Governor of Pennsylvania, at the Jefferson

The principle of human rights laid down by Thomas Jefferson are felt and feared in every branch of our national life today. They are felt through the medium of Jefferson's great Democratic successor, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and they are feared by the rich and powerful enemies our President has made. Fortunately for America, the principles of Jefferson are in the ascendancy today.

for America, the principles of Jefferson are in the ascendancy today. Thomas Jefferson believed in a government of the people, dedicated to their welfare and responsive to their needs. He was oposed by the powerful financial interests of the Federalist Party, led by Alexander Hamilton, a man who considered the people too stupid to rule themselves. We have seen Jefferson's theory of government triumph, but, unfortunately for America, we have not seen the end of the Hamiltonians. They still exist in the present leadership of the Republican Party—a menace to Democrats and Republicans alike; above all, a menace to the future of the American system of representative government. And I believe their greatest menace lies in their control of 80 percent of the American greatest menace lies in their control of 80 percent of the American press.

Jefferson believed in the freedom of the press. But even with his broad vision he did not foresee that a time would come when the press, as a frankly money-making institution, would sell its constitutional birthright for financial support and a few dollars' worth of advertising. He had his difficulties with the publishers of his day, because the Tories then held the money bags, just as they do now, but to his mind any such wholesale betrayal of public trust for private gain as we find in the press today would have been unthinkable. unthinkable.

I think it would be well for us to refresh our minds with Thomas Jefferson's own comment on attempts of the press to hamstring his administration's efforts to provide real democratic government in the new Nation. I quote from his second inaugural

"During this course of administration, and in order to disturb Thring this course of administration, and in order to disturb it, the artillery of the press has been leveled against us, charged with whatsoever its licentiousness could devise or dare. These abuses of an institution so important to freedom and science are deeply to be regretted, inasmuch as they tend to lessen its useful-ness, and to sap its safety; they might, indeed, have been cor-rected by the wholesome punishments reserved and provided by the laws of the several States against falsehood and defamation; but public duties more urgent press on the time of public servants, and the offenders have, therefore, been left to find their punish-but public duties more urgent press on the time of public servants, and the offenders have, therefore, been left to find their punishment in the public indignation."

I speak particularly of this phase of Jeffersonian democracy because of a recent exchange of letters which I had, as Governor of the Commonwealth, with the editor of the Saturday Evening Post. I had read with interest a series of articles upon relief in Pennsylvania, signed by my former relief director, Robert L. Johnson. Since these articles had omitted certain pertinent facts, which Mr. Johnson hardly could have been expected to include, I asked Mr. George Horace Lorimer, in the interest of fair play, to allow me sufficient space to reply to Mr. Johnson.

I had noted, for instance, that Mr. Johnson's articles spoke of a loss of $7,000,000, resulting from the abandoning of the local works division of the relief administration. It occurred to me that the readers of the Saturday Evening Post should be informed that Mr. Johnson, in a fit of pique because he had not been appointed Works Progress administrator, deliberately abandoned the L. W. D. without consulting the relief board, myself, or the new W. P. A. administrator. Mr. Johnson said this "wasted" $7,000,000 just as surely as if he had used the money "to light a cigar." I thought it should be pointed out that Mr. Johnson's act, rash and childish as it was, had hardly resulted in a "loss" of $7,000,000, but rather had merely provided a few dollars more per person for the thousands of unfortunates who were being transferred from relief to W. P. A.

I had also observed with some surprise that the articles signed. to W. P. A.

I had also observed with some surprise that the articles signed by Mr. Johnson spoke bitterly of political interference, but at the same time admitted that Harry Hopkins and I, the only two persons having any authority over him, had backed him 100 percent in keeping politics out of relief. It seemed that Mr. Johnson was simply complaining about the suggestions made to him by persons simply complaining about the suggestions made to him by persons not in authority—and as I remember the last legislative session that advice came from Republican as well as Democratic legislators and political leaders. I was even more surprised by Mr. Johnson's complaints because at a farewell dinner given by Mr. Johnson to me and the members of my cabinet he had publicly commended David L. Lawrence, Democratic State chairman, and all my cabinet members for their policy of noninterference with relief.

I speak at some length of Mr. Johnson's articles because I consider relief for too important a problem to be confused and distorted

I speak at some length of Mr. Johnson's articles because I consider relief far too important a problem to be confused and distorted for partisan purposes, and also because I was frankly shocked to find that the editor of the Saturday Evening Post, with his pretensions to impartiality, was unwilling to give the Governor of his own State an opportunity to clarify a situation affecting not only Pennsylvania but the country as a whole. I had not believed he would dare to make such a public confession of partisan bias. Apart from that, I had not dreamed that he would be afraid to have his articles on relief subjected to the test of comparison with the facts as I proposed to present them.

Let no one misunderstand me. I have no bitterness against Mr.

Lorimer for his hit-and-run policies. Rather I am grateful to Day dinner at the William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh, on Tuesday, April 14, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

The principle of human rights laid down by Thomas Jefferson are felt and feared in every branch of our national life today. not been for President Roosevelt's recovery measures Mr. Lorimer would have no magazine at all today.

not been for President Roosevelt's recovery measures Mr. Lorimer would have no magazine at all today.

One-way journalism, whether in the Saturday Evening Post or anywhere else, is not going to solve our relief problem. Our State emergency relief administrator estimates that Pennsylvania will need $70,500,000 to carry us to the end of the year. Some of our Republican friends are already complaining that the figure is too high. They made the same complaint last year, giving the State only $60,000,000, instead of the $120,000,000 I recommended; and as a result of their short-sighted political manipulation of relief, we are now compelled to have a special session do the work the Republican senate refused to do last year.

Reactionary interests and their spokesmen have been complaining bitterly against Federal relief expenditures. Let me give you this picture: We are now spending $8,000,000 a month in Pennsylvania for direct relief. The Federal Government is spending $20,000,000 a month on W. P. A. If the Federal Government disbanded W. P. A. and threw those workers back on direct State relief, we would have to pay $14,000,000 a month more to keep them, or a total of $22,000,000 a month. You can get some idea of what a colossal amount that is by considering that the pet Republican 2-percent flat income tax, which would be a tax on the income of every worker in Pennsylvania, would yield only $10,000,000 a year every worker in Pennsylvania, would yield only $10,000,000 a year-enough to pay relief costs for about 2 weeks.

The Saturday Evening Post and the other bitter enemies of The Saturday Evening Post and the other bitter enemies of President Roosevelt are not going to help themselves or anyone else by peevish attacks upon the relief system. They may as well make up their minds that we are going to have relief with us forever unless we solve the problem of unemployment in our machine age. They can talk about Budget balancing until the cows come home, but until that problem is solved the choice is going to be between unbalanced budgets and revolution.

Our relief problem is bound up with the entire problem of the machine age. I recall that we had hard times in the winters of 1912 and 1913, because I stood on a Chicago street every night of 1912 and 1913, because I stood on a Chicago street every night of that winter from October to May, in charge of a bread line. We served food to 800 men a night—men who had no work and no means of support. They were the advance guard of what has grown to be America's vast army of men "replaced by machines."

We escaped a showdown with the machine age back in 1912 and 1913 because the European war was beginning and orders were pouring in for war materials. Then we entered the war and there was work for everybody. Afterward there was inflation caused by our newly acquired European gold, seeking safe investment. That expanded our investment markets and gave us a boom and carried us right up to 1929. Then the bubble of inflation burst.

Before 1912 we had already explored and exploited our resources.

Before 1912 we had already explored and exploited our resources. Our frontier days were over. There was no more room for expansion. The machine had helped tremendously in building up our country, but when its pioneer work was ended it became a Frankenstein monster that turned to destroy us.

Frankenstein monster that turned to destroy us.

If we had been forced to a show-down with the machine age in 1912, the problem would have been simpler, because at that time we did not have the tremendous development of the machine that we have today.

When the Roosevelt administration came into office, facing the greatest economic collapse in American history, the President developed a double-barreled program, one part to provide for the immediate emergency and the other to meet the problem of the machine.

The most important measure in the President's long-term program, and to my mind the greatest law ever written, was the N. R. A. Regulation of codes and trade practices to a great extent obscured the fundamental principle of that law—the principle of Federal control necessary to establish higher wages and shorter working hours. That principle was and is, in my opinion, our only salvation.

The Supreme Court on purely legalistic grounds destroyed the N. R. A. and gave us nothing to replace it. As a result we see all about us one of the most ominous developments of our modern times. You may have read how the Bell Telephone Co., while its profits and business were steadily increasing, was able to dismiss profits and business were steadily increasing, was able to dismiss more than 120,000 people because of the automatic dial system. You may have heard, too, of the new cotton-picking machine, which enables 2 men to do the work of 50. With such developments in mind, can you wonder that our present cycle of recovery has not brought with it a corresponding increase in employment? The machine has definitely retired millions of our workers, who will remain retired and on relief until we shorten hours and raise

I warn you that if we shut off relief and fail to meet the challenge

I warn you that if we shut off relief and fail to meet the challenge of the machine we face revolution, because empty stomachs do not reason. President Roosevelt provided a solution in the N. R. A. and saw that solution destroyed by the Supreme Court.

I admit honestly that except for raising wages and shortening hours I know no answer. On the one hand, if we continue to spend colossal sums for relief we drift toward bankruptcy. On the other, if we shut off relief and let our people starve we return to barbarism and plunge our country into revolution. The only certain thing is that we must control the machine before it destroys us all; and to do that I believe we must continue to look to the wisdom and the courage of the man who has brought us this far along the road to recovery. He has given us one solution which the Supreme Court has taken away. Were it not for this great American I would fear for the future of our country. But under the leadership of Franklin Delano Roosevelt our country will find a way.

ISSUES OF THE IMPENDING CAMPAIGN-ADDRESS BY HON. JAMES A. FARLEY AT PITTSFIELD, MASS.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Hon. James A. Farley, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, at a meeting of the Democratic organizations of four western Massachusetts counties, at Pittsfield, Mass., on Thursday evening, April 16, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

printed in the Record, as Iollows:

It's always a pleasure to talk to such an audience as this. I know of no city where I could expect a more intelligent response to a plain talk on the issues of the impending campaign which vitally affect the prosperity of the country. Yours is a manufacturing city and as such depends to a great degree on the demands of other sections of the country, particularly the great West and Southwest and Northwest, for the goods made in New England mills. If the farmers of this country are in a position to buy, their purchasing capacity is reflected in the pay rolls and balance sheets of your industrial establishments. If, on the contrary, the farm section is bankrupt, or nearly bankrupt, its misfortune is echoed by your own statistics of unemployment and general business paralysis.

ness paralysis.

We have had during the past few years an actual demonstration of this mutual dependence. Suppose we go back 4 years. I do not like to stir up unhappy memories, but you must all recall the period when a tornado of foreclosing mortgages was sweeping the agrarian belt and the producing establishments of this part of the world either were closing entirely or running on part time; when you did not know whether the strongest bank in your community would be able to keep its doors open; when taking a check was a gamble and mailing a check was a hazard. For you could not tell from day to day whether on the morrow those checks could be cashed or not.

I only ask you to contrast that time of gloom with the present.

could be cashed or not.

I only ask you to contrast that time of gloom with the present. The Yankee mills and shops, stores and hotels, may not be making as much money as they would wish, but compare their balance sheets of today with that other time, and I think you will conceive a reason to be grateful, not only for your own but for the Nation's advance in the progress toward general prosperity.

We all know that the change was not due to chance. We are all aware that had there not been a change in the policies of Government when Franklin D. Roosevelt came to the White House this country would have reached a situation in comparison with which the distress and economic disorder of the years from the fall of 1929 to 1933 would have seemed trivial.

You will perhaps remember that an eminent spokesman for the old order prophesied in a campaign speech in 1932 that if the old order prophesied in a campaign speech in 1932 that if the policies of his administration were interrupted by the election of the Governor of New York to the Presidency grass would grow in the streets of our great cities and that ruin would rule over our the streets of our great cities and that ruin would rule over our whole great country.

Now we are being told by the same high Republican authority, by spokesmen of the Du Pont Liberty League and others of the same fraternity, that if the policies that have brought business back to a prosperous scale are not abandoned that again our industrial sections will become cow pastures, and so forth.

We read every day or hear over the radio these political Jeremiahs explaining that business recovery has not come because of the New Deal but in spite of it. We hear from the same sources mans explaining that business recovery has not come because of the New Deal but in spite of it. We hear from the same sources that the President of the United States is bent on changing this democratic form of government to a Russian Soviet system or to a dictatorship. They also tell us that he is bent on abolishing the Supreme Court, throwing the Constitution out of the window, regimenting every form of industry and agriculture, and, in short, doing everything in his power to destroy the prosperity which he brought about doing everything in his power to destroy the prosperity which he brought about.

I need not take your time in discussing the wildness and absurdity of such campaign arguments. Actually they are of no more consequence than when Washington was accused of trying to set up a kingdom with himself as monarch, when Jefferson was blackguarded as a Communist, when Lincoln was charged with usurping power that did not belong to the Presidency, when Cleveland was abused, and when Theodore Roosevelt was pilloried as an enemy to business and an advocate of socialistic philosophy.

You can hardly pick up a newspaper nowadays without being startled by the conflict between its opinion columns and its business columns and the inconsistency of those who are assailing the administration at Washington. Just for example, I noted the other day in the New York Times the story of the annual report of Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., president of General Motors Corporation, directed to his stockholders. I noticed a large headline, "Sloan finds trade hurt by New Deal", and just below it on the very same page was printed the financial statement of General Motors. That financial statement recited that in 1935 its net sales amounted to $1,155,000,000, as against $872,675,000 the year before. It was also set forth in this cold-nosed balance sheet that its net income amounted to nearly $197,000,000 in the year of 1935, as against $110,000,000 for the year 1934. The report shows assets of about $150,000,000 more than in the previous year. If you want a more dramatic exposition of what the New Deal has meant to General Motors, compare its $197,000,000 net income for 1935 with its net

Motors, compare its $197,000,000 net income for 1935 with its net income of $165,000 reported in 1932.

I do not pick out this particular business incident because Mr. Sloan is a large contributor to the Liberty League or because General Motors is to a large extent a Du Pont corporation, but simply because it is a shining example of how little relationship there exists between the political expression of those who would abolish the New Deal and the plain facts as they are told on the financial exists between the political expression of those who would abolish the New Deal and the plain facts as they are told on the financial pages of the newspapers.

I think that no better comment could be made as to this than that voiced by one of your home newspapers. The Berkshire Eagle put it in this language:

"To be perfectly frank, it is not easy to see what the term 'abolishing the New Deal' means. Everything that is going on now is a part of it—the whole vast system under which we are living, the camps, the banks, the loans, the municipal expenditures, the new modes of law enforcement, the advice from Washington—everything. To attack the New Deal may be justified on political grounds, of course, but what is there to be done about it? What particular part of the system ought to be abolished? Should we throw it out the window and start all over again? That would involve the repeal of endless laws and the work of years in readjustment. Has someone something better to offer? Disraeli gave excellent advice when he said, 'Let us define our terms.' A great many of the politicians, using the name loosely, do not seem to know exactly what it means." (Oct. 26, 1935.)

I would like to ask our political opponents, when they speak of abolishing the New Deal, just what particular element of the governmental policies they would like to do away with? I can find no answer to this in the various speeches emanating from candidates for the Republican Presidential nomination, from the Liberty Leaguers or from the heads of the Republican national organization, voluminous and violent as all these have been.

Would the Republican administration, in the event of the success of the enterprise to discredit and unseat President Roosevelt, abolish, for example, the law providing for the insurance of bank deposits?

abolish, for example, the law providing for the insurance of bank abolish, for example, the law providing for the insurance of bank deposits?

This is, of course, really a rhetorical question, because there is no more chance of the election of a Republican President next November than there is that your Berkshire Hills should move into some adjoining State. I speak advisedly when I tell you that President Roosevelt will be supported this year as vigorously and completely as he was in 1932, and this is as good a place as any to remark that it makes no difference whether the "old dealers" take the logical course of naming Herbert Hoover as the standard-bearer, who best represents their principles, or Governor Landon, of Kansas, who has not yet taken the country into his confidence as to what his policies would be if he were translated to Washington, or mournful Colonel Knox, the Chicago publisher, or anybody else who has been suggested as the candidate to contest with President Roosevelt this year.

Now, let me get back to the questions I would ask—with no hope of their being answered—of our political adversaries.

Now, let me get back to the questions I would ask—with no hope of their being answered—of our political adversaries.

Would they abolish the public-works program, or the emergency employment program, which they are fond of describing as the "boondoggling" bureau, or the emergency relief? Incidentally, what they call "boondoggling" saved the homes and farms of a good many of your neighbors during the recent floods, for it was the dams erected under the Works Progress Administration that kept the torrents from ravaging the fields to the northeast of this community. Given a continuance of its effort, and the fulfillment community. Given a continuance of its effort, and the fulfillment of the general plan to check soil erosion and control our rivers, even such a flood as afflicted this country a month ago will be rendered harmless even such a flood as afflicted this country a month ago will be rendered harmless.

The work of the C. C. C. boys and the W. P. A. people in helping the flood sufferers clear up the debris and minimize the damage has been so prompt and efficient that the whole of the flood areas testify to the value of that performance. Incidentally, the way your neighbors faced the disaster is just another example of Yankee courage. They wasted no time in whining, but buckled to the work of rehabilitation and restoration. That evidence of fortitude so characteristic of your people is one more reason for my confidence of your faith in President Roosevelt. Brave men appreciate brave men, and I think you will agree with me that it was the courage of our President that enabled him to tackle perhaps the toughest situation that has ever confronted a Chief Executive of our country boldly and firmly. I wonder if any of you have ever thought what the consequence to the United States would have been if 1932 had ushered in a President weak, vacillating, or hesitating, instead of one who recognized the magnitude of the job and dared do the things necessary to stem the flood of disaster and put this country again on the upward path.

The enemy spokesmen are fond of quoting a paragraph in the Democratic platform of 1932 which promised a stable currency. Well, will our assailants kindly tell us what money unit throughout the whole world is more stable than the American dollar today?

Would they restore the gold content of the dollar to the old.

Would they restore the gold content of the dollar to the old

Now, I do not pretend to be a monetary expert. I confess that I must take the arguments of the men who have studied this question and merely apply what common sense I may possess to their conclusions. I do know that when Great Britain went off the gold standard it had a hideous effect on business in this counthe gold standard it had a hideous effect on business in this country for 2 years before we made a corresponding change in our currency. The new price of gold made possible the adjustment of American foreign trade to the prevailing international conditions; it facilitated the striking recovery in agricultural prices. Because of it, American foreign trade has been enabled to stage an increase of 42 percent in exports and 57 percent in imports between 1932 and 1935.

and 1935.

Now, what would happen if we went back to the old standard? The experts tell me that it would mean first that the Treasury would suffer a loss of more than $4,000,000,000 on its present gold holdings, thereby adding this sum to the Federal deficit. A vast amount of foreign capital has been invested in American securities since the dollar was revalued in 1934. If we turned a back somersault with our monetary system, we would be making these foreign investments a free gift of 69 percent. And this sort of thing could not go on very long before the question might again be raised of the ability of the United States regaining the gold standard. standard.

Here's another question I would like to ask the critics of the administration. Would they abolish the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which has saved more than a million homes from Corporation, which has saved more than a million homes from foreclosure of mortgages, or the farm credit arrangements which have enabled more than half a million farmers to retain their property, and this without any considerable cost to the Government as the properties involved are the security for the loans?

Would they abolish the policy of insisting that promoters of security sales must state just what the values are, what the prospects are behind the stocks and bonds they offer in the markets? And the other insurance that this measure gives to the investing public? It might be worthwhile in this connection to recite that there has not been a wildcat scandal in the stock market since the Roosevelt administration came in, and as part of the same thesis we might recite that, whereas in the 4 years of the Hoover administration there were thousands of national bank failures, under the Roosevelt administration only five national banks have closed their doors, and practically all of the depositors in those five were reimbursed under the bank-deposit insurance provisions.

tional banks have closed their doors, and practically all of the depositors in those five were reimbursed under the bank-deposit insurance provisions.

I have not noted that anybody on the other side has come out definitely for a repeal of any of these laws. All we have had from the other side is a deluge of generalities. They talk about waste and extravagance; they talk about undermining the Constitution, and baldly declare that the relief expenditures are being manipulated for political purposes.

It is most probable that in distributing billions of dollars in relief there have been some instances of people getting as a donation a side of bacon or a few pounds of flour which they might have been able to pay for. It is not beyond belief that in the millions of jobs provided to give people employment and so save them from humiliation and from incurring the habit of charity, an occasional shirker has not given a full day's work for his relief pay. I think most of us will agree that while such instances are deplorable there is nothing about them either in number or intent that seriously blemishes the record of having kept a multitude from starvation, assuming that several million people would have starved calmly and peacefully—which is a pretty violent assumption.

Anybody who has listened to the passionate oratory of those who would detract from the shining record of courage, ability, and efficiency made by this administration, might suppose that the money spent in relief had been burned in bales or cast into the ocean. Instead of that, it has gone through purchase of supplies and wages paid into the regular channels of trade. It has been turned over and over and most, if not all of it, continues to figure in the record of prosperity which the newspapers constantly publish. It is to be found in the increased deposits in the banks, and these deposits go out in the ordinary course of business to finance industrial enterprises.

As to the political side of it, I know of no instance where any man

As to the political side of it, I know of no instance where any man or woman was asked whether he was Republican or Democrat when he was placed on the relief rolls. It so happens that people get just as hungry in a campaign year as in any other year, and consequently the relief is going on now as it went on last year and the year before. The only difference lies in such modifications as result from the constant effort to find useful jobs for the unemployed and to get off the relief rolls everybody who is able to support himself and his constant effort to find useful jobs for the characteristic off the relief rolls everybody who is able to support himself and his family.

They talk of politics in connection with the relief funds. The State administrations have in nearly every instance done their own distributing. Governor Landon's State of Kansas participated in the direct relief money given or loaned by the Federal Government to the extent of $43,326,367. Herbert Hoover's State of California was aided to the extent of $163,793,363. Senator Vandenberg's State of Michigan shared to the amount of $116,236,999. Senator Dickinson's Iowa has had $25,952,836 as its share. Colonel Knox's Illinois gratefully accepted $211,286,471, and Senator Borahi Knox's Illinois gratefully accepted $211,286,471, and Senator Vangement Borahi Knox's

Among the generalities of criticism constantly being charged against the administration is that the Government is in business, to the detriment of private industry. The Government is in business just to the extent that the inability of business to take care of itself compels. Every time the R. F. C. makes a loan to a bank or railroad or corporation or a private enterprise the Government goes into business. It might be well to record here that the R. F. C.'s activities have been anything but detrimental to the national finances. The loans are being paid back more rapidly than they were issued. The last figures I heard were that the R. F. C., on such a balance sheet as would be prepared for any going concern, showed a hundred million dollars in assets over its liabilities. Would, I ask my Republican friends, they be in favor of taking the Government out of business to the extent of refusing to make any more loans?

Your Massachusetts banks have participated in the R. F. C. loans.

out of business to the extent of refusing to make any more loans? Your Massachusetts banks have participated in the R. F. C. loans to the extent of something over $15,000,000, about nine and a half millions of this went to 39 national banks, $3,366,000 to 8 State banks' members of the Federal Reserve System, and $2,500,000 to 16 nonmember banks. Recently Joseph A. Maynard told the Boston Chamber of Commerce that "prosperity is riding back to New England in vehicles of ocean commerce, in increasing deposits in national banks, and in the widespread improvement in business." Exports from New England, in this same connection, were given as jumping from $15,500,000 in 1934 to $24,500,000 in 1935.

Exports from New England, in this same connection, were given as jumping from $15,500,000 in 1934 to $24,500,000 in 1935.

I think I have given you enough financial and industrial statistics. I do not expect that you will remember the figures, but I do anticipate that you will keep track of the circumstance that our economic life is a whole lot better than it was, and the reason for the improvement is that we have a national administration that was bright enough to conceive a program to lift us out of the swamp and brave enough to carry it into effect. Perhaps the job might have been done better. Perhaps mistakes were made—if such enterprises as the N. R. A. and the A. A. A., which were invalidated by the Supreme Court decisions, are to be counted as mistakes. However, I do not think that anybody can say that the country is any the worse off because of these two measures. On the contrary, we see about us every day evidences that these two agencies contributed considerably during their lifetime to the restoration of prosperity. The higher wages and shorter hours for labor, though there has been some back-sliding, have set a new and better standard of employment. The benefits to the farmers served to start your mills and factories going again. It is regrettable that these laws were declared by the Supreme Court to be unconstitutional, just as scores of other laws met similar fates in other administrations. These two acts were conceived in the spirit of public welfare. Not in them or in any other act of the administration is there the slightest hint of self-interest or of special privilege.

The country realizes this. That is the secret—if there is any secret—of the novularity of Franklin D. Rosevelt, to his place in self-interest or of special privilege.

The country realizes this. That is the secret—if there is any secret—of the popularity of Franklin D. Roosevelt, to his place in the esteem and affection of the whole people. That is the reason that when the people have their opportunity to pronounce their verdict on his performance, as they will have next November, you will find the roster of States overwhelmingly recording their faith and gratitude for what he has done. And you will find that your own good State of Massachusetts and your neighboring States will have a conspicuous share in the reelection of President Roosevelt by a greater majority than has characterized any election in our history.

PROCEEDINGS OF AMERICAN GROUP OF INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the minutes and proceedings of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union on January 20, 1936.

There being no objection, the minutes and proceedings were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINUTES OF THE THIRTY-THIRD ANNUAL MEETING OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA GROUP OF THE INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION

The Thirty-third Annual Meeting of the United States of America Group of the Interparliamentary Union was held in the Senate Committee on the Library room, Monday, January 20, 1936, at 10:30 a. m., Senator Alben W. Barkley, president, presiding. The following members were present: Representatives Charles J. Colden, California; Albert E. Carter, California; Virginia E. Jenckes, Indiana; Fritz G. Lanham, Texas; Fred Biermann, Iowa; Sam D. McReynolds, Tennessee; Luther A. Johnson, Texas; Sol Bloom, New York; William W. Blackney, Michigan; J. J. McSwain, South Carolina; Ralph E. Church, Illinois; William E. Richardson, Pennsylvania; and Senators Francis T. Maloney, Connecticut; E. W. Gibson, Vermont; Wallace H. White, Jr., Maine; Alben W. Barkley, Kentucky.

The minutes of the thirty-second annual meeting having appeared in the Congressional Record of January 17, 1936, it was voted that the minutes should be approved without reading.

President Barkley outlined the history of the Interparliamentary The Thirty-third Annual Meeting of the United States of America

President BARKLEY outlined the history of the Interparliamentary Union, and the relation of the American group to that organization, as follows:

"Ladies and gentlemen of the American group, I wish at the outset to congratulate the American group upon the large and representative attendance at this annual meeting today and to thank you for giving us the benefit of your presence for the consideration of such matters as may come forward for our attention. "I realize how busy all of you are with committee work and with work in your offices, but I know of no activity toward which you can make a greater contribution for so small an expenditure of time as the organization known as the Interparliamentary Union.

Those of you who have not been identified with the union over a long period may be interested in knowing some of its history.

"It is purely a voluntary organization in which the members of all the national parliaments of the world are eligible. It was first organized in 1888 and claims a large part of the credit for the establishment of the First and Second Hague Conferences designed to bring about the settlement of international disputes by peaceful

"The Interparliamentary Union holds an annual conference in the capital of some nation to be selected by the members of the council of the union. The American group has been represented, I believe, at practically all of these conferences, with the exception of six.

"The Congress of the United States has been associated with the Interparliamentary Union over so long a period that it has come to be regarded as a permanent participator in its activities. We entertained the Interparliamentary Union in St. Louis in 1904, at which time I believe the Honorable Richard Barthold, of Missouri, was the president; and again in Washington in the summer of 1925, appropriating on each occasion the sum of $50,000 to help defray the expenses of the conference.

the expenses of the conference.

"Congress has appropriated for the expenses of the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union since 1911. For many years we appropriated the sum of $10,000 per annum for the support of the Union itself and for a number of years prior to 1932, Congress appropriated $10,000 to help defray the expenses of the delegates from the American group to the annual conferences of the union. From 1932 to 1935 Congress declined to make an appropriation to help defray the expenses of the American delegates to the conferences on the ground of economy. This made it necessary for the American group to seek assistance elsewhere, or have no representation at the annual conferences of the Union. I have since my identification with the union, felt that its active or have no representation at the annual conferences of the Union. I have, since my identification with the union, felt that its activities and its possibilities were of such importance and dignity to justify the American Congress in appropriating the insignificant sum of $10,000 per annum in order to insure the attendance of a suitable delegation representing it at these international conferences. There are many members who are interested in international peace and arbitration and in the adjustment of international problems, who could add luster to such conferences, but who ought not be expected to defray their own expenses in order to engage in this worthy public service.

"For that reason, I, together with other members of the group, became interested in securing the enactment of a permanent law authorizing an annual appropriation of $20,000; $10,000 for the support of the Interparliamentary Union, and $10,000 to help defray the expenses of our delegates. Congressman Lanham, of Texas, introduced such a measure in the House, and I introduced it in the Senate. Due to the more liberal rules of the Senate, with reference to securing consideration of measures, the Senate bill was passed and concurred in by the House; and I wish to with reference to securing consideration of measures, the Senate bill was passed and concurred in by the House; and I wish to express my appreciation to Congressman Lanham, Congressman McReynolds, chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and other Members of the House and the Senate who assisted in the enactment of this legislation.

"As a result of this permanent authorization, we secured the appropriation called for, both for the support of the union and for the expenses of the delegates. It will be recalled that Congress had reduced the appropriation in support of the union for a number of years previous from $10,000 to $7,500, which was reduced to about $6,500 because of the unfavorable exchange situation. I am glad to believe that Congress will not hereafter hesitate to make the necessary appropriation called for in this hesitate to make the necessary appropriation called for in this permanent law. permanent law.

"Because of the lengthy session of Congress in 1935, which ran well through the month of August, we were unable to send a delegation to the conference at Brussels, which met July 26-31, 1935, and, therefore, the amount appropriated for the expenses of the delegates was not used. It will be necessary either to reappropriate this sum for 1936 or provide for a new appropriation. The result will be the same in either case.

"The nations represented at the Brussels Conference last year were: Austria Belgium, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France,

"The nations represented at the Brussels Conference last year were: Austria, Belgium, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Great Britain, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Rumania, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, and Yugoslavia. The conference discussed four specific phases of international relations, as follows:

"1. Juridical problems, relating particularly to the codification of world law and to neutrality.

"2. The manufacture of and trade in arms.

"3. Economic and monetary problems affecting world economic solidarity and stabilization of currencies.

"4. The evolution of the representative system, especially as to the legislative function, the work of parliamentary committees, and legislative documentation.

and legislative documentation.

"The resolutions adopted at the Brussels conference were printed in World Affairs of September 1935.

"It was a source of regret to me and other members of the group that we were unable to have a delegation at this conference. It has been my pleasure to attend a number of these conferences in the past, particularly that at Stockholm in 1921, Washington in 1925, and London in 1930.

"Some of the ablest statesmen in the parliaments of the world have attended these conferences, and it has been a source of great pleasure and inspiration to come in contact with them. I note only the names of Dr. Schücking and Dr. Lobe, of Germany, Dr. Lange, of Norway, and men of similar outstanding accomplishments in statesmanship from the other nations of the world, to show the type of public-spirited legislators who attend these annual confer-

"These interchanges of opinion from those who participate in legislation in the important nations of the world are extremely valuable. They enable the participants to obtain and carry home with them something of the viewpoint and the problems of other nations and thus contribute to a better understanding among the nations of the world, which in turn contribute to their peaceful and friendly solution. I wish also to mention the friendly interest and friendly solution. I wish also to mention the friendly interest and the cooperation which has been accorded to the Interparliamentary Union by the State Department of the United States. The State Department expressed a friendly attitude toward the authorization and ment expressed a friendly attitude toward the authorization and appropriation acts to which I have already referred. It follows closely the activities of the Union, and from time to time calls upon the American group, through its executive secretary, for information and also imparts information concerning events in the interparliamentary field.

"At the last annual meeting of the American group, Gov. A. J. Montague, of Virginia, tendered his resignation as president because of the condition of his health. As a result of this vacancy, I was chosen as his successor, and I wish to express my deep appreciation for the honor conferred upon me, which I was unable to do was chosen as his successor, and I wish to express my deep appreciation for the honor conferred upon me, which I was unable to do because of my absence from the meeting. I appreciate the cooperation and assistance of all the Members of the House and Senate who are interested in international affairs and in the success of efforts to bring about a closer understanding among the nations of the world regarding their problems. There has not been a time in the last two decades when friendly relations and sympathetic understanding among the nations was in greater need. All about us we hear of wars and rumors of wars and causes of international friction are constantly arising to bring overhanging clouds to the friction are constantly arising to bring overhanging clouds to the peaceful skies of international relationships. friction are constantly arising to bring overhanging clouds to the peaceful skies of international relationships. If by our activities, our association, and our education in the field of international affairs we can make any contribution to the preservation of peace and good will among the nations of the world, it will be worth a thousand times more than it cost us to participate.

"The approaching conference of the Interparliamentary Union will convene in Budapest, Hungary. It has been suggested that this meeting be held in September, because of the intense heat in Budapest during the month of August, but the date has not been definitely set. It is my opinion that if the conference is held as late as September it will be difficult for members of the American group to attend. All of the Members of the House and a third of the Members of the Senate will be campaigning for reelection, and many who are not in contests or have no contests will be engaged in the national contest. It is my hope, therefore, that an earlier date may be fixed so that we may send a representative group from the American Congress to participate in the conference at Budapest during the coming summer.

"I shall from time to time confer with members of the American group with respect to the Budapest meeting, and I shall deeply appreciate any suggestions you may feel at liberty to make concerning the work during the coming year.

"I have felt it my duty to make these preliminary remarks in order that we may all have something of the picture of the background and present possibilities of the Interparliamentary Union and of our participation in it. I shall now be glad to proceed to the regular order of business."

Upon motion of Mr. Bloom, it was voted that President Barkley be requested and directed to ask the Congress to continue for the next fiscal year the appropriation of $20,000 under the terms of the authorization as set forth in Senate bill 2276 passed by the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES OF LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter which I just received from Mr. Victor Russell, secretary to the Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard], and from Chesley W. Jurney, Sergeant at Arms of the United States Senate, relative to Senate bill | 3205, providing retirement for employees of the legislative branch of the Government.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

United States Senate, Washington, D. C., April 20, 1936.

Senator Matthew M. Neely,
Chairman, Senate Rules Committee,
Washington, D. C. Chairman, Senate Rules Committee,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Neely: With reference to the misunderstanding that seems to have arisen in some quarters with reference to your bill (S. 3205) providing retirement for employees of the legislative branch of the Government, and which was recently reported by the Rules Committee as a substitute for H. R. 3044, a bill designed to accomplish the retirement of legislative employees through the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act, we desire to present a few facts which we believe will clear up this misunderstanding and dispel whatever doubts may still exist as to the appropriateness of your bill and the desirability of its passage.

So far as we have heard, there is no opposition to the principal purpose of the bill—that of granting retirement pay to employees of the legislative branch of the Government who by age and length of service have become entitled to it. The principal criticisms that have been made of your bill are (1) that it is less desirable than the House bill, H. R. 3044, for which it was substituted; and (2) that it is discriminatory, because it allegedly provides benefits for employees of the legislative branch of the Government that are not provided for employees of the executive branch of the Government by the Civil Service Retirement Act.

In answer to the first one of these criticisms it is only necessary to read carefully the Civil Service Retirement Act under which the House bill would attempt to retire employees of Congress to become convinced how wholly unsuited and inapplicable that act would be to the situation that exists here at the Capitol, where methods of appointment, conditions of employment, and certainty of tenure are distinctly different than they are in the departments and bureaus of the executive branch of the Government, for which the Civil Service Retirement Act was especially and specifically designed. The Senate Rules Committee therefore did the logical of tenure are distinctly different than they are in the departments and bureaus of the executive branch of the Government, for which the Civil Service Retirement Act was especially and specifically designed. The Senate Rules Committee therefore did the logical and proper thing in striking out the House bill, H. R. 3044, and substituting therefor your bill, S. 3205, which was prepared especially to meet the retirement problems of congressional employees, and which had the approval of all the Senate officials and employees with whom we have discussed the matter.

The charge that your bill confers greater benefits upon legislative employees than the Civil Service Retirement Act does upon employees of the executive departments is wholly false and misleading. In fact, just the opposite is the case. This particular criticism is undoubtedly the outgrowth of the erroneous but somewhat prevalent belief that the monthly deposits which civil-service employees place with the retirement and disability fund are applied to offset or lessen the amount which Congress appropriates for their retired pay. A reference to section 4 of the Civil Service Retirement Act will correct that impression, however, for it is there made clear that each civil-service employee who retires receives from the Government through appropriation by Congress, retired pay, or pension, at the rate of $30 per year for each year of his active service. In addition, however, he receives from the civil-service retirement and disability fund the returns from an annuity which has been purchased with the savings he has deposited therein and which have been compounded annually at 4 percent during the period of his active service.

The deposits which the civil-service employee makes from his monthly salary, therefore, are simply a savings and investment deposited therein and which have been compounded annually at 4 percent during the period of his active service.

The deposits which the civil-service employee makes from his monthly salary, therefore, are simply a savings and investment account from which he draws a good return. The deposits, however, have no relation to, and do not affect in any way the straight retirement pay or pension which is appropriated for him by Congress. The additional benefits which he receives from the retirement and disability fund are made possible by the fact that Congress originally appropriated that fund and continues to make substantial contributions to it. Hence, if there is any discrimination in your bill it is against the legislative employees instead of in their favor in that it does not appropriate any retirement and disability fund in which they may invest their savings and purchase annuities.

In answer to the query that has been raised by a few, as to why your bill does not include such a savings and annuity system, you will recall that when your committee was considering the matter it was brought out that to set up such a system it would be necessary to employ various actuaries, accountants, stenographers, and clerks to handle the accounts and financial transactions of the thousands of employees who every few years pass over the rolls of the disbursing offices of Congress. Hence when it was shown that scarcely a handful of those thousands of employees ever remain here long enough to become eligible for retirement, it became apparent that the inclusion of such a system in your bill would be both unwarranted and unwise, for it would make the administrative cost of providing retirement to the few who eventually become eligible for it, as great or greater than in your bill would be both unwarranted and unwise, for it would make the administrative cost of providing retirement to the few who eventually become eligible for it, as great or greater than the retirement pay granted them. Your committee, therefore, very logically confined the retirement benefits to be accorded those employees of Congress, who by age and length of service become entitled to them, to the straight retirement pay of $30 per year for each year of service—the same sum that is granted all retired civil-service employees, with a slight increase for that extremely small group who have had over 25 years of service.

The simple, logical, and inexpensive plan for retirement of legislative employees embodied in your bill is without doubt the most suitable and acceptable arrangement that has been offered on the subject. All of the employees with whom we have talked feel indebted to you and the other members of the Rules Committee for reporting it out, and since some feasible plan for the retirement of congressional employees has been in contemplation for the past 16 years we are naturally hopeful that your bill may pass before the close of the present session.

It was hardly to be hoped that the bill would escape criticism, Fortunately, the criticisms that have been offered are not serious as they reflect quite clearly a lack of understanding of the various facts and the background on which your bill is premised. They also indicate a lack of familiarity with the nature and purpose of retirement systems in general. We believe, however, that with these matters clarified your bill should commend itself to the favorable action of the Senate and House alike.

Yours very sincerely,

Yours very sincerely, VICTOR RUSSELL Secretary, Senator Sheppard.
CHESLEY W. JURNEY,
Sergeant at Arms, United States Senate.

FLORIDA ATLANTIC-GULF CANAL

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to me from John L. Bogert, editor, Memorial Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers, under date of April 18, 1936, relative to the Florida canal.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> THE MARINE NEWS, New York, April 18, 1936.

Hon, DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Re the Florida canal.

My Dear Siz: The failure of Congress to make adequate appropriation of funds to continue the construction of the Florida canal would be a serious mistake.

The statement that if built it would injure Florida agriculture The statement that if built it would injure Florida agriculture and never be used by steamships is an absurd piece of propaganda in the interest of the railroads. The history of Holland gives the lie to the first part of that statement. The absurdity of the second part is evident from the fact that its use will reduce the time of the voyage by I whole day in sailing from Atlantic to Gulf ports. Buenos Aires is 7,178 statute miles from Liverpool. If the Florida canal is dug, its use will place United States farms 2,292 miles up the river from New Orleans, no farther away from Liverpool than Buenos Aires. In my opinion, it is a most important link in the intracoastal waterways of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN L. BOGERT, Editor, Memorial Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION-ADDRESS BY HON. JOHN E. RANKIN

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have a copy of a radio address delivered by Hon. John E. Rankin, Member of the House of Representatives from Mississippi, on the subject of The New Frontier—Rural Electrification. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be published in the Congres-SIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NEW FRONTIER—RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Mr. RANKIN was introduced as follows:

"One of the most earnest and best informed men in Washington on the subject of rural electrification is Hon. JOHN E. RANKIN, who represents the first district of Mississippi in the House of Representatives.

"Mr. RANKIN has been one of the leaders in the House for the administration's power policies.

"More recently he assisted in the fight in the House for the bill which makes permanent the Rural Electrification Administration and authorizes Federal loans of approximately $400,000,000 over a period of 10 years, to bring electricity to the farm homes of the Nation.

"He is known as the father of rural electrification in the South.

"He is known as the father of rural electrification in the South. "Mr. Rankin will now address you on the subject I have indicated.
Congressman Rankin."

Mr. RANKIN. My friends of the radio audience, I want to thank the National Grange for inviting me to address you at this time on one of the most vital questions that ever confronted the American farmers—that of rural electrification.

We are now engaged in the conquest of a new frontier, clearing away the underbrush of drudgery and privation, exterminating the wolves of loneliness and poverty, driving out the ruthless savages of greed and extortion, and laying the foundation for the future development of what is to us the most sacred of all earthly habitudes—American homes.

Through our program of rural electrification we are making it possible for the farmers and their wives and children to enjoy the blessings of this modern electric civilization in which we live. We are taking to the people in the rural districts all the advantages of city life, but leaving behind those demoralizing influences from which it seems that city dwellers cannot escape.

We can never have national prosperity until we restore the prosperity and improve the living conditions of the people in the rural districts, the farmers who produce the raw materials to feed and clothe the world—who fight the Nation's battles in times of war and sustain its institutions in times of peace.

This can be done by appreciation with cheen electric energy war and sustain its institutions in times of peace.

This can be done by providing them with cheap electric energy with which to light their homes, their barns and outhouses, pump their water, operate their radios, washing machines, vacuum cleaners, electric stoves, feed grinders, and other electrical appliances necessary to lift the burdens from the shoulders of the farmer and relieve his wife and children of the nerve-racking, back-breaking, health-wrecking, and youth-destroying drudgery that has so long been the lot of country women in the average farm home.

Although the use of electricity for the purpose of lights and power originated in America, yet we are far behind practically every other country in the world in rural electrification. While less than 10 percent of our farms in the United States have electricity, and most of them are charged three or four times what it is worth, foreign countries have electrified their rural homes at reasonable rates. For instance, France has 90 percent of her farms electrified, Germany 90 percent, Norway 90 percent, New Zealand 65 percent, Japan 90 percent, Holland and Switzerland 100 percent. They have all their farms electrified.

What we are trying to do is to electrify every farm home in 100 percent. They have all their farms electrified.

What we are trying to do is to electrify every farm home in America at rates the farmers can afford to pay.

We have just passed through Congress a bill providing $410,000,000 to be loaned to the farmers of this country through the Rural Electrification Administration during the next 10 years for the purpose of building rural power lines, etc., and supplying the farmers with cheap electric lights and power. These loans are to be made, as a rule, to States, counties, municipalities, or cooperative nonprofit associations operating for the purpose of supplying electricity to the farmers at the lowest possible rates. These loans are to extend over a period of 25 years and bear interest at the rate of about 3 percent.

of about 3 percent.

I started this movement in my home district in Mississippi a I started this movement in my home district in Mississippi a few years ago by organizing county electric-power associations. In some instances we put two or more counties together. We buy our power at wholesale from the T. V. A. at about 6 mills a kilowatt-hour. You can do the same thing. If you are not within the distribution radius of the T. V. A., Boulder Dam, Grand Coulee, or some other public power project, you can buy your power at wholesale or generate it yourselves through a local plant for anywhere from 5 to 8 mills a kilowatt-hour. Then you can sell it at retail at practically the same rates our farmers in the T. V. A. area are paying, which are as follows: First 50 kilowatt-hours per month, 3 cents a kilowatt-hour; next 100 kilowatt-hours per month, 2 cents a kilowatt-hour; next 200 kilowatt-hours per month, 1 cent a kilowatt-hour; next 1,000 kilowatt-hours per month, 4 mills a kilowatt-hour. kilowatt-hour.

This not only pays for the electricity but also amortizes these rural lines in less than 20 years. This is all these farmers will ever have to pay, and we hope to get these rates reduced.

I have before me a large stack of letters from farmers who are now being served through our rural electrification program. One of them says, "It is the most wonderful thing that has ever happened to the farm homes." Another one says, "It is better than a gold mine or an oil field." Another says, "It means the difference between drudgery and luxury."

I have just tabulated reports made by 159 of these farmers, and I find that 156 of them have radios, 144 have electric irons, 80 have electric fans, 28 have washing machines, 24 have vacuum cleaners, 24 have water pumps, 34 have electric ranges, and 80 have electric refrigerators.

refrigerators.

refrigerators.

Here is one who has lights in his home and garage, a radio, electric refrigerator, electric iron, percolator, vacuum cleaner, electric fans, toaster, and waffle iron, washing machine, and water pump. Last month he used 95 kilowatt-hours of electricity, for which he paid $3.40, including $1 payment on his line. This serves a family of five people.

Here is one who has lights in his home and his barn, a radio, electric refrigerator, electric iron, electric range, fans, washing machine, water pump that supplies water for his family and 60 head of stock. Last month he used 111 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, which cost him $3.72, including $1 payment on his line.

Another one uses lights, radio, refrigerator, electric range, and water pump. Last month he used 146 kilowatt-hours of electricity, which cost him $4.42, including $1 on his line.

Here is one who has lights in his home, barn, and garage, a radio, electric refrigerator, electric iron and vacuum cleaner, electric fans and water pump. Last month he used 45 kilowatt-hours of electricity, which cost him $1.80, including 45 cents to pay for his line.

pay for his line.

I could quote hundreds of these messages, but this will give you some idea of what can be done through rural electrification to make the farmer's home brighter and to relieve it of drudgery and make farm life so attractive that your children will not want to leave the farm and crowd into the congested tenements of our already overcrowded cities.

This is the greatest farm-relief movement of all time. It will take people back to the farm and will double the values of farm take people back to the farm and will double the values of farm homes. It is like the dawning of a new civilization.

I wish you could all read the mail I get from farm women, expressing their gratitude for what this cheap power is doing to relieve their burdens and to brighten their lives.

If every farmer in America realized exactly what this means they would join in this movement with the enthusiasm of a crusade—wake up their public officials and demand that they represent them openly and aboveboard in this great struggle for human fustice.

If every farmer and every official will join us in this fight, we will electrify every farm home in America at the T. V. A. rates and make this the most prosperous, the most powerful and most contented agricultural country the world has ever known.

NORRIS DAM-ARTICLE BY R. L. DUFFUS

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have here an article published in the New York Times of last Sunday, entitled "A Dream Takes Form", written by Mr. R. L. Duffus, having to do with Norris Dam in the T. V. A. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be

A DREAM TAKES FORM IN T. V. A.'S DOMAIN—THE VISITOR DISCOVERS IN THE VALLEY A LABORATORY DESIGNED TO CHALLENGE THE LIFE OF MILLIONS

By R. L. Duffus

By R. L. Duffus

Norris, Tenn.—The storms which have whirled and whistled through the New Deal agencies during the past year have left one—the one of which the President is probably proudest—intact. Despite hurricanes, whether political and figurative or shockingly real, the T. V. A.'s banners still wave over the ramparts of great dams from Norris, on the Clinch, above Knoxville, to Pickwick Landing, in southwestern Tennessee. Where armies marched and fought in the War between the States, T. V. A. linemen are stringing wires. Where the flatboats of the pioneers slid down muddy, swollen streams, where two or three generations later the Union gunboats crawled, cranes and steam shovels are at work. The thunder of the cement mixers would drown out all but the heaviest artillery.

thunder of the cement mixers would drown out all but the heaviest artillery.

The T. V. A. is a dream taking tangible form, of surpassingly more importance than any bickering between Government and private enterprise as to which shall furnish electricity. It is the first organized attempt in American history to manipulate the destinies of an entire watershed and its people.

Whether this attempt is wise or unwise, a menace or a rainbow, depends entirely on one's point of view. The facts are visible for friends and opponents alike to see. There can be little dispute as to what the Tennessee Valley has been or as to what is now happening to it. If the power issue is for the moment laid aside, there can be no question that the essential thing that is happenent. happening to it. If the power issue is for the moment laid aside, there can be no question that the essential thing that is happening in the valley now is not coercion but education. The famous power "yardstick" does exist and will certainly compel power companies in the valley to lower their rates and scratch gravel for new customers. But the stick that the observer on the spot is likely to think about, whether the spot is a gigantic dam or an electrified village, is the school teacher's pointer.

Nor was there ever a class or a laboratory quite like this, over which preside Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, president of Antioch College; Dr. Harcourt A. Morgan, former president of the University of Tennessee; and David E. Lilienthal, lawyer and rate expert.

The classroom includes parts of seven States, or a total area of more than 40,000 square miles—about the size of Kentucky. It looks out on a much wider area over which T. V. A. electricity and T. V. A. gospel will be distributed. The class is 2,000,000 strong, with 4,000,000 more outside the valley but within T. V. A. influ-with 4,000,000 more outside the valley but within T. V. A. influence ence.

The laboratory demonstrations set up for the edification of the T. V. A.'s pupils are tremendous in magnitude. Six great dams are completed or being built. Power plants in operation before the year is out will yield 205,000 kilowatts 24 hours a day and 365 days in the year. Future installations may raise this total, on existing and proposed dams, to 660,000 kilowatt-hours.

In its recent report the T. V. A. suggested five new dams—at Fowler Bend, on the Hiwassee, in North Carolina; the Fontana Dam, on the Little Tennessee; and dams at Watts Bar, Gilberts-ville, and Coulter Shoals, all to be completed by 1944.

Dams and dredges will deepen the river until a boat drawing 9 feet of water can safely steam from Paducah to Knoxville. Mighty reservoirs will hold back the floodwaters and maintain the channel depth at slack seasons. Behind the reservoirs, on mountain farms, on fertile or once fertile lower slopes, the processes of erosion are on fertile or once fertile lower slopes, the processes of erosion are being arrested by proved methods. From the old nitrate plant no. 2 at Muscle Shoals phosphate fertilizer is going out to demonstration farms to bring moribund acres back to life. Near dam sites new model villages have sprung up, some of them destined to be permanent.

But these physical things are tools, not ends, in themselves. When the Tennessee Valley Act was passed 3 years ago most people, even in Washington, were thinking of the valley in terms of electric power. Those terms are still valid, but the objective has broad-ened until it has become the revivification of the life of a people. Whatever the validity of the means adopted, the conception has elements of splendor.

Large areas of this region have been blighted by wrong uses of the land, by the wash of a myriad of little streams carrying away the fertile topsoil, by the long after effects of an old war, by that war's destruction of an old social and economic system which was never adequately replaced. Traveling through it one comes was never adequately replaced. Traveling through it one comes again and again on the traces and monuments of 70-year-old battles—at Nashville, Franklin, Chickamauga, Chattanooga, and many other less familiar fields. From bloody Shiloh, near the new Pickwick Dam; from Corinth, in Mississippi, where old trenches can still be seen, eastward to the heights of Lookout Mountain, the armies reeled and flowed, leaving their debris of dead and dying men, trampling down crops that, in one sense, never grew again. Then silence fell, and not until recently, over large areas, was it broken. broken.

The valley is one of tremendous contrasts, in the shape and The valley is one of tremendous contrasts, in the shape and nature of the land, in climate, in the education and general welfare of the people. It has modern cities, like Knoxville and Chattanooga. It has bleak cabins on dreary upland acres, where life has changed but little since some pioneer wagon broke down, some horse or mule went lame, and a family's migration was halted, a century or a century and a half ago.

Corn holds sway in the mountains of the northeast—sometimes as grain, sometimes as illicit liquor; in the center and in the west the land of cotton thrusts into Tennessee out of Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi. In the east streams tumble down wildly out of the hills, the Tennessee hurries past Chattanooga and Shiloh, but at Paducah it moves quietly enough, broad and muddy, into the Obio.

Ohio.

Some symbols run clear across the valley, from east to west, from north to south. One is the mule, descendant, perhaps, of a stock that used to be bred in old Mexico and brought eastward and northward over the Santa Fe Trail. The number of mules in the Tennessee Valley is prodigious. Over almost every road, from the muddy byway, where motor cars venture at their peril, to the concrete highways ambles the mule, sometimes ridden, sometimes attached to a rickety cart. Too often he is an emblem of poverty and of slow, heavy time, to which no value is attached.

Another symbol of the "breeze way" or "dogtrot" cabin. Long ago a pioneer whose family was expanding built a second log cabin end-on to the first, connected the two with a floor and roof but no walls, and produced the first "breeze way." The idea was good, for its day. But the "breeze-way" has come to stand for a poor way of living, on poor land, with little or no stock, on a limited diet, without sufficient schooling or adequate medical care, without plumbing, without electric lights, without telephone, with a narrow and constricted social life.

Good land, well cultivated, grows better houses than this, as one with a narrow and constricted social life.

Good land, well cultivated, grows better houses than this, as one sees readily enough when one goes north from Florence, in Alabama near Muscle Shoals, through the Tennessee blue-grass country toward Nashville. Here the fields look as rich and the common farmhouses as neat and comfortable as those of Iowa, and many a gracious and dignified old plantation house with lofty porticoes and well-kept grounds still stands. Is this part of the valley inhabited by a more intelligent and industrious race than other parts? No; it is underlaid by phosphate deposits which elsewhere are lacking and which here enrich the soil.

The valley is a pageant, sometimes sad, sometimes smilling, nearly always beautiful. Often, following down along the bottom lands of some yellow river one is amazed at the loveliness of hills and plains. Here one would look for happy farms, for fat herds of cattle, for orchards bursting with spring into blossom, even for vineyards ascending the sun-soaked slopes. And more often than not these blessings are not there.

The smoky vistas are sweet in the soft spring light; but in rickety

The smoky vistas are sweet in the soft spring light; but in rickety and unpainted dwellings, in the absence of cattle, in the deadening sense of discouragement, one finds proof that something is wrong. At dusk many a cabin is dark or lighted only by the flicker of open fires. The roads—even those marked red on the automobile maps—vary amazingly from concrete to macadam, from macadam to dust or mind.

or mud.

The trouble is not that people in the valley prefer mules to automobiles, wells and springs to plumbing, darkness to light, mud to concrete. They want these good things, but they do not grow in a depleted soil. They do not grow on cruelly gullied hillsides, on slopes where red and gray patches show that the topsoil has washed away, on land that has lost its nitrates and phosphates. They cannot be grown by a discouraged people, no matter how good the human stock from which those people are bred. And good stock it is—90 or 95 percent of the T. V. A.'s labor force has been recruited from the neighborhoods in which it is employed and no cruited from the neighborhoods in which it is employed, and no one who sees it in action or sees what it has accomplished will sneer at it.

The traveler must not yet look for miracles—and yet he will find a few. He will find the practically completed Norris Dam, 25 miles above Knoxville, set as precisely as a jewel between two high banks that were virgin 3 years ago. At Joe Wheeler, a few miles above Muscle Shoals, he will see another new dam, also practically completed, stretching like a white causeway across the wide stream; at the old Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals he will hear the whir of generators and see smoke rising and drifting in the misty air from the tall chimney of the fertilizer plant.

Fertilizer is not a poetic subject, but there is poetry of a modern sort in the grinding and mixing of rock, in furnaces where flames surge to temperatures of 2,850° F., in yellow dust going out to give life to dying soil. There is poetry in a sack of phosphate that will make rich crops grow where scrawny ones grew before.

The traveler will see three dams in the making—at Chickamauga, just above Chattanooga; at Guntersville, in Alabama; at Pickwick Landing, in Tennessee. He will see that the making of a dam is a miracle. North Chickamauga Creek is in the way; the engineers will give it a new channel and bring it out below their dam. They want to know what there is under the water to hold up their earth and concrete bulwarks; they drill fanatically, bringing up many thousands of feet of rock cross sections. They draw roads, culverts, switches buildings locks embankments on a man and in time switches, buildings, locks, embankments, on a map, and in time those things are there on the surface of the earth.

At Pickwick this spring one could see a dam-building bee in full career. Dam building is a man's job. The huge concrete mixer towers perilously. The machines are stopped. Men sluice them out, then crawl inside. They merge. The thunder begins again.

Down below the engineers have constructed a cofferdam of steel sheet piles driven in 60-foot circles, filled in with sand. Inside this dam a massive lock is being built—the highest single-lift lock in the world. The cement comes out into huge buckets, a crane lifts them as a farm boy would swing a milk pail, flits them just above the heads of men working in the lock. A Negro jumps to a lever at the bottom of the bucket, throws his full weight on it, the bucket disgorges and men settle its contents into place with vibrators driven by compressed air.

The April high water topped the cofferdam. Warned 36 hours in advance the engineers took out all equipment that water could damage and let the river in. The flood crest, 2 feet above the walls, did no harm, and as the river dropped the engineers were ready to pump out and resume work.

did no harm, and as the river in. The flood crest, 2 feet above the walls, did no harm, and as the river dropped the engineers were ready to pump out and resume work.

Over the hills, straddling down from Norris, comes a line of tall towers. They will carry Norris power down the valley. Three important cities—Knoxville, Chattanooga, and Memphis—have voted to use T. V. A. power. Dayton, where the famous "monkey trial" took place and William Jennings Bryan died, is a T. V. A. patron; Florence, Sheffield, and Tuscumbia, near Muscle Shoals, will take T. V. A. power when some legal difficulties have been smoothed out; Corinth and its county of Alcorn already have it; Tupelo, in Mississippi, a tragic storm center in the recent hurricane, has it and uses it in amazing quantities.

In or near Corinth you can see some demonstrations of what electricity on the farm can do: a poultry raiser enlists it to keep even temperature in his brooders and incubators; a gardener heats his seedbeds with it and makes sweetpotatoes, tomatoes, and eggplant grow at a season when Nature never intended them to do so; a farmer uses it to kill harmful bacteria in his soil. This is a beginning, a mere inkling of what electricity can do on a farm. It can pump, grind, refrigerate, saw, milk. It has scores and scores of uses.

Agricultural colleges, experiment stations, and county agents in Agricultural colleges, experiment stations, and county agents in parts of the seven States are studying furiously to see what can be done in the valley with new supplies of electricity, fertilizer, and hope. Six thousand farmers' clubs are conducting experiments under expert direction.

be done in the valley with new supplies of electricity, fertilizer, and hope. Six thousand farmers' clubs are conducting experiments under expert direction.

Three years ago critics of the T. V. A. had a standing argument. Electricity, they conceded, would be a fine thing on the farm. But could the Tennessee Valley farmer pay for it? One had only to look at the farmer and his home to realize that he had little cash. How could he take on a new luxury?

The T. V. A.'s answer to this argument, which is here offered for whatever it may be worth, is that electricity on the farm is not a luxury but an economy. First, says the T. V. A., you fill up your gullies, terrace your land, strip plow your slopes, and let the water flow down as slowly as possible. You collect the water behind dams and produce power. You use part of this power to make phosphate fertilizer, and with the fertilizer you grow legumes which enrich and hold your soil. You use some of the rest of the power on the farm itself. You diversify your farming, especially if you have been depending on the soil-murdering cotton as your one crop. You raise vegetables, herries, fruits; you raise fodder crops and feed them to dairy cows and meat cattle.

Electricity makes your labor more productive; the one-mule farm becomes an electric farm. You build a big walk-in electric refrigerator, either alone or in cooperation with your neighbors, and in it you store your meat and other perishable products until the market will absorb them at a good price.

As your cash income increases you can spend more on your land and on yourself and your family. You will be able to pay your taxes, and your community can support better roads, schools, and other public services. The vicious cycle of crop failures, defaulted taxes, poverty, and community decay will be reversed. In time industries can be brought in. At the beginning, at least, they will process the valley's own agricultural and mineral products, furnishing more employment and keeping more money at home.

To carry out thi

This isn't the sort of education the T. V. A. has in mind. The T. V. A. rests its case on giving advice as to the best ways of doing things and leaving it to individuals and communities to decide for themselves how the advice works out.

The T. V. A. doesn't even pretend to have arrived at final truths. It is trying to bring to the valley a new technique of running farms and using electricity in towns and cities. Such a technique cannot possibly be final.

Mainly the T. V. A. believes in learning by doing. It is convinced that demonstrations of better farming, of wiser and more ample use of fertilizers, and of the services of electricity will prove irresistible. It looks to see the leaven spread naturally through the valley.

If this leaven does spread in the valley of the Tennessee, it can-If this leaven does spread in the valley of the Tennessee, it cannot help affecting other American valleys. Consider the basic reasoning behind the T. V. A.: A river valley is the most perfect geographical unit. Its people are interested, as a whole, in the control and use of the river. Piecemeal planning will not provide for such control and use. A river as large as the Tennessee cannot be developed by private enterprise—the job is too big and there are too many uncertainties in it. Therefore Government must do the developing and private enterprise can step in where Government leaves off. Between Government and purely private enterprise there will be a natural growth of cooperative associations, particularly in the rural regions.

enterprise there will be a natural growth of cooperative associations, particularly in the rural regions.

Other river valleys would furnish other problems. The Ohio, already practically canalized by its chain of locks and heavily industrialized, would require an altogether different treatment; the Missouri and the Arkansas, flowing for long distances through dry and sparsely settled country, would be still another sort of picture puzzle to put together.

But the principle of dealing with rivers and river valleys as wholes is undoubtedly involved in the Tennessee experiment. If that experiment succeeds, it will certainly be tried elsewhere.

VAN A. BITTNER

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement by me about Van A. Bittner.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I want to call to the attention of those interested in unionism in West Virginia the record of Mr. Van A. Bittner.

Mr. Bittner called at my office not once but on five different occasions, and each time requested me not to fight Walter Thurmond, internal-revenue collector for the State of West Virginia. I asked Mr. Bittner how he could do that, since Thurmond had been one of the bitterest foes of unionism in the State and had been president of the Lorentz Could Control of the Lorentz Could Country Country Could Country Country Could Country Country Could Country Count dent of the Logan County Coal Operators Association during one of the worst industrial strifes in the history of the United States. Miners were beaten, clubbed, and gagged. His reply was that we could forget those things because of the coming election. I read to Mr. Bittner the letter Walter Thurmond sent to President Harding in 1921, in which he said:

"Our information is, and we believe that investigation in Kanawha and Boone Counties will show, that thousands of men went into the recent revolt and attacked citizens of our country, went under coercion and threats of death by their leaders. Our information is these men were drafted for service and were notified by their leaders that if they did not respond they would be either hanged or shot and that the so-called spontaneous uprising by the United Mine Workers was the result of a deliberate, well-laid plot by the officials of that organization, who dominate their members through fear of an invisible government, with power of life and death over its members. This death penalty was inflicted by this organization on some of its members within the past 2 weeks.

"This has prevented the organizers of the United Mine Workers from coercing and intimidating our employees into joining the United Mine Workers; and when they have been prevented from violating the laws of our State, they immediately accused the officers of the law, who prevent them from carrying out their unlawful acts, of being thugs, outlaws, and gunmen, which they themselves are doing, this for the purpose of covering up their own unlawful acts. We submit to you, as a peaceful, law-abiding community, with an industrious, contented industrial population, with no semblance of labor trouble or disturbance, our county has been subjected to greater indignities and outrages at the hands of members of the United Mine Workers of America from Kanawha, Boone, and other countles than has ever been suffered by any community of American citizens in the history of our country, and if our Government permits thousands of men to organize and arm if our Government permits thousands of men to organize and arm themselves and march against the inhabitants of a peaceful county, with threats of arson and murder against the population thereof, without any adequate punishment therefor, we seriously fear that the days of free government in this country are numbered."

That is what Walter Thurmond thought about the United Mine Workers when the field was unorganized. Yet Mr. Bittner asked Workers when the field was unorganized. Yet Mr. Bittner asked me to accept Thurmond.

I am calling to Mr. Bittner's attention the testimony that he gave before a committee of the United States Senate in 1928 about Walter R. Thurmond and also testimony of Walter Thurmond in the district courts of West Virginia in which he admits that they paid $61,517 one year and $46,630 for another year for the employment of deputy sheriffs to patrol the mines, and that he had contributed $15,000 for the prosecution of the United Mine Workers in the State courts. I need not call to the attention of those in southern West Virginia, in Logan and Mingo Counties, the activities of Walter Thurmond; but it is my desire to call to their attention the recent moves of Van Bittner to join with Mr. Thurmond in his political activities. I need not call to the attention of one who has lived in Logan County how the Baldwin-Felts thugs were used to beat up the miners who were fighting for their just

Yet Mr. Bittner says: "I know Walter is with us now!"

Yet Mr. Bittner says: "I know Walter is with us now!"

If men like Thurmond had control in West Virginia now, there would be no United Mine Workers or any other union labor.

When the local unions of Logan County passed resolutions condemning Walter Thurmond and praising President Roosevelt, Mr. Bittner went to Logan County and prohibited any further resolutions. I requested him, in a letter and wire to him, to explain this action; and he said, "My criticism against local unions passing these resolutions was general. It is necessary for us to have discipline."

"We do this in order to present a solid front in protecting the ing these resolutions was general. It is necessary for us to have discipline."

"We do this in order to present a solid front in protecting the best interests of our people."

Much the same situation is true in northern West Virginia, where Mr. Bittner endorsed and pushed the candidacy of C. E. Smith, who for years was an outstanding foe to unionism in that section of the State when unions were weak. I have placed in the Record Mr. Bittner's own testimony about Ned Smith, and also can call to your attention the well known "good morning" column written by Ned Smith, where the laboring men were said to be guilty of every crime on the calendar. I do not intend to accept these overnight friends like Smith and Thurmond, who are now claiming to be friends of labor, but when they had the opportunity tried to destroy unionism in every way possible.

Mr. Bittner pleaded and begged with me not to fight either Smith or Thurmond. I did not accept his judgment. Also he overlooked the matter regarding Mr. Thurmond's connection with the Coal Operators Association. The miners in Logan County know about Walter Thurmond's activities in behalf of the yellow-dog injunction; and yet Mr. Bittner says Walter is a fine fellow, and begged me not to call attention to this publicly.

Also, I would like to show Mr. Bittner's attitude on the scrip bill in the legislature.

The miners in West Virginia have for years been trying to get in the legislature.

The miners in West Virginia have for years been trying to get away from being paid in scrip. A bill known as house bill no. 51 was introduced and passed in the house of delegates. Immediately Van A. Bittner addressed a letter to the house against the bill. This can be found on page 9, February 4, 1935, House of Delegates Journal. He specifically says that the bill which would do away with scrip "is a fantastic proposition that will help no one, and will create considerable trouble in the mining industry in our State." He also says, "If a law is enacted making scrip transferable and payable at face value, then we will be faced with a condition among many men in the mining industry of scrip being made legal tender and no money for wages will be paid at all." Also—

"The only trouble that has ever been reported to me relative to the issuance of scrip since the signing of the wage agreement is that some men draw scrip and have it cashed by pawnbrokers or others at a discount; and if a law was passed making scrip transferable and payable at face value, this condition would become worse, instead of better."

Further, he says:

"We are certainly not going to assume an attitude of heing in

Further, he says:

"We are certainly not going to assume an attitude of being in favor of any bill before the legislature that simply inconveniences the operators and brings no good whatever to the miners and their

The bill was passed, but Mr. Bittner was at work to force reconsideration, and today scrip is being issued in West Virginia because Mr. Bittner helped kill the bill that would do away with scrip. I myself have always felt that the miners should be paid in cash, and they should not be forced to accept scrip.

Is Mr. Bittner the friend of labor when he does these things?

I intend to issue later a statement to labor relative to the autonomy situation, in which I will show that Mr. Bittner has beaten down and forced out every move to allow the miners in district 17, of which he is president, the right to vote on their own officers. The miners themselves cannot oppose Bittner, who rules with an iron hand, with no regard for the miners' wishes.

Mr. Bittner is trying to sacrifice labor to build up his own selfish and personal career.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER FLOOD CONTROL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3531) to amend the act entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes", approved May 15, 1928.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the Committee on Com-

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the pending bill is the $272,000,000 Overton flood-control bill in respect to the lower Mississippi River. I wish to speak only briefly concerning it, and chiefly for the purpose of putting the Senate on notice respecting the size and expense of the challenge in relation to flood control as a whole, which is rapidly accumulating for our attention. It ultimately becomes a staggering contemplation from a Treasury and taxpayer standpoint. We dare not confront a segment of the problem by itself. We must take the ultimate problem as a whole.

This happens to be only one of numerous flood-control proposals which this Congress will confront. It seems to me worth while, I repeat, to understand generally the nature and extent of the complete problem before we undertake to deal with any of it on a piecemeal basis.

Of course, flood control is very difficult to discuss objectively. It involves a dramatic challenge to the human heart against which no one would wish to seem to stand. None of us would be parsimonious in dealing with a flood problem. As I have frequently told the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton], the author of the pending bill, I want to go along with him in respect to any realistic and practical answer to the problem insofar as it fits into the general scheme of things.

It is a perfectly natural inclination to move quickly to the rescue whenever this dramatic flood-control situation challenges the attention of the Congress; but this should not blind us to the inevitable fact that "haste makes waste." While I would not measure dollars against human lives in respect to a contemplation of this nature, nevertheless I repeat we must be realists and we cannot safely escape the hard fact that a tax flood—I repeat the phrase, "tax flood"—can be as devastating and deadly often as are the cruel forces of Nature upon occasion. In other words, we must temper the generosity with wisdom. We must be prudent and practical.

Mr. President, against that general statement I want briefly to recite to the Senate what is waiting for its attention in respect to this general problem, because I do not believe we can deal with one sector intelligently and wisely except as we understand the thing as a whole.

I am referring chiefly to the fact that in the Commerce Committee of the Senate there is still pending a so-called omnibus flood-control bill which at one time had reached a total authorization in excess of $700,000,000, which subsequently has been cut back by the Commerce Committee to the neighborhood of $400,000,000, but which is now again in a process of rewriting which, in my humble judgment, may carry it literally into the billions of dollars. We are a rich Nation; but there comes a time when even our resources may be exhausted. It is not the habit of the time, in respect to expenditures, to count the cost. I decline to go along with any such prodigal philosophy, whether it deals with floods or anything else.

Heretofore we have contemplated Federal responsibility in connection with floods largely on the basis of major stream problems as in the Mississippi Valley, where there is a definite and specific interstate responsibility. Even in the acceptance of that interstate responsibility in these few larger situations we have always built upon the basis of local contributions. These are our traditional precautions.

Mr. President, the Commerce Committee 1 week ago voted 9 to 4 in favor of an amendment to the omnibus flood-control bill; an amendment which in terms would practically accept Federal responsibility for every flood condition in the United States, whether it be interstate or local. Furthermore, that committee voted 9 to 4 to abandon the one and only check against extravagance and against "pork barrel" flood legislation when it voted to abandon local contributions.

Mr. President, if we are going to abandon local contributions, and if we are going to accept Nation-wide responsibility for every flood condition which exists anywhere in this land, it represents an ultimate equitable responsibility of a minimum of $8,000,000,000 and probably more. This is the naked reality.

After the committee had thus taken what to me was an amazing step and had voted thus to abandon utterly the traditional safeguards with which Federal responsibility heretofore has been surrounded, it was reported to the committee that a bill of this nature probably would be vetoed by the President. I hope the report is true, because if any bill ever deserved a Presidential veto it would be a bill which would accept Federal responsibility for every flood condition in the United States and completely abandon the philosophy of local contributions.

When this rumor reached the committee, the chastened committee voted to reconsider its previous action, and it was reconsidered, and the matter now stands in a state of flux. That seems to be a paradox, to be standing in a state of flux, but I think the Senate will understand what I am trying to say. It remains to be seen what the final decision of the Commerce Committee will be, and ultimately, of course, what the final decision of the Senate will be upon this tremendously important thing. I am unwilling to go ahead with the Overton bill without reminding the Senate of these other considerations.

The trouble is that flood control heretofore has been chiefly dramatized upon the Mississippi River, where everybody concedes there is a national responsibility. More recently we have discovered the even more dramatic flood challenge in the upper reaches of tributaries of the Mississippi River and in many unrelated sections of the country. We confront the inevitable problem of assessing and measuring our responsibility in all these other flood situations, because any rule which is announced for one section of the country we must be prepared equitably to apply to every other section of the country.

There is where the general problem rests at the present time. It rests in an undecided question before the Commerce Committee, which may ultimately bring us a flood-control policy involving an ultimate immeasurable responsibility which may run into eight, ten, fifteen, or twenty billions of dollars. So far as I am concerned, I want to put my colleagues upon notice that we must be exceedingly careful lest we establish any piecemeal precedent which will encourage and approve this larger, final net result. In such circumstance precedents become of major importance.

So far as I am concerned, I am not disposed to challenge the Overton bill in its major phases after it shall be amended, as I understand the distinguished senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton] intends to ask that it be amended. Nevertheless, in the face of all the balance of the flood-control challenge which is waiting to roll in upon us the moment the Commerce Committee releases the flood-gates, I think it is absolutely important that we should go exceedingly slow.

It seems to me that the perfectly obvious policy to be followed by this particular session of the Congress is to do precisely what the President of the United States proposed in a letter to the distinguished senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] when he suggested that we deal only with emergent situations at the present time and await a well-rounded, Nation-wide, substantive survey of the entire flood-control necessity before we undertake to answer any piecemeal phases of it beyond the immediate emergency. In other words, believe it or not, I am speaking for the President.

There is a perfectly obvious reason for this method of consideration, Mr. President. The State of Ohio offers a very excellent example of the reason. There are two flood conservancy districts in the State of Ohio paralleling each other. One of those districts has completely met its own flood problems on the old, traditional basis of local responsibility. It has paid all the expense by taxation upon its own people. That was the established basis of approach to these indirect flood questions as related to Federal responsibility heretofore.

Immediately paralleling that precise conservancy district in Ohio is another district, whose spokesman appeared before the Commerce Committee within the past week and asked—and appropriately, if we are to enlarge the Federal responsibility—that those things which had been done in the neighboring Ohio conservancy district at the expense of the home folks should now be done in this particular Ohio district at the expense of the Federal Government. The point I am making is that the new policy, under which the second Ohio district had a perfectly logical right to come to Washington and ask for aid, is a complete departure from the old policy; and I am making the point that if this departure is to occur in one instance, we must be prepared equitably to pursue it into every section of the United States.

It is upon that basis, I repeat, that I think the President of the United States is completely wise when he urges us to confine ourselves at the moment to emergency flood situations, and then to commit this new Nation-wide problem in its entirety to appropriate expert authority, which during the recess can at least bring us scientifically a preliminary survey of the whole situation, which will include not only those direct flood-control factors which heretofore have been emphasized but which will also include all the other related factors of flood control to which our attention is now appropriately being directed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Sen-

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I am interrupting the Senator, not because I am advocating any particular policy or disagreeing with the Senator; in fact, so far as the Senator has stated the national policy, or what ought to be first considered before we decide whether or not it shall be a national policy, I think I am in entire agreement with him; but I should like to call his attention to and get his suggestions as to a proposition of this kind:

The Senator refers to Ohio, where, without any doubt, the local authorities have done a magnificent work and have done it at their own expense. They have done a work that will relieve, to the extent of the waters impounded, the damage from flood waters of the Mississippi River even in the State of Louisiana, because most of the water would go down there; and, as compared with the entire Nation, it is a small amount. If we are going to establish a national policy, however, as I see the matter, we must take up what would ordinarily be called local matters and combine them, and in that way get a national policy.

Suppose, however, we take a case like the recent flood, which was referred to the other day by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh]. Certain damages occurred on the Connecticut River, I believe. When the State authorities investigated, when they consulted engineers and experts to see what could be done to prevent a return of such floods, they found it would be necessary to go away up in the mountains, probably hundreds of miles away from the place where the damage was done, and conserve the waters there. In other words, often they would have to go outside of their own State into another State in order to remedy the difficulty. Even if we were going to do as Ohio did, it would be manifestly impossible for one State to remedy the situation. Its authorities would have to go into another State, perhaps into several different States, and there build the necessary flood-control dams.

We are going to meet such conditions all over the United States; and, although I admit it is a mammoth problem when we put it together, it seems to me the American people are going to solve it, regardless of its size; and they might just as well be confronted with the fact that it is a national problem, and that nobody outside of the Congress of the United States can remedy the situation.

Does the Senator from Michigan agree with that?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Completely. In fact, Mr. President, I think the distinguished Senator from Nebraska has entirely confirmed the conclusion I am undertaking to sustainnamely, that this problem has become exceedingly complex; that it has become interrelated across State lines; and that it is going to be necessary for us to depart in some fashion from the previous traditional rule. That is all the more reason why we should be exceedingly prudent in determining the basic rule that shall be applied in the present instance, meaning in respect to the floods which have recently occurred; because, as the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has repeatedly argued before our committee, whatever precedent is now established in respect to the instant floods in the East must be a precedent for dealing with floods in the Middle West and in the West and everywhere else in the United States.

So it is the precedent which at the moment becomes exceedingly important; and it is because of the importance of the precedent that I repeat my belief that the President of the United States is absolutely correct when he urges that we confine ourselves as closely as possible to emergency situations so far as the present session of Congress is concerned, and commit the new and enlarged challenge to which the Senator from Nebraska has appropriately referred to proper expert authorities for the kind of a survey and report which can produce a comprehensive answer instead of a piecemeal answer.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Is the Senator now speaking of this bill, or of the bill that is in the Commerce Committee?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am now speaking generally. I shall come to this bill in just a moment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Will the Senator tell us if there is any sign that an omnibus bill will come from the Commerce Committee?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am unable to answer the Senator's question. The committee is sharply divided in respect to the question of policy. It has voted one way within a week, and reconsidered that vote 6 days later, and has left the matter for subsequent umpiring at a meeting next Friday.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit a short observation in line with what he said about the local States and communities contributing to flood control, I believe that when we come to look into the matter of flood control it will be tied up with what will be found to be a very serious question of erosion.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agree to that.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In that case it seems to me it would be unjust to have the Federal Government assume all responsibility for expenditures, because where prevention of erosion is carried out, the lands will be benefited, it will save them from destruction, and the owners ought to pay a part of the expense.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agree 100 percent with the Senator. Mr. SHIPSTEAD. So I think we shall be in the wrong if we establish a policy whereby the Federal Government is to pay all the expense of whatever program is undertaken.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But, Mr. President, there again is testimony which emphasizes the need for judicial attention to this question. The Senator from Nebraska first rises and, I think, makes an excellent case for the necessity of Federal responsibility in certain situations; whereupon the Senator from Minnesota rises and makes an equally excellent case against Federal responsibility in other situations. The problem is to find the correct formula that can be equitably applied throughout the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I think any student of the subject will reach the conclusion that wrapped up in the flood-control problem is the problem of erosion. It is a very important item, too; I think probably, in the end, as important as anything in the problem. But if holding back flood waters will assist in the prevention of erosion, as I think it will when the program is carried out, we shall ultimately reach, as we go down the scale, smaller and smaller and smaller and more numerous dams that will be necessary to prevent erosion.

There are persons who, with very great logic, wish to start at the other end of the program, and commence with small dams on individual farms and increase the size until we get to the larger ones. Personally I should like to commence at both ends, so far as that is concerned; but, again, if we are going to demand contribution we cannot, as I understand, say to a man, "We wish to have you build a dam here to prevent erosion on your land." That is something which, under the Constitution and the Liberty League, we cannot compel a man to do. He can either take it or let it alone; so we immediately run into that difficulty.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is quite correct, and again he is exemplifying the fact that the problem is utterly complex, and that is the thing I am trying to say again and again—that it is entirely too complex for us to attempt to meet it by piecemeal legislation, in which we deal with this particular flood, which suddenly challenges us with its dramatic tragedies, forgetting that the whole thing is integrated in a common Nation-wide problem.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] has ably argued to the Committee on Commerce that the proper method of handling floods is not to deal with them primarily at the point of ultimate disaster, as in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi, but that the logical thing to do is to trace the flood menace to its source, no matter if it be a thousand miles away, and deal with it through reservoirs, and so

Very well, Mr. President; if we are ultimately to deal with the flood menace by tracing the flood to its source and impounding the waters in reservoirs-and I confess that appeals to me greatly as a matter of logic—then are we going to need the full extent of the spillway or floodway program of flood control which has been built upon a totally different theory, namely, the theory that the flood shall be taken care of where it finally climaxes its jeopardy?

The whole problem is wrapped up in this complex challenge, and I confess that it is with the greatest reluctance that I concede to the Overton bill a right of passage at the present time in its prospectively amended form. But it does have credentials, to which I shall subsequently allude, which may reasonably indicate that it would be a part of any subsequent plan; and, after all, it is only an authorization; and I assume that in the light of the President's purpose to provide a national answer to this question there will be no conclusive commitments to the works under the Overton bill until the national program is subsequently available.

I noticed a dispatch from Washington in the Associated Press only yesterday. I read as follows:

Starting an exhaustive study of the country's 15 major drainage

Starting an exhaustive study of the country's 15 major drainage basins, Interior Secretary Harold L. Ickes yesterday asked the cooperation of local authorities in preparing a National Resources Committee report on steps needed to prevent floods.

The drainage basin study, to be directed by Frederick H. Fowler, of San Francisco, was ordered by Ickes a day after President Roosevelt signed a bill liberalizing Reconstruction Finance Corporation lending regulations and authorizing loans of $50,000,000 to repair damages from recent storms and floods.

PART OF NATIONAL PLAN

Ickes, who is Chairman of the Resources Committee, said the study would be part of a national water plan to be submitted to the President as a guide for administration policy. It will embrace:

 The outstanding problems of water use and control.
 The broad outlines of a reasonable and interested plan of development.

3. The specific construction and study project which in the light of available information are consistent with the broad plan.

That is the approach to this flood problem which I approve, and that is the approach which it seems to me the Congress should pursue. If we are to pursue that sort of an approach, I submit that we should not have an omnibus flood-control bill, in which there may be rewritten the basic flood responsibility of the American Government to an extent which may be involved in commitments running literally into billions of dollars in the course of the years. And in the same feeling I repeat my reluctance to approve the Overton bill even in its amended form. But let me speak specifically of the Overton bill, Mr. President, and then I shall be done.

When the Overton bill came from the Committee on Commerce, and in the form in which it now confronts the Senate, from my point of view, it was utterly and absolutely indefensible. So far as I am concerned, in confronting questions of this character, I am bound to rely upon the expert recommendations of the expert branches of the Government in respect to these problems.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. In just a moment. So far as I am concerned, I am unwilling to approve a step, either of flood control, or river and harbor project, or any related waterway project, without the affirmative recommendation of the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers and the approval of the War Department.

Now I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan states that he is unwilling to approve any project unless it meets with the affirmative recommendation of the Army Engineers, the engineers of the Rivers and Harbors Board, and the Secretary of War. Permit me to call his attention to the statement made by General Markham in the course of the hearings conducted in respect to the pending bill, and also in respect to the omnibus flood-control bill now being considered by the Senate Committee on Commerce. He stated that the problem of the lower Mississippi Valley should be treated as an independent problem. It is in effect a sui generis problem. It is a problem of levees and floodways.

Let me further call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the report of the engineers to which he refers is that, in effect, nothing that can be done by way of reservoirs or other methods of controlling the flood waters of the Mississippi will dispense with the necessity for either the floodways recommended in the Markham plan and the Jadwin plan or the levees recommended in those plans.

Let me further call his attention to the fact that the report made by the Secretary of War on the pending bill declares that, with the amendments which I propose to offer, the bill is in accord with the program of the President. Therefore, it has Executive approval and expert engineering approval, and I think it meets the objections which possibly the Senator from Michigan might make to the bill.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. VANDENBERG. In just a moment. The Senator from Louisiana has somewhat anticipated my own conclusions in respect to the matter. I have already said to him that I considered that the plan for handling superfloods in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi has very formidable credentials which I am unwilling to ignore, in spite of my reluctance to do anything piecemeal in respect to this legislation. As I continue to trace the chronology of his own bill, I think the Senator will find that I am substantially in agreement with him, with one exception.

I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, the point of the engineers has always been that levees and dykes should be built on the lower Mississippi, and that all the flood control ought to be taken care of in the lower Mississippi.

While I am not an engineer, I have a great deal of respect for the Army Engineers, but it seems to me that their point of view is contrary to all logic. After all, the water comes from above, and flows down by drainage, and because of lack of forests. There are many factors which enter into the flowage of this water down the Mississippi Valley all at one time. It has always seemed to me that the logical thing to do would be to hold the water back, not to produce floods, but to prolong the flow-off of the water.

What is it that causes a flood? A great deal of water coming in the spring of the year, or during a period of great rains, is forced through drainage systems and ditches and through the creeks and the rivers down the Mississippi.

When your kitchen floor is flooded with water from the kitchen sink, you do not build ditches to carry the water away; you go to the sink and control the water where it starts until you are ready to use it.

There is another matter involved. When water which is rapidly drained from a region of country is treated as a public enemy instead of as an asset, its power for good is destroyed and damage is inflicted upon the country above.

I am not willing to say that levees should not be built; I am not sufficiently familiar with the lower Mississippi to pass judgment upon this bill; but when we come to discuss the question of a real flood-control program, the first thing we must bear in mind is that we have been dealing with floods on the lower Mississippi since the country was settled, and each flood that comes along does more damage than the one which preceded it. So the program we have been following ever since 1800 has not been effective in preventing floods. However, at some future time I shall go into the matter in detail.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am interested in the comments of the able Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead]. He is always an intelligent man to listen to on any subject to which he addresses his attention. So far as I am concerned, however, I confess the limitations of a layman in respect to problems of this nature, and I am prepared to do almost anything which the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors recommends, but I am not prepared to do anything against which they recommend. Then if there shall be any mistake made the mistake will be made in those expert sections of the Government which hold a primary responsibility for such situations.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I cannot see any conflict between the purposes of the pending bill and the general study referred to by the Senator from Michigan. As he knows, we in the Commerce Committee have been striving earnestly for weeks to attempt to establish a policy which has to do with a division of costs between the Federal Government and the localities benefited as regards the various localized projects. To speak of the pending bill particularly, there is not a thing in it which conflicts with or makes unnecessary any activity which we have in mind with regard to the omnibus bill.

Is it all right for me to continue to speak?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Oh, yes.

Mr. COPELAND. No matter what may be done in the upper reaches of the great river, the Mississippi, and its various tributaries, taking in the Ohio River and its tributaries; no matter what may be done in connection with projects included in the omnibus bill, there will never come a time, even if those projects shall be completed, when there will be such control of the headwaters as to render unnecessary the provision made in the pending bill. I spoke of that the other day, and I wish to speak of it again today. Even with the completion of the great project which is contemplated in connection with the safety of Pittsburgh, as I said the other day, the people of Pittsburgh are not going to be assured that their feet will not get wet.

The contemplated project, when completed, will at the very most lower the crest of the flood 7 feet when the reservoirs above are empty; and under the normal protection afforded by the reservoirs, the best that can be expected is a lowering of 5 feet. So after the crest of the flood shall have been lowered 5 feet in the Golden Triangle in Pittsburgh, there will still be a great volume of water rushing down the Ohio and rushing to the Mississippi also from tributaries to the west of the Mississippi. Therefore, as I see it, there will always be the menace in the lower Mississippi which will necessitate a run-off such as is contemplated by the gigantic work proposed in the pending bill.

The point I wish to make is that while I am in sympathy with much that the Senator has said, yet I can see no conflict whatever between the President's position, as indicated by what the Senator has said, or the omnibus bill upon which we are now working, and the particular bill under consideration. It is a part of a great plan which ultimately must be carried into effect in the United States in order to give protection to American citizens.

There are other incidental uses of these projects, though, perhaps, I should not say incidental, because they are really important. I refer to forestation, soil-erosion prevention, and power development. All those things will ultimately come in connection with protection against floods, and the national program in connection therewith.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the able Senator from New York is chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, and during the last few weeks has been struggling as earnestly as a man could struggle to keep the omnibus flood-control bill within rational limitations. I disagree out of the Golden Trian Federal Government is ordinary nature, some upon the persons local money in the long run.

with him when he says that there is not an inherent conflict between the omnibus flood bill and the announced Presidential policy, and the policy to which I subscribe, because I cannot escape the feeling that if we ever write a policy proposal such as is now contemplated in the Commerce Committee, which in general terms accepts complete and unlimited Federal responsibility for all flood conditions in the United States, we will not only have bashed in one end of the Treasury but we will have laid the groundwork for a renewal of the old logrolling legislative methods and the production of the old pork-barrel appropriation bills, which were the curse of Congress and the country until they were curbed. It seems to me that is perfectly inevitable if we announce a fundamental purpose to accept complete Federal responsibility for all flood conditions in the United States without the existing traditional check of the requirement of local contributions.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am sure the Senator knows my own view regarding this matter too well to let the impression prevail that I should be satisfied to let the Federal Government make all expenditures, regardless of benefits which may come to individual States or communities. I should be quite unwilling to do that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me interrupt the Senator at that point to state for the Record that the Senator was one of our lonesome minority of four that voted against the proposition to which I refer on the first roll call in the Senate Commerce Committee.

Mr. COPELAND. I should say, Mr. President, that I do not feel lonesome when I am with the minority, because I am so rarely with the majority that I feel entirely content. However, I have an ambition to present at this session of Congress a bill which cannot be charged by anybody to be a "pork" bill. I think it is possible to write a formula which will make clear what is the responsibility of the Federal Government and what is the responsibility of the local communities or of the individual States.

In the omnibus bill, for example, there is a provision dealing with the Connecticut River. In order to control floods in Massachusetts and in Connecticut, reservoirs must be built in New Hampshire and in Vermont. They are of no value whatever to New Hampshire and Vermont, but they have an important relationship to safety in Massachusetts and in Connecticut. It would be very difficult—impossible, perhaps—to have any sort of a tri-State pact which would make possible the allocation of costs and the imposition of taxes upon the communities benefited in two other States by reason of building reservoirs in Vermont and New Hampshire. I could speak of a dozen other similar instances.

There are features connected with what I might call scientific flood control which are properly Federal, where the Federal Government must intervene, where the Federal Government must use its funds because of the impossibility of composing differences between States or localities. Of course I agree, however, with the Senator from Michigan that if the entire cost of all flood work is to be borne by the Federal Government we should have to go to every rivulet in the United States and spend Federal money; and I suppose even the tears which we shed might be considered appropriate for Federal regulation, because ultimately they run off into a rivulet, and so into a stream, and ultimately into navigable water.

It must be possible, however, to find some formula by which we may properly place upon the Federal Government the items which appropriately belong there. At the same time, as regards other matters which are local, where the benefits are local—as, for example, in Pittsburgh, where even now some of the property owners are contemplating moving out of the Golden Triangle into safer places—certainly if the Federal Government is going forward to give safety of an ordinary nature, some sort of burden ought to be imposed upon the persons locally benefited, because they will save money in the long run.

So I do not think there is any difference of opinion between the Senator from Michigan and myself; but I do wish to see a plan worked out, both in the pending bill—and I think it has been worked out in that bill—and in the omnibus bill, so that we cannot be charged with putting together a great receptacle known as a "pork barrel", and which I shall resist to the very end, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I think there is no basic difference between the Senator from New York and myself upon the subject. He refers to the fact that the tears we shed ultimately contribute to the waters which accumulate. I am very sure that if we ever embark upon the policy which was voted by the Commerce Committee a week ago—and, fortunately, subsequently reconsidered—if we ever embark upon that policy, the tears which will be shed by the taxpayers of the United States before they get through will cause a flood which will require an entire new survey in order to conserve them.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. On the other hand, if the tears we have shed, and that are still being shed, and if the money represented by the debts we contracted that are still being paid and are going to be chargeable to generations yet unborn, which came about because we went into the World War, had been spent on a program of flood control such as the Senator himself has said would cost upward of $10,000,000,000, we would have even now the greatest system of internal waterways and transportation in the world, and we would have millions of dollars protected by reason of control of floods which we did not have previously. So, as a matter of fact, we could well spend the large amount referred to, especially over a term of years, that we spent within the period of a few years before and after we entered the World War.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, let me go back to the Overton bill and conclude. I promised the distinguished senior Senator from Arkansas that I would intrude upon his program for about 10 minutes this morning. I ask him to acquit me of all the responsibility for exceeding my time.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana. Mr. OVERTON. I should like to make a contribution on the subject of tears by paraphrasing, if I may, the lines of Lord Alfred Tennyson:

> Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean, Tears from the depth of some divine despair Rise in the heart and gather to the eyes, When I look upon the happy autumn fields—

Of the lower Mississippi Valley and realize what will happen to them unless this bill shall be passed by the Congress.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in the presence of that moving appeal I hasten to a conclusion.

When the Overton bill was reported from the Commerce Committee, if I may pick up the thread of my argument, I was unqualifiedly opposed to it for the reason that the Secretary of War, under date of February 15, had stated in respect to section 12 of the bill:

It is impossible to estimate the ultimate cost to the United States of these many things. The Department feels that the Government should not be burdened with such an immeasurable responsibility.

Upon the basis of that statement and upon the basis of my opposition to the bill in the committee, I offered a substitute which contained the literal recommendations of the War Department and the Chief of Engineers. I am not calling the substitute up, Mr. President, because it is my understanding that the senior Senator from Louisiana will present a complete substitute for section 12, which, instead of bearing the condemnation of the War Department and General Markham, enjoys their affirmative approval. I understand my substitute no longer will be necessary because my purpose already is achieved.

Mr. OVERTON. May I state that the Senator is correct, and I will offer such an amendment?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Therefore, Mr. President, so far as section 12 is concerned, my opposition is eliminated.

Now, I am forced to refer to a paragraph in the same letter of February 15 in respect to section 5, which chiefly interests the able Senator from Arkansas. I now read from the letter of the Secretary of War in respect to section 5:

Section 5 of the bill authorizes the construction of a system of levees to protect land in the backwater areas of the White River, and provides for payment by the United States of the entire construction cost of the system. This work is not recommended in the report. The requirement that the Government bear the whole construction cost is not in accord with the policy established by Congress in similar cases. Section 6 of the act of May 15, 1928, provides for the construction by the United States of levees protecting lands in areas subject to backwater influences of the Mississippi River on condition, among others, that local interests contribute 33½ percent of the costs of the work. This is a reasonable requirement in all cases of like character, and the Department is unable to recommend that the entire cost of the construction of levees in a backwater area be borne by the United States.

Mr. President, the Overton bill, as a whole, involves the probable expenditure of $272,000,000 in the States of Arkansas and Mississippi. My understanding is that section 5 involves only $12,000,000 of the sum total. From my point of view, I think it would be infinitely wiser to withdraw section 5 of the bill at the present time, so that we might cling literally to the formula of having an affirmative approval by the governmental experts in respect to the thing that we do in connection with this complicated contemplation.

The Senator from Arkansas made a very persuasive argument yesterday as to why the judgment of the Secretary of War and of General Markham upon this particular subject is not equitably well founded. He almost persuaded me that he was right; he may be right; but, in view of the fact that we are to have, as I have indicated in the quotation from the Associated Press, a complete, authentic survey of the entire problem within the next few months, and inasmuch as, manifestly, we cannot reach all these projects with our expenditures during the next few months, it seems to me we would be in far finer position, and so would the project described in section 5, if it were eliminated from this bill and were to await inclusion in the general plan. I repeat, however, that, in view of the fact that it is such an inconsequential item as compared with the whole, I am not disposed to stand upon my opinion respecting it. I should like to vote against section 5, but I shall vote for the bill if it shall be amended as proposed by the Senator from Louisiana. I will do so, however, only because it is an authorization—not an actual appropriation—and the actual, ultimate expenditures will be made only after we have the final benefit of a conclusive Nation-wide survey of the floodcontrol problem as a whole.

GREAT LAKES EXPOSITION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 233) providing for the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition to be held in the State of Ohio during the year 1936, and authorizing the President to invite the Dominion of Canada to participate therein, and for other purposes, which were, on page 2, line 10, to strike out "Agriculture" and insert "Agriculture and"; and on page 2, line 10, after "Commerce", to strike out all down to and including "add", in line 11.

Mr. BULKLEY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF BITUMINOUS COAL CONSERVATION ACT, 1935 (S. DOC. NO. 197)

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the argument of Hon. John Dickinson, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, before the Supreme Court of the United States in behalf of the Government officer defendants in the case of Carter against Carter Coal Co., Helvering, et al., March 12, 1936, in support of the constitutionality of the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935, be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania is granted and the argument will be printed as a Senate document.

REVISING THE VERSAILLES PEACE TREATY, BY REQUEST OF PRESI-DENT OF UNITED STATES, TO REMOVE HATREDS AND TO APPLY MONEY TO DEBTS DUE THE UNITED STATES INSTEAD OF PAYING FOR ARMAMENTS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I have in the last few moments enjoyed the discussion as projected by the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg], in which he referred to the necessity of the Government, or whoever shall be behind the pending bill as sponsors, making some provision for an expenditure apparently involving an appropriation of $272,000,000. Sir, I make note of the amount in order that attention may be called to the great necessity for money on the part of the Federal Government, and to the fact that the money should be from a source which legitimately should be called upon for payment. I will impose on the Senate a few moments while I again allude to one of those sources from which there should have come long since past to this Government the money with which to meet its immediate necessities.

Mr. President, this morning there was introduced for the Record, by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Minton], supported by the Senator from Alabama, an address delivered by a representative of the press speaking for the London Times, an eminent author of name of Sir Wilmott Lewis. I was attracted by his address and to one feature. Let me add, however, that I am not a stranger to the gentleman, and he is not to me. His eminent qualities as a scholar of literature and of history could well be mentioned in tribute by anyone who knew him; but one of my own experiences with this eminent international writer will not be without some interest to my distinguished colleagues.

Sir Wilmott delights to say that during the war I came in from some period of duty and addressed a gathering of French who were officials mostly, and added that I delivered my address in French to the French gathering, and when I had finished, said Sir Wilmott, "I was compelled to rise and tell them in English what this talk of Lewis was all about." [Laughter.]

In this respect, sir, I again turn to Sir Wilmott Lewis for the moment. I observe that this distinguished representative of the London press—scholar that he is, and now something of an adopted American—in his speech to the Associated Press called attention to the tribute that was due the press for ever presenting those claims of the citizens and those rights of a people which were evident within both their privileges and their just demands. Sir, I wonder why the great paper, the London Times, either from its own expression and its own editorials or from the facile pen of its distinguished representative here, has never a word in behalf of the payment of a debt which is due the United States of America from certain of its renowned debtors, and principally from that to which the distinguished writer alludes as "Great England."

Mr. President, I am moved by the fact—an interesting fact to me, sir—that an eminent statesman representing the English Government alludes to a speech I made on this honorable floor some time past touching the debts, and that the statesman alludes to me as one who "constantly irritates the friendly relations" between England and this country. He would have me cease, that I might more completely cultivate what he calls "peace."

I am flattered by the notice of my observations; but I also observe that another speaker refers to the debts and says the reason why money could not be advanced in behalf of these obligations, if I quote him literally, is because every country has the right to consider first its necessary defense. In that, I wholly concur; and it is because of that, and looking to my own country and her necessary defense in many forms, and the expenditures involved in all these improvements touching flood control, that debt payments become essential.

I observe that the colleague of the eminent legislator referred to concludes by calling attention to the fact that these demands on the part of America for the payment of debts overlook the fact that there is nothing with which to pay them; and he delights himself in indulging a line of the famous Latin—and if I shall be in error I hope to be corrected by my friend from North Carolina [Mr. Balley], and particularly by my eminent friend the Senator from Utah [Mr. Thomas]—I think the quotation was from the Eclogue of Virgil, where the observation is concluded, "Ex nihilo nihil fit"; "Out of nothing comes nothing", if I translate it literally. I know some eminent speakers to whom that allusion might be correctly made—that "Out of nothing comes nothing"—and some of those are not altogether limited to America. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I do not wish to exchange classics with the distinguished spokesman of the British Parliament; but my mind, in turn, can but recall that a better reference and a more appropriate one for the representatives of this great Government will be found in a line from Horace—and, if I do not do it an injustice, I think it tells us that—"Vita sine virtu mors est"; in other words, "Life without a virtue is death."

Sir, I turn then to this Government and ask, where is the virtue in professing that there is nothing with which to pay these debts, while in the meantime even to this morning comes to us the official report from this distinguished Government, in a legitimate and let me say commendable report—if the facts be as related—that England has now paid its obligations and has amounts in American money of $5,450,000 in its treasury, a surplus in excess of its immediate needs? Sir, at this moment it presents in its industrial report a list of 35 of its people, residents and citizens, who have in their income-tax returns disclosed a profit and an increase in the year of more than $5,000,000.

If these situations exist, as appears as officially reported, who in the public life of these great debtors or elsewhere may correctly say that there is nothing out of which they may pay their money that is due us, or that they are compelled to use their money for what they speak of as "defense"? In other words, sir, in anticipation of conflict somewhere, somehow, and the preparation for it, they shall absorb all the revenues that may be addressed and appropriated for conflict, but none of those revenues are to be paid to discharge the honest debts to this land, this America, which saved them in the very late conflict in which great peril stood immediately before them.

Mr. President, I am in the meantime attracted by the attitude of one of our debtors, France. We find, in declaration from the representatives of France in the last week, first, the expression that it is pledged in honor for an advanced loan to Rumania and to Ethiopia, and in the meantime the assertion and very frank statement that if there were money that could be applied to debts it would have to be reserved as a sustaining fund behind the franc, which has been traveling up and down in a circuitous and whimsical route very like the wheeling flight of some bird in an unascertained atmosphere.

Mr. President, we have from one of the other representatives of that great country that it is something of a shame—if I may use the exact word—that America should be constantly holding up France as being unwilling to pay its debts when we know that France has ever paid every obligation to the United States ever due, and harking back to the allegation that the United States did not enter the war in behalf of France, nor expend its money in behalf of the debtors, but France "came to the rescue of the United States by sacrificing her people and all her treasure to rescue the United States from being invaded by a common foe" which would have led to our "complete annihilation." For that we express great gratitude, even though it is born in imagination and has its issue from a conception of falsehood.

Mr. President, if it be true that these great nations feel they must exhaust their treasuries for armament, France lately declaring that that which is in process of construction is essential in view of what she says is now the new construction of Germany, let us ask ourselves for the moment, Is there not a way to avoid all this? What is the absolute evil? I make bold on this floor to say that it is the construction and application of what is known as the Treaty of Versailles. It is the penalties of that treaty, the different forms of punishment laid upon the routed or defeated enemy.

Does it not occur to those debtors that some treatment of the United States in a manner respecting its rights that could appeal to its people would have had a very interesting suggestion to the President of the United States upon the theory that we, a signer of the peace treaty though we did not ratify its provisions later, authorize the President in his sense of generosity and Christianity looking for peace and brotherhood to summon the signers of the Versailles Treaty to a new reconsideration, to something of a review of its terms and something of a reconsideration and remolding of its penalties such as is done in this country with decisions of the high courts of the land or with legislation that comes from this honorable congressional body?

The President of the United States may invite this gathering to assemble in the United States, far removed from the political influences, prejudices, and hatreds of their neighboring geography, and afford a completely impartial consideration. By assembling here, sir, the reviewers might reach a conclusion that wounded Germany could accept, that righteous France would adopt, and that just England would approve.

This being so, sir, and then following peace again being restored to these people, the need of these armaments increasing to the amount of millions would cease; the necessity for the payment of all their money for the increase of weapons of offense would end; and the uncertainty of temper that keeps them in constant fever of fear and annihilates their sense of peace and propriety ever, sir, with the agitation of more conflicts would be quelled and ended.

I take the liberty to suggest some consideration of this thought on the part of these eminent debtors, differing, sir, from the mere matter of money and the mere matter of paying from their treasuries. I present this solution looking to the welfare of their future. I suggest that our debtors might well invite the President of the United States to summon such a gathering, with a view to modification of the Versailles Treaty along lines which the people of this country could approve, which would bring again, sir, a revival of friendship to these nations of the earth and bring them back to a new conquest, in the language of the great French savant, Lamartine:

Victoire sans le guerre; conquerants sans l'armies. Victory without war; conquering without arms.

To this object, sir, I take the liberty of bringing to the attention of the Senate what I feel could be now the suggestion to these eminent debtors of one of the methods they could take that would make a strong appeal to this great Government to lend itself to that which finally would produce the results of peace and revive the harmony of distracted mankind among the nations that are now threatened with the annihilation by war of civilization in their own midst. I beseech them to turn to America, and realize that in our bosoms is hope for peace; in our hearts is all of friendship; and in our wisdom we suggest the method of complete restoration both of brotherhood among themselves and the harmony of friendship again with America.

I thank the Senators for allowing me to enter into this debate at this time.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER FLOOD CONTROL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3531) to amend the act entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes", approved May 15, 1928.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, in section 13, page 9, line 3, after the word "That", to strike out "$275,000,000" and insert "$272,000,000", and at the end of the bill to insert a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the project for the control of floods of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, adopted by Public Act No. 391, approved May 15, 1928 (45 Stat. 534), Seventieth Congress, entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes", is hereby modified in accordance with the recommendations of section 43 of the report submitted by the Chief of Engineers to the chairman of the Committee on Flood Control, dated February 12, 1935, and printed in House Committee on Flood Control Document No. 1, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, as hereinafter further modified and amended; and as so modified is hereby adopted and authorized and directed to be prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers.

SEC. 5. The Chief of Engineers, under the supervision of the Secretary of War, shall at the expense of the United States Government construct a system of levees substantially in accordance with general plan shown on map designated as sheet no. 1 entitled "Tributary Levee Location Survey—White River Levee District—Proposed Levee Location" accompanying report dated April 2, 1925, and filed in office of First and Second Mississippi River Commission Districts, Memphis, Tenn. The Chief of Engineers shall have the right to alter, change, or modify said plan as to the grades and levee sections: Provided, however, That no work shall be commenced on the above-mentioned project until the State, levee boards, or other responsible local interests have given assurances satisfactory to the Secretary of War that they will (a) provide without cost to the United States all rights-of-way necessary for the construction of said project; (b) provide drainage facilities made necessary by construction of levees; (c) acquire and provide without cost to the United States all flowage and storage rights and easements over, upon, and across the lands and properties within the protected area in the event it becomes necessary in the judgment and discretion of the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers to use said area, or any part thereof, for an emergency reservoir; (d) hold and save the United States free from liability for damages on account of the use of said area for reservoir purposes during said emergency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there are provisions of the bill which do not meet my approval. I had intended to submit some observations, in which some of my objections to the bill would be stated; and I also had intended briefly to discuss what I conceive to be the unsound and unwise policy which has been pursued in dealing with the broad question of flood control.

However, it is desired by a number of Senators to pass the bill at the earliest possible moment. I shall, therefore, if opportunity is afforded before adjournment this afternoon, discuss the points to which I have just alluded; and if opportunity is not afforded today, I shall seek recognition for this purpose some time tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill was passed.

STATE TOBACCO CONTROL COMPACTS

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], with his consent, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4430, being a bill relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced. I make the motion with notice that I shall offer the House bill as a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair informs the Senator that the House bill is on the table calendar, and the Senator may move to take up the House bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Is the House bill on the calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is on the table calendar. Mr. BAILEY. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12037, relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced, providing for the control of, production of, or commerce in, tobacco in such States, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, before action is taken on the motion may I ask the Senator from North Carolina whether it has been called to his attention that Puerto Rico, whose people are large growers of tobacco, has been left out of consideration in the bill, and if he knows whether or not there will be objection to the inclusion of amendments which will give Puerto Rico a standing similar to that accorded the States insofar as agreements or tobacco compacts are concerned?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I understand that the Senate is now considering the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill has not been agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. I will answer the Senator, pending the motion, in the affirmative, and I intend to make a statement about that which I think will satisfy the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. My reason for bringing the question before the Senate at this juncture is that the Puerto Rican people and the Bureau of Insular Affairs have just now called this matter to my attention, and I have not had opportunity to digest thoroughly the objections to the bill in its present state which they have presented to me. It is my disposition not to delay this measure, but I want the assurance that Puerto Rico, having no representative in this body, will receive equal treatment with that accorded the States which are specifically mentioned in the bill. If that is the wish and the agreement of those who are interested in furthering the passage of the bill, certainly I have no other objection to it at all; but I wanted that understood.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the junior Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner], being necessarily absent, left with me the special request that I should consent to an amendment providing with respect to Puerto Rico that the base years, instead of being 1933, 1934, and 1935, should be made any 3 normal years during the last 10 years. The trouble was that in 1933, as the consequence of a hurricane which swept Puerto Rico, their production of tobacco fell from an average of about 25,000,000 pounds to 16,000,000. Of course, it would be inequitable to establish as a base any 3-year period when in one of the years they produced only 16,000,000 pounds. I ask the Senator if that will not meet the objection?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that will meet one of the principal objections. But may I point out to the Senator from North Carolina a further objection? As I understand the bill, Puerto Rico has no standing in it such as that accorded North Carolina, Maryland, Connecticut, and other States, and what Puerto Rico desires is to have representation in the vote where the policy is decided. Would the Senator have any objection to including such language as would give Puerto Rico, for the purposes of tobacco control, equal standing with that of a tobacco-growing State?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I could not possibly have an objection to that. Let me say in fairness, however, that I cannot make such an agreement, but it should be left to the Senators from Wisconsin, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, and Ohio. The Senator from Connecticut is present, and I will leave it to him. That does not affect the bright-tobacco belt in the remotest degree, but so long as the bill contains provisions with respect to States producing other than bright tobacco, I feel that I must refer that matter to the Senators from those States.

Let me go a little further. If it were necessary, in order to get the authorization or the consent of the Congress to the compact in the bright-tobacco belt, embracing Kentucky—we include that State, although it is really in the burley belt-Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, I would be perfectly willing to strike out all the bill relating to other States and to Puerto Rico. My concern is wholly with the bright and burley tobacco. But I cannot even do that without a very courteous, considerate regard to the other States.

Mr. TYDINGS. With the indulgence of the Senator from North Carolina, I shall take the liberty of reading a very short memorandum which has just been put into my hands, which explains the position of Puerto Rico:

H. R. 12037, Senate bill 4430, relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced providing for the control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in such

States, and for other purposes.

Section 1 of the bill authorizes the States in which tobacco is produced to negotiate compacts for the purpose of regulating and controlling production and commerce in tobacco in such States. Puerto Rico is not included in this section.

Later on I will ask that Puerto Rico be included.

Section 9 provides that if any compact entered into among three or more of the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin, and Connecticut becomes effective, or if any association or associa-tions are formed, the membership of which includes at least two-thirds of the producers of cigar-filler tobacco and cigar-binder tobacco in three or more of said States, commerce in cigar-filler tobacco produced in Puerto Rico shall be regulated during the period in which any such compact remains effective or such associations continue to operate in the manner provided for in the

It is clear that Puerto Rico is refused her right to go along with the States of the Union in negotiating compacts for the production and commerce in tobacco. While it remains optional for one State out of four in section 9 of the bill to stay out of a compact, it is mandatory for Puerto Rico to regulate its production and commerce in tobacco.

The unfairness of that is at once apparent.

The above bill passed the House and is ready for Senate action with the objectionable conditions imposed on Puerto Rico.

What Puerto Rico desires:

1. In the first place, Puerto Rico wishes to reiterate her desire to keep tobacco production under control as carried out by the A. A. A.

2. Secondly, Puerto Rico wants to enter into compacts jointly with other States and on equal terms. To attain these ends it is suggested and requested that the following amendment be made to H. R. 12037:

Insert in section 2 at the end of line 19 on page 2 the following subparagraph:

"'State' includes Puerto Rico and 'State legislatures' and 'State act', and similar phrases wherever used in this act, include Puerto Rico."

Then they wish to strike out sections 9 and 10 of the bill. My only reason for interrupting at this stage is that Puerto Rico does not have any representation in the Senate, and, the bill having already passed the House, some of these things on first blush seem manifestly unfair, and it appears to me that the request that Puerto Rico be given standing in the bill and treatment such as is accorded to States growing tobacco is just and fair.

I do not desire to delay the passage of the bill, but as chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs it seemed to be my particular duty to call this matter to the attention of the Senate, and I know the Senate will deal fairly with it when the amendments are presented.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, let me say that insofar as Puerto Rico is involved nothing can be done by this measure. or under this measure, which would affect its crops this year. This bill approves a compact by way of a statute of the Commonwealth of Virginia with respect to the flue-cured belt, but it approves nothing with respect to Ohio, or Pennsylvania, or Connecticut, or Puerto Rico. It simply makes provision that in the event the States I have just mentioned should enter into a compact, then a quota should be placed upon Puerto Rico-and Puerto Rico desires a quota.

I am not concerned about that; I simply wish to treat my colleagues in the Senate with the proper consideration. I should be perfectly willing to confine the bill to Tennessee. Kentucky, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, and stop there; but the Department of Agriculture and the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry thought best to present a bill that would embrace the production of all tobacco in this country.

There was no intention on the part of anyone to treat the people of Puerto Rico unjustly, but I do think that when it was undertaken to fix as the base period the years 1933. 1934, and 1935 the fact was overlooked that the hurricane had reduced the output of tobacco in Puerto Rico in 1933 from an average of 25,000,000 pounds to only 16,000,000, and in 1934 from an average of 25,000,000 to a relatively small figure.

After conference with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner], who is very much interested in the matter, and who was compelled to leave the Chamber, I agreed that I would propose an amendment providing fair treatment to Puerto Rico with respect to the quota.

The Senator from Maryland brings up the proposition as to whether Puerto Rico shall be put upon an equal footing with Ohio, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, and Connecticut in the matter of agreements or compacts. I am not going to argue against that. Puerto Rico, however, is a Territory or an island possession, and the other political units are States. There is the distinction. Further, the bill before us does not affect the crop in Puerto Rico for the present year, and if there is anything wrong about the bill it can be corrected later.

Having said that, I wish to keep the floor, if possible, while I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Lonergan] if he is agreeable to an amendment affecting the consequences desired by the Senator from Maryland. If other Senators are agreeable to such an amendment, I am agreeable to it; but I cannot foreclose them.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I agree with the proposal to fix the quota on the basis of the average normal crop during any 3 years in the past 10 years. I think it would be a mistake at this time to agree that Puerto Rico be included with the sovereignties named to participate in the compact. Is a Territory a sovereignty?

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut if he thinks it would be fair, simply because Puerto Rico is not yet a sovereign state, that it and its people should be placed at a disadvantage in a measure so very important, so very vital to the happiness and welfare of the people of Puerto Rico. As the Senator knows, they have practically only two crops—sugar and tobacco. They are in a far less favorable condition for economic security and protection than is the State of Connecticut, where so many industries thrive and where so many revenues are open for the employment of the people.

Mr. LONERGAN. If we should agree on a quota basis fixed on the normal production during any 3-year period, does the Senator believe that Puerto Rico would be protected?

Mr. KING. I confess that I am not sufficiently advised as to all the factors which would form a proper basis upon which to predicate a judgment. It appeals to me simply from a sense of justice that those three or four million people whom we have taken under our control, and who are dependent for their livelihood upon tobacco and sugar, should not in any circumstances be placed under any disadvantage. As a matter of fact, if any advantage is to be given or any discrimination is to be made, it should be given to them, because of the inferior position politically which they occupy.

Mr. LONERGAN. I am in agreement with most of what the Senator has said; and when I obtain the floor I shall read some telegrams which have been sent to me by tobacco growers and dealers in my own State, all friendly to the proposition in behalf of Puerto Rico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12037.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12037) relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced providing for the control of production of or commerce in tobacco in such States, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEELY in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The object of the pending bill, as has already been stated, is to make it possible for the tobacco States to enter into a compact, with the consent of Congress, under the Constitution, to reduce their production of tobacco. If Puerto Rico is included within the permissive grant of Congress to enter into a compact with the other tobacco States or Territories, the only object would be that by entering into that compact Puerto Rico would bind herself to a reduction of her production. If Puerto Rico under such a compact should reduce her production of tobacco, it seems to me it would be advantageous to the tobacco growers of the United States. If she does not see fit to enter into such a compact she will be no worse off than she now is under the terms of the bill, because she is not included in that part of it. She might still be subject to the quota referred to in section 9, I believe, which it is proposed to amend.

So it seems to me that it is not a very important matter whether Puerto Rico is included within the compact-making section or not, because if she should enter such a compact it would be for the purpose of reducing her own production, which she might not wish to do.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am not quite certain that I comprehend the position taken by the Senator. As I understand, there are provisions in the bill which will compel Puerto Rico willynilly to submit to reduction in the production of tobacco. If she is to be emancipated from the operations of the pending bill, and may produce as much tobacco as she pleases, without any inhibitions, then I think there is nothing in the contention that we should take cognizance of her appeal in this matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the quota provision here applies only in the event four States-Wisconsin, Ohio, Connecticut, and Pennsylvania-enter into a compact. If three of those States do not enter into a compact, which is a different situation from the general compact provided for in section 1, Puerto Rico is not affected. Only in the event that three of those four States enter into a compact does the quota situation apply to Puerto Rico. If no compact were entered into, Puerto Rico would be absolutely free from any restriction, as I understand.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Utah had an amendment. Does he intend to press the amendment?

that amendment, I will say that I intend to offer it at the appropriate time. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator's address.

Mr. BAILEY. I am willing to have the Senator offer the amendment at this time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, what is the present status of the bill? Is it open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amend-

Mr. WALSH. There are no committee amendments, I assume.

Mr. BAILEY. There are no committee amendments. Mr. WALSH. May I, then, present an amendment which will not be contested?

Mr. KING. I shall be through in a moment, Mr. President. I shall now read the amendment which I intend to offer.

On page 2, line 16, after the word "act", I propose to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to grant the consent of Congress to negotiate any compact for regulating or controlling the production of, or commerce in, tobacco for the purpose of fixing the price thereof, or to create or perpetutive but the control of the purpose of the pu ate monopoly, or to promote regimentation; but such consent shall be limited to compacts for the regulation and control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco, in order thereby to enable growers to receive a fair price for such tobacco.

I shall offer that amendment at the appropriate time; but I do not wish to take the Senator from North Carolina from

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield. Mr. ADAMS. The inquiry I wish to make is of a legal nature, as to whether or not Puerto Rico occupies such a status as a political entity that it may enter into a contract or compact. Does it have the elements of sovereignty? I rather understood that it was a possession of the United States; and I am really asking, for information, whether or not we may place it in the status of a State so that it may independently make contracts.

Mr. BAILEY. I question whether we could recognize it in its capacity as a sovereign; but Puerto Rico does have a government, and it has a Governor representing it. For that reason I should not unduly press the point on the technical ground of law. The Constitution, however, authorizes the consent of Congress to compacts between the States; and if the Senator desires a strict construction of the Constitution, it refers to the States, not the Territories, not the possessions.

I do not desire to press that point too far. I wish the people of Puerto Rico to know that I intend to treat them fairly. I should also like the Senate to know it. I think there can be no question about the matter. For that reason I am putting forward the amendment as requested by the Senator from New York, to give the people of Puerto Rico a fair quota, and I think that is all they need. I think they will be entirely satisfied with it. I think the other matter is technical, and really amounts to nothing of a substantial character.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course the constitutional inhibition is against the States making any compacts without the consent of Congress. If they were all Territories and not States, I assume they could make any sort of compacts they might see fit to make, subject to the general laws governing them, because they were not States. It is, however, really a technical matter about which I think we need not concern ourselves here because, Puerto Rico being a State, it is very doubtful whether the Constitution prohibits Puerto Rico from entering into a compact with any other political entity.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, when we shall have treated Puerto Rico fairly she will benefit by the control of production just as Wisconsin might benefit or as Pennsylvania might benefit. She will then get just as much benefit as any State. I question whether she should ask for any more than that. We shall give her a perfectly fair deal. Now Mr. KING. Mr. President, I handed an amendment to the Senator some time ago. If the Senator is alluding to sit in and make a treaty. I question whether she has such right; but I would not like to offend the Puerto Rican people. I want them to feel that I am very friendly and that the United States Government is so.

Now I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am glad my colleague [Mr. WAGNER] has approached the Senator from North Carolina; I have had no conference with him, but somehow or other the people of Puerto Rico regard my colleague and myself as being, in a sense, their Senators. We have a very large Puerto Rican population in New York City.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that is a great tribute to their wisdom and their discrimination.

Mr. COPELAND. That is very kind of the Senator; but I wish to make plain, if I can, what I understand the people of Puerto Rico want. Had I been here earlier I should have spoken of the fact that the Governor of Puerto Rico, Governor Winship, is on his way here now about this bill. What they are anxious to do is to have inserted in this bill, following the subparagraph on page 2, after line 19, where the definitions begin, the following:

State includes Puerto Rico; and State legislature and State act and similar phrases wherever used in this act include Puerto Rico.

Then they would be on exactly the same plane in this measure as are the States.

I look upon Puerto Rico as so much ours, and we have so much responsibility for them, that wherever we can and wherever we should it is our obligation to do what we can to protect the few crops which they raise. I was quite resentful some time ago when there was such a quota of sugar provided for Puerto Rico as did not meet their requirements. Under conditions which the Senator from North Carolina in his wisdom has pointed out there has been a great difference in production from year to year.

Mr. BAILEY. We propose to correct that.

Mr. COPELAND. If their request to have included in the definitions a statement that would give Puerto Rico the same status as that of the various States of the Union involved were granted and sections 9 and 10 were omitted from the bill, then they would be exactly on the same basis as the States.

Mr. BAILEY. If we omit from the bill sections 9 and 10, Puerto Rico, Ohio, Wisconsin, and Connecticut are out. The sections up to 9 and 10 relate to the bright-tobacco belt. I would be willing to do that but for the fact that we would run into trouble when the bill goes back to the House, and I want this measure to become a law. If it goes back to the House without the provision for the other tobacco-producing States, I am afraid we will encounter difficulty in conference.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senator what is his advice? What does he recommend? I know from what he has said that he is eager to have Puerto Rico given sufficient protection.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me state, in answer to that question, what I propose. If the Senator will turn to page 7 of the bill, lines 8, 9, and 10, he will see that provision is made for the base period on which the quota is calculated, that period being the years 1933, 1934, and 1935. With the junior Senator from New York I have drawn, and am proposing at his request, an amendment that makes a correction there and substitutes a provision under which they can use as a base period any 3 normal years during the last 10 years.

Mr. COPELAND. "Any 3 normal years."

Mr. BAILEY. Any 3 normal years. In place of the figures "1933, 1934, and 1935", in line 10, I propose to insert the words "any 3 normal years."

Mr. COPELAND. I would take it, then, if I may interrupt the Senator-

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator has before him the data and he can pick out the normal years, and see that that will give Puerto Rico about 26,000,000 pounds of tobacco a year.

Mr. COPELAND. I think if the Senator would exclude 1932 with 6,000,000 pounds, 1933 with 16,000,000 pounds, and 1934 with 25,000,000 pounds it would be better.

Mr. BAILEY. The year 1932 is not in the bill, and 1933,

Mr. COPELAND. Pardon me, but will the Sepator be good enough to read once more the proposed amendment?

Mr. BAILEY. It is proposed to amend by striking out. on page 7, line 9, the words "the crop years" and insert in lieu thereof the words "any three normal crop years", making the language read "during any three normal crop years." Does the Senator follow that? Then it is proposed to strike out the figures "1933, 1934, and 1935" in line 10 on the same page and insert in lieu thereof the words "during any three normal crop years during the last 10 years."

That will give the Department of Agriculture absolute freedom to take the normal years in the last decade. Under that Puerto Rico could not possibly suffer any injustice.

Mr. COPELAND. I think probably that statement is correct. If I had my choice-

Mr. BAILEY. I send forward the amendment at this time, in order that it may be before the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.
Mr. LOGAN. I am getting more confused the further the discussion continues. I wish to understand the legal aspects of this question. What is it that it is proposed to have the Congress ratify? Is it the Virginia act which was recently passed proposing a compact, or are we attempting to confer power upon the States which they already have, or are we attempting to ratify a compact that will be made in the

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I can answer the question. We are proposing to give consent to a compact between the bright tobacco States upon the basis of the Virginia act. That answers that question.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President-

Mr. BAILEY. Now let me answer the other question. With respect to the other States and Puerto Rico which produce tobacco, we are not giving consent; we are simply providing that in the event there should be compacts between such States, Puerto Rico would be brought in on a basis with such States. I think I have made that perfectly clear.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator has made it clear; but if that should be done and Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Ohio, and Puerto Rico should be included in a compact, then it would have to come back to Congress for ratification before it could be effective, would it not?

Mr. BAILEY. I think so.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not see it that way.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Carolina and my colleague will yield, the history of consents of Congress, from the information I have been able to gather. is that they do not have to come back unless the acts granting consent by their own terms require that they shall come back for ratification. I recall that in the act which granted the consent of Congress to certain States in the Colorado River section to enter into a compact which involved certain Federal activities and rights in that locality, that act required that the compact should be brought back and ratified by Congress; but, unless the act itself stipulates that the agreement shall be brought back, Congress has heretofore on other occasions exercised its right simply to grant consent without requiring that the compact be brought back for ratification.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask another question. I am for the bill which has been presented, but I doubt whether it will be effective. I want to vote for it, however, because the tobacco producers must have some relief, but how can we ratify a compact before it has ever been made. before we have ever seen it, or know what its terms are? Does not the provision of the Constitution that no State shall, without the consent of Congress, enter into any agreement or compact with another State, mean that the States themselves must have agreed on the compact and then, when it comes to Congress, exactly in the nature of a treaty. Congress ratifies the specific thing without delegating an unknown power? So it seems to me that perhaps the compact would have to come back to Congress and be ratified. In view of the fact that it has not been done heretofore, if when the production was 16,000,000 pounds, could be excluded. I it has never been questioned by the Court, we are without any guidepost to follow, but the Constitution would seem to indicate that it must be ratified by Congress after it is made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not know just why such an interpretation is necessary because, for instance, we have already by act of Congress consented to the making of compacts between certain States with respect to stream pollution. Those compacts were not required to be brought back for ratification. Congress may consent that two or more States may enter into a compact on a subject which is stipulated in the act granting the consent.

Mr. LOGAN. If the terms of the compact are prescribed, I think that would be valid.

Mr. BARKLEY. Where that is done, it is not necessary, in my judgment, that the compact be brought back for ratification by Congress unless in the act granting consent it is stipulated that it shall be brought back; and in that case, of course, it must be done.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me say further if that were required in this case the act would be wholly ineffective, because before the compacts could be entered into and brought back for ratification, the Congress would, in all likelihood, have adjourned, and they would not be effective until Congress should meet again in 1937.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree that that is the difficulty, but at the same time all our difficulties come about by trying to find short cuts to do something and not taking the necessary time. It would be infinitely worse to have the States enter into a compact and later have it declared invalid, for that would leave a vast amount of confusion. I know that some such legislation should be enacted. If this is the best we can do, then I want to do it, but I am seriously of the view that there should be some provision that the compact shall not be effective until the Congress shall have approved it, unless we ratify the Virginia law, as has been stated by the Senator from North Carolina, and I think we could do that, because then we would have a specific thing before us; but that leaves out the other States and Puerto Rico.

Mr. BAILEY. I think there is some confusion on the subject of ratification. Congress consents; it does not ratify; and it approves the Virginia act as a basis of the compact with respect to bright tobacco.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] rose a moment ago and desired to interrupt me. I now yield to him.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a few days ago I asked for a legal opinion from the acting solicitor of the Labor Department in reference to interstate compacts, as one such compact is pending before the Committee on Education and Labor, of which I am chairman. I should like to have that legal opinion inserted in the Record in connection with this debate.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall be delighted.

There being no objection, the opinion was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM RELATING TO INTERSTATE COMPACTS

The power to make compacts among the States rests on article 1, section 10, paragraph 3, of the Federal Constitution, which provides that "no State shall, without the consent of Congress * * enter into any agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power * * *." Question arises as to the distinction between an "agreement or compact" permitted subject to congressional consent and a treaty or alliance absolutely prohibited by paragraph 1 of the same section of the Constitution. The cases have not explored this distinction. But in referring to the problem the cases have quoted Story's Commentaries with approval to the effect that the prohibition of any "treaty, alliance, or confederation" applies to treaties of a political character such as treaties of alliance for purpose of peace and war. But the terms "compact or agreement" permitted by paragraph 3, refer to agreements which are undertaken for "the mutual comfort and convenience of States bordering on each other", do not compromise the supremacy of the United States or the sovereignty of the several States (Virginia v. Tennessee, 148 U. S. 503, 519 (1894); Wharton v. Wise, 153 U. S. 155, 170 (1893)). There is no record to show that Congress has ever declared a compact invalid on the ground that its political consequences and implication place it within the category of prohibited treaties.

to show that Congress has ever declared a compact invalid on the ground that its political consequences and implication place it within the category of prohibited treaties.

The Constitution does not state when or how congressional consent shall be given. Acquiescence to the terms of a compact may precede or follow the making of the compact or agreement. Moreover, consent may be implied from acts of Congress and need not be expressly given. Thus in Virginia v. Tennessee (supra), consent by Congress to an agreement between these two States fixing the boundary was found in subsequent Federal legislation establishing districts for judicial, revenue, and other purposes which recognized the boundary as established by the compact.

recognized the boundary as established by the compact.

House Joint Resolution 146 seeks to give general consent to interstate compacts for the promotion of uniform labor laws. There is previous legislative precedent for the passage of broad resolutions assenting in advance to compacts relating to a defined subject matter. Thus in 1911 an act was passed authorizing interstate compacts for the conservation of forests and the water supply (36 Stat. 961, 16 U. S. C. A., sec. 552). And in the second session of the Seventy-third Congress legislation was enacted granting States the right to enter into compacts for mutual assistance in the prevention of crime and authorizing the establishment of agencies deemed desirable by the States for the purpose of making the compacts effective (48 Stat. 909, 18 U. S. C. A., sec. 420 (1934)).

While the compact clause implies in terms to all consensual

While the compact clause implies in terms to all consensual transactions between States, dicta in Virginia v. Tennessee (supra) have raised the question whether the consent of Congress is needed for every compact or agreement. In considering the validity of that compact, Mr. Justice Field wrote that "there are many matters upon which different States may agree that can in no respect concern the United States." And, as to these, the assent of Congress, express or implied, is not needed. But the decision in fact rested on the ground that implied consent had been given after the compact was made. However, it is best to obtain such assent in order to allay any doubt as to the possible validity of a particular compact because of lack of congressional approval.

in order to allay any doubt as to the possible validity of a particular compact because of lack of congressional approval.

Originally most interstate compacts were authorized to settle boundary disputes. The case of Virginia v. Tennessee (supra) involved a compact relating to boundaries which had been signed 100 years before the case was finally settled in the Supreme Court in 1903. The control and advantageous use of navigable rivers which form the boundaries between States has furnished the subject matter for other compacts. Thus, in Wharton v. Wise (supra), the agreement which the Court scrutinized concerned the respective rights of Maryland and Virginia on the Potomac River. An important compact between New York and New Jersey set up the New York Port Authority to administer the interests of these two States in New York Harbor. Another compact between the same States signed in 1833 provided that the New York Police should have police authority over the whole width of the Hudson River, although the actual boundary between the two States is in midstream. Further, the interstate-compact device has been utilized to apportion State indebtedness in the case of Virginia v. West Virginia. In the agreement of separation between the two States it was stipulated that the debt of Virginia be apportioned between the two States on a fair basis. Congress approved the agreement in the act of 1862, whereby West Virginia was admitted into the Union. This agreement was the basis of a series of cases before the courts, which did not end until 1919, when West Virginia finally made provision for payment acceptable to Virginia. This case assumes importance because the Supreme Court considered the problem of the enforcement of compacts against a State which failed to fulfill its obligations under an agreement. As a result of the settlement, however, this issue was never finally decided by the Court.

The interstate compact has been commonly used as a device to settle difficulties between the States. Since the adoption of the Federal Constitution Congress has given its consent to 56 compacts. More than 30 of these have received congressional approval since 1918.

In conclusion, it may be noted that the courts have never raised serious question concerning the validity of interstate agreements. If properly negotiated and ratified, such agreements have received legal recognition. Moreover, in several cases the Supreme Court has suggested in its decisions the interstate compact as the proper device for a solution of the difficulties involved in the litigation before the Court. Thus, in New York v. New Jersey (256 U. S. 296, 313), involving question of sewage disposal in New York Bay, the Court said:

"We cannot withhold the suggestion, inspired by the consideration of this case, that the grave problem of sewage disposal presented by the large and growing populations living on the shores of New York Bay is one more likely to be wisely solved by cooperative study and by conference and mutual concession on the part of representatives of the States so vitally interested in it than by proceedings in any court, however constituted."

Also see Washington v. Oregon (214 U. S. 205, 217, 218; 1919). Minnesota v. Wisconsin (252 U. S. 273, 283; 1909).

Mr. WALSH. In some accidental way the State of Massachusetts has been omitted from among the States enumerated on page 6. It is not generally known that in the State of Massachusetts there are a number of producers of filler tobacco and wrapper tobacco for cigars. Accordingly, Massachusetts should be included among the list of States.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will propose the amendment, I shall have no objection.

Mr. WALSH. With the Senator's permission, then, I propose an amendment, on page 6, line 3, after the word "Wisconsin", to insert the word "Massachusetts."

Mr. BAILEY. That is most agreeable, and I hope the amendment will be accepted.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the amendment be adopted at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the amendment be stated by the clerk.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 3, it is proposed, after the word "Wisconsin", to insert the word "Massachusetts", so the sentence would read:

If, pursuant to this act, any compact entered into among three or more of the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin, Massachusetts, and Connecticut becomes effective—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. I yield now to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I now desire formally to offer my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 16, after the word "act", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to grant the consent of Congress to negotiate any compact for regulating or controlling the production of, or commerce in, tobacco for the purpose of fixing the price thereof, or to create or perpetuate monopoly, or to promote regimentation, but such consent shall be limited to compacts for the regulation and control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in order thereby to enable growers to receive a fair price for such tobacco.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a similar amendment was insisted upon when the Senate had the oil-compact bill under consideration. I think we should not by any act of ours indicate that we approve of any practice, policy, or agreement between the States that would make for monopolistic control of the market.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, there is nothing in the bill that would provide for monopoly; there is nothing in the bill that would provide for price fixing. The whole purpose of the bill is to bring about a situation in which the farmers may get fair prices for their tobacco. I do not see how the amendment is inconsistent with the purposes of the bill, if the Senator insists upon it. My trouble is that we must have this proposed legislation enacted now if it is to be worth anything to the bright-tobacco producers.

Mr. KING. The bill will have to go to conference, and I am sure there will be no objection to any declaration by this body or the other body against any policy that would make for monopolistic control of any commodity. Knowing the predilections—and I do not say this by way of harsh criticism-of some officials of the Department of Agriculture. I am not so sure that efforts might not be made to fix prices and to support policies which might justify monopolistic control of commodities.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from North Carolina, who has the floor, yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BAILEY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not going to oppose the amendment of the Senator from Utah; but on its face it seems inconsistent. There is no object to be served in trying to deceive ourselves. What we are trying to do is to bring about a reduction in the crop of tobacco so the price will indirectly be affected to the producer. There would be no objective in simply allowing the States to bring about a compact to reduce production unless it would enable the farmer to obtain a higher price for his tobacco. The amendment of the Senator provides that the bill shall not be construed to authorize monopoly. None of us desires to sanction monopoly, and certainly there has never been and could not be a monopoly among the farmers in the production of tobacco. It is only among the manufacturers and those who frequently farm the farmers that monopolies are found.

does contain the element of inconsistency because what we are trying to do is to make it possible for the farmer to increase the price of his tobacco-not to fix it, because nobody wants to fix it, but to bring about an even keel between production and consumption so there will not be large surpluses such as occurred prior to the enactment of the A. A. A. law.

Mr. KING. I do not desire to occupy any time in argument because I understand the Senator from North Carolina is willing to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. BAILEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Florida is interested in this measure because a good deal of tobacco is produced in that State. I should like to have Florida included in the list on page 6. following the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] where "Massachusetts" was inserted. I move an amendment to insert the word "Florida" after the word "Massachusetts" at that point.

Mr. BAILEY. That is most agreeable to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 3, after the word "Massachusetts", inserted by the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh], the Senator from Florida proposes to insert the word "Florida", so as to make the sentence read:

If, pursuant to this act, any compact entered into among three or more of the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin, Massachusetts, Florida, and Connecticut, becomes effective—

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Florida that my information is that Florida is already included under the provisions of the bill because Florida raises the type of tobacco which is provided for under the Virginia act. The section of the bill to which the Senator has offered the amendment provides for a different type of tobacco from that which is grown in Florida. What the Senator seeks to accomplish is really accomplished by the provisions of section 1.

Mr. FLETCHER. If that is true-

Mr. BAILEY. I am not so sure about that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand, the amendment of the Senator from Florida has been adopted and that automatically takes him off the floor. I do not want to take the Senator from Florida from the floor. I am seeking recognition in my own right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There has been no vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I understood I had the floor and had yielded to the Senator from Florida and then to the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is so much confusion in the Chamber and Senators are so constantly violating the rule with reference to addressing the Chair and seeking recognition that it is difficult to know just what is taking place. Senators will please be in order.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I do not believe the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] is correct in his statement. The first portion of the bill relates to States which are mentioned in the act of the Commonwealth of Virginia. It seems to me while the objective desired by the Senator's Florida is not mentioned in that act. I wish the Senator amendment is good as a sort of caution and resolution, it from Florida to be fully protected. Why not let his amendment be adopted? Then, if it proves to be improper or surplusage, it may be stricken out in conference. I do not wish to leave the Senator from Florida in a doubtful position under the circumstances.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that that was my own view of the matter.

Mr. TYDINGS and Mr. BYRNES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield first to the Senator from Maryland. Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as I understand, it is in order to offer an amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Not until the pending one is disposed of.

Mr. TYDINGS. How are we going to dispose of it?

Mr. BAILEY. I shall yield the floor in one moment. I have been yielding for discussion; but let me say one word and then I shall take my seat.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not wish to take the Senator off the

Mr. BAILEY. The philosophy of the proposed legislation is fairly in accord with the philosophy of our Republic. I wish to make that clear before the Senate. In the Hoosac Mills case the Supreme Court held that the power to control the production of crops did not rest in the Congress or the Federal Government, and said—I think this was obiter, but they said it—that that is a power reserved to the States.

Very well. If that is a power that is not in the Congress, but is in the States, then here is the first step in a great movement to do what has been discovered to be necessary in this country, and that is to bring about a reasonable control of the production of crops to prevent the destructive influences of unwieldy surpluses. So we are passing this bill in pursuance of the power of the States; and all the States are asking is that the Congress give a consent which it was specifically provided in the Constitution might be given.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Under the terms of the bill, may any State which raises flue-cured tobacco, or dark-fired tobacco, as we commonly call it, take part in effecting this arrange-

Mr. BAILEY. Any State mentioned in the bill may take part in it; and any State that is not mentioned would certainly be welcomed in, because the whole idea is control.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true of burley tobacco, of course?

Mr. BAILEY. Kentucky and Tennessee are mentioned because they do produce burley tobacco. They are in the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, Mr. President, the Senator means they are in the Virginia act, which is made the pattern after which this compact will be framed.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; I have the Virginia act here.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor, all I desire to be assured is that Tennessee may come in if she desires, under the terms of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Tennessee is in the bill as it stands. Let me verify that, to be perfectly sure about it.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BAILEY. Before I yield let me answer the inquiry of the Senator from Tennessee. He will find that North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, South Carolina, and Georgia are in subsection (b) of section 3 of the Virginia act, and are, therefore, in the proposed legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator. Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the Senator now will vield-

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina

Mr. BYRNES. The only reason why I made the suggestion to the Senator from Florida was that the language of section 1 specifically says:

That any compact, compacts, agreement, or agreements negotiated and agreed upon by the States referred to in the act of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved March 13, 1936 (known as the Tobacco Control Act)—

Which States have been read by the Senator from North Carolina-or by any other State or States producing any type or types of tobacco referred to in said act, which is in conformity with said act and relating to the type or types of tobacco specifically referred to in said act, shall become effective to the extent and in the manner provided for in said act without further consent or ratification on the part of the Congress of the United States of America.

Mr. FLETCHER. But Florida is not referred to in the act.

Mr. BYRNES. But the bill specifically says-or by any other State or States producing any type or types of tobacco referred to in said act.

Of course the type of tobacco produced in Florida is similar to the types of tobacco referred to in the Virginia act, so it would come in; and by the language of section 1 the action of the State in entering into the compact is ratified by this bill. Under section 9 there is a great question as to whether there is, or could be, any ratification of a compact entered into, when such compact has not been set forth in the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, at this point I should like to inquire of the Senator from Florida in just what form he has his amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. It merely adds the word "Florida."

Mr. BAILEY. At what point?

Mr. FLETCHER. Page 6.

Mr. BARKLEY. After "Massachusetts."

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, after "Massachusetts"? Very well. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts? Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Is the kind of tobacco mentioned in section 6 a different kind of tobacco from that mentioned in the Virginia act?

Mr. BAILEY. Entirely.

Mr. WALSH. So the Senator from Florida considers the tobacco raised in his State to be of the character and kind raised in Pennsylvania, Connecticut, and Massachusetts?

Mr. BAILEY. It is the cigar type of tobacco, while the North Carolina and Virginia tobacco is for use in the manufacture of smoking tobacco, and especially cigarette tobacco.

Mr. FLETCHER. It will not do any harm to insert the word "Florida."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor, I desire to ask him a question.

For the first time I have seen the act which seems to be the basis of any compact between the States. I notice that it is really a criminal code. It provides for the punishment of persons for infracting some of its provisions, selling improperly, and what not. I was wondering if, by the measure which is now before us, there will be imported into every State every criminal provision of the Virginia act. In other words, if we pass this bill, will all the States that are parties to the compact endorse or take over the provisions of this bill, and will all the provisions of this bill constitute acts of the several States and be enforceable within those States, including the criminal provisions?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, it is perfectly clear to me that nothing will be imported into North Carolina from Virginia. North Carolina will either adopt an act similar to the Virginia act, or not; and South Carolina, Kentucky, and Tennessee will do precisely the same thing. Congress imposes nothing upon the States. The matter of State sovereignty I am willing to leave to the State of Virginia, one of the most conservative of all the Commonwealths. It has proposed this legislation and is out in front of the other States. We simply submit the measure to North Carolina, South Carolina, Kentucky, Georgia, and Tennessee. If they do not wish the criminal statute, there is no power on earth that can impose it on them; but the thing I like about the proposal is that if this undertaking to enable the States to execute powers which the Supreme Court says Congress does not have, and the States do have, is a success, then each State is responsible to its own people; and that brings home the great doctrine of local self-government. I am willing to trust it in North Carolina; I take it the Virginians are willing to trust it in Virginia; and the people of Utah would be willing to trust it to their legislature. The members of the legislature have to come back to the people every 2 years and give account of their stewardship. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Utah that this is precisely along the lines of his thinking, as I understand. It is a reference to the States of the power of local crop control in view of the decision of the Supreme Court that Congress does not have that power, and is therefore a recognition of the great doctrine of local self-government. That, I am sure, will appeal to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator is right in interpreting my attitude toward local self-government in contradistinction to this movement for centralization of all power and authority in the Federal Government; but I think the Senator has not answered my question. The point

I had in mind was this: By the ratification by North Carolina, South Carolina, and the other States, of the Virginia act which is the basis of the compact, with all of its criminal provisions, does the more formal act of ratification import into those States all the provisions of that act?

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no!

Mr. KING. Or must the legislatures of the respective States that become parties to the compact pass acts on the subject; and may they pass acts that will be departures from the provisions of the Virginia statute?

Mr. BAILEY. I thought I made that clear when I said nothing could be imported by way of law from one State to another, but I will answer the question flatly. There is no power under heaven whereby the Congress of the United States can impose upon North Carolina a law of the State of Virginia.

Mr. KING. There is no doubt about that; but I do not think the Senator has yet quite answered my point.

By ratifying the compact, does the State of North Carolina ratify all the provisions of the Virginia act, or may it pass an act excising from the Virginia act, if desired, any of its provisions or adopting them holus bolus?

Mr. BAILEY. We shall have to have an act similar to the Virginia act in order to comply with the terms of the consent; but the word "similar" does not necessarily mean word for word; and the State of North Carolina will pass upon its own pains and penalties, as every State will.

Mr. KING. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that answers the question.
Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he takes his seat?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BAILEY. I do. Mr. BYRNES. The answer to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is contained in the language on the first page, in line 8, where it is provided that the State acts shall be essentially uniform and in no way conflicting. That is the only provision affecting the actual respective State acts.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to bring to the attention of the Senator from North Carolina a situation which he and I and others interested have discussed in

As this bill was originally introduced in the House under the designation of H. R. 11928 it contained sections 3 and 4, which are brief, and I will read them:

SEC. 3. The shipment or transportation in interstate or foreign commerce by any person from any State of tobacco produced or marketed in violation of any compact or any State act is hereby prohibited.

Section 4 reads as follows:

All tobacco produced or marketed in any State which is a party to a compact entered into pursuant to the provisions of this act shall, except for the actual transportation of such tobacco in interstate of foreign commerce, be subject to the laws of such State, and the sale or marketing of such tobacco shall be subject to regulation by such State.

As the Senator knows, the House committee struck out those two sections as the bill was reported and as it was passed, they are not in the bill which we are now considering, and the Senate committee which reported the Senate bill likewise left out those two sections.

Many of the tobacco growers in my State, and probably many in the Senator's State, and perhaps in all of the States. feel that the elimination of those two sections very materially weakened the benefits which will be conferred by the enactment of this measure, and many of them were hoping that here in the Senate we might restore those two sections to the bill.

In the House, as I understand, some question was raised as to the constitutionality of those two sections, and other objections were raised on the part of possible noncompact States which might be affected by the legislation. However desirable those two sections might be if it were possible to include them in the bill, what is the Senator's view as to the wisdom of attempting to restore those sections, in view of the lateness of the season and the likelihood of arousing controversy over them in the other body, if not in this one?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have made inquiry on that point, and I made the inquiry after conference with the senior Senator from Kentucky. It is my information from very high sources in the House that should the sections which are stricken out be restored in the Senate, it would be fatal to the legislation. That being so, and all of us being under the necessity of moving rapidly—the farmers are planting their tobacco in the rows today-I do not think we can afford to undertake anything of that sort, and I am sure from what I know about the Senate that there would be opposition on the floor of the Senate, and we would have more difficulty and delay. I do not know how it would go in the Senate, but I know there would be opposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator. My observations from conferences with other Senators lead me to the same conclusion which has been reached by the Senator from North Carolina, and while I myself would prefer, if it were possible, that these sections be included, the legislative situation and the state of the planting season in the States involved are such as to lead me to the conclusion that it is not wise to attempt to restore the sections.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of the proceedings the telegrams which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUFFIELD, CONN., April 21, 1936.

Senator Augustine Lonergan:

I protest against the quota placed on Puerto Rican tobacco. The Connecticut tobacco growers depend greatly on this tobacco in order to make a good cigar. Won't you use your best effort to make this quota vetoed? Anything you may do to help the Connecticut tobacco growers will be more than appreciated.

FRANK S. BRACKNESKI.

SUFFIELD, CONN., April 21, 1936.

Senator Augustine Lonergan:

Connecticut tobacco industry depends largely on Puerto Rican fillers; therefore, the quota on such tobacco grown in Puerto Rico would prove a detriment to tobacco growers. Please help the tobacco growers by preventing the passage of such a quota HOWARD E. HASTINGS.

WEST SUFFIELD, CONN., April 21, 1936.

Senator Augustine Lonergan:

The Puerto Rico quota will do immense harm to the tobacco industry in Connecticut, as Connecticut growers depend on Puerto Rican fillers to make good cigars. Anything you can do to help the Connecticut grower will be greatly appreciated. CHRISTOPHER MICHAEL

SUFFIELD, CONN., April 21, 1936.

Senator Augustine Lonergan:

To the interest of tobacco, Connecticut growers, every effort should be made to prevent the passage of the quota placed on Puerto Rican tobacco. This tobacco is necessary in conjunction with Connecticut tobacco to make good cigars. Please do everything you can to help the Connecticut tobacco growers.

GEORGE KING.

HARTFORD, CONN., April 21, 1936.

Senator Augustine Lonergan,

Washington, D. C.:

We strongly protest against the Puerto Rico quota for provision of Kerr control bill as detrimental to the interest of the Connecticut Tobacco Growers Association. The wrappers grown in Puerto Rico Connecticut Topacco Growers Association. The wrappers grown in Connecticut depend mainly for the fillers grown in Puerto Rico for the manufacturing of cigars. Puerto Rico does not grow any wrapper tobacco to compete with the State of Connecticut. Anything you can do for us in this matter will be greatly appreciated.

HARTMAN TOBACCO Co.,

ALBERT NEWFIELD.

HARTFORD, CONN., April 21, 1936.

Hon. AUGUSTINE LONERGAN.

Hon. Augustine Lonergan,

Senate Office Building:

Connecticut Havana seed tobacco, of which we are the largest handlers, is used quite largely as a binder in combination with Puerto Rico, as well as with Pennsylvania and other domestic tobaccos. I feel very strongly that any quota imposed on importations of Puerto Rican tobacco, as provided in the Kerr bill, should be very carefully considered as to reasonableness of same.

J. W. ALSOP, INC., J. W. ALSOP, President.

SUFFIELD, CONN., April 21, 1936.

Senator Augustine Lonergan,

Deliver floor of Senate: Connecticut tobacco growers depend greatly on Puerto Rican fillers which are necessary to make a good cigar. Please see what can be done to prevent the quota placed on Puerto Rican fillers. The passage of such quota would greatly affect Connecticut tobacco industry.

Mrs. A. WEISCUICKAS.

HARTFORD, CONN., April 21, 1936.

Benator Augustine Lonergan,

Deliver on floor of Senate:

Ninety-eight percent of all Puerto Rico fillers go into cigars made with a Connecticut broadleaf binder and Connecticut Valley shade-grown wrappers. A pientiful supply of Puerto Rico fillers available at all times essential for the continuance of the present good market for broadleaf and shade grown. New cigars coming on the market in last several years are using this triple combination and finding an ever-increasing favor with the public. Principle of Kerr bill to regulate production and prices of cigar-leaf tobacco through the medium of interstate compacts is admirable and necessary. Principle of established quota for Puerto Rico is vicious and uneconomic in principle and contrary to all established policies. No quota placed on Sumatra tobacco in trade agreement with Holland. Puerto Rico should be controlled as any other part of the United States. Would appreciate using your influence in of the United States. Would appreciate using your influence in changing that part of bill relative to the establishment of quotas on Puerto Rico as the best method of insuring the continued prosperity of the shade and broadleaf farmer of Connecticut.

George E. Gershel.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina desire a vote on the amendments which he has sent to the desk?

Mr. BAILEY. Those are the Puerto Rican amendments. I should like to have action on them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend, on page 7, line 9, before the word "crop", by striking out the word "the" and in lieu thereof inserting the words "any three normal."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I know exactly what the Senator has in mind, but I want the RECORD to show it. It so happened that in 1932 there was a hurricane in Puerto Rico and the tobacco crop was destroyed, so that the production that year was less than 25 percent of normal. Not only were the plants destroyed, so as to interfere with the production that year, but the crop of 1933 was about half normal. By 1934 the A. A. A. came along, and there was some reduction of crop by reason of that.

What I assume the Senator means by the language of his amendment is that normal years are the years, in reality, which exclude 1932, 1933, and 1934, which were abnormal for the reasons I have mentioned.

Mr. BAILEY. That is my understanding. I would take the normal years as being the years by which we arrive at an average for the decade, leaving out the abnormal years.

Mr. COPELAND. I am in perfect understanding with the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina. The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend, on page 7. line 10, by striking out "1933, 1934, and 1935" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "during the last 10 years."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from New York and the Senator from North Carolina a question. Is it important to include Puerto Rico in this bill? Would it not be better and fairer for the Puerto Ricans, in view of the calamitous condition to which the Senator from New York referred, as well as other economic and political conditions, not to attempt to bring Puerto Rico within the operations and confines of the measure before us?

Mr. BAILEY. Let me say to the Senator that it is important just in this sense. Over on the House side of the Congress Members from the cigar-tobacco producing States are very much interested, and if we should strike section 9 and the following sections from the bill, it would probably mean the destruction of the bill. That is one reason why we are going so far to treat Puerto Rico with the utmost fairness. I do not think it would be safe to strike from the bill what we may call the cigar-filler sections. I fear it would be fatal to the legislation, and so I am willing to make most any concession concerning Puerto Rico in order to keep them in the bill.

Mr. KING. But it does seem to me, Mr. President, that the provision found in subsection (c) on page 7 is too drastic, too much of an effort toward regimentation. It reads:

The Secretary shall establish for each farm in Puerto Rico for each crop year a tobacco-marketing quota.

It seems to me that to compel the Secretary of Agriculture to establish for each farm in Puerto Rico a quota is going too far.

Mr. BAILEY. I may say to the Senator that that is what is done with regard to the States when they enter into a compact, except that the Secretary of Agriculture does not establish the quota; it is fixed by a commission. The whole idea is the establishment of quotas.

The Senator has offered an amendment which prevents anything like price fixing or regimentation, and I think he ought to feel very well satisfied that he has that stopped.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I feel such a deep concern for the people of Puerto Rico, and I know so well their fears, their apprehensions, the economical, political, and industrial problems which beset them that I confess I would go a great deal further for their protection than I would as to some other people in other parts of the world; and for the Congress of the United States, superimposing its power upon them, to attempt to control their lives, their thoughts, their actions, their economy, seems to me rather tyrannous and oppressive.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I very largely share the views expressed by the Senator from Utah. I feel that we did Puerto Rico a great injustice when we fixed the quota on sugar. Puerto Rico is not favored, as are the States of the Union, by diversity of crops and industries, but is limited in her opportunities. I have been much touched during the last 6 months to learn of the distress of Puerto Ricans, of the unemployment in the island, and the importance of finding some sort of industrial activity to engage the attention of the citizens of that Territory.

I must say that I think the Senator from North Carolina and others interested in the pending bill have shown a spirit of generosity. I think they have tried to deal fairly with Puerto Rico. When I came on the floor I had expected to be disagreeably insistent upon the inclusion of Puerto Rico in the list of those who should take part in the compact; but I can see, as pointed out by the constitutional lawyers of the Senate, that there would be some difficulty about the inclusion of Puerto Rico in a group making up such a compact as the Constitution provides.

It is true, however, I am sure-and if I am not correct, I wish the Senator from North Carolina would correct methat even though Puerto Rico be not included with the States which have a part in the compacts, yet Puerto Rico will have all the advantages which accrue to the States which actually participate in any compact. Therefore, if the quota fixed is a quota representative of the prosperous, productive years in Puerto Rico, then Puerto Rico will share in all the advantages of the compact, and those of us who are interested, as we all are, I am sure, in the welfare of Puerto Rico will have no just cause for complaint. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I shall interpose no objection to the passage of the bill.

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN CRIMINALS

Mr. KING and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that the Senator from Tennessee desired to call up an appropriation

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, an understanding was reached earlier in the day that following the passage of the tobaccocompacts bill which has just been passed the Senate would consider Senate bill 2969, the alien deportation bill, and I rose for the purpose of moving the consideration of that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2969, to authorize the deportation of criminals, and so forth.

Mr. McNARY. In the absence of the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Norbeck], and at his request, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN CRIMINALS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2969.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2969) to authorize the deportation of criminals, to guard against the separation from their families of aliens of the noncriminal classes, to provide for legalizing the residence in the United States of certain classes of aliens, and for other purposes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, prior to continuing my argument in opposition to the Kerr-Coolidge bill, I wish to make a statement to the Members of the Senate in order that my position may be made clear not only to them but to my constituents. I ask permission of my colleagues to make this statement, because I think it due my constituents, many of whom are tobacco farmers in North Carolina, and likewise to the people throughout the country, that they should know my attitude on the so-called deportation bill.

LXXX--366

The present occupant of the chair will probably recall that several days ago the bill now under consideration was then before the Senate, at which time I discussed it on two consecutive afternoons. At that time I agreed that the then pending question, which was the so-called alien-deportation bill, should be laid aside in order that the Senate might devote itself to the proceeding incident to the impeachment of a Federal judge, but I permitted the deportation bill to be laid aside, so to speak, with the understanding that when the impeachment proceedings had been concluded I would still be in possession of the floor. impeachment case having been concluded, I recognized the fact that there was to come before the Senate emergency legislation of great interest to the people of the country and, not being desirous of placing myself in the position of defeating or delaying any of that proposed legislation, I agreed to give up the floor in order that such emergency legislation might be considered and acted upon.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Tennessee has now left the floor. I was anxious to know if it is contemplated that the appropriation bill will be considered by the Senate this afternoon?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, on behalf of the Appropriations Committee, I can say that it is not expected that the appropriation bill will be considered until tomorrow.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to ask, if I may, the Senator from Tennessee, who has now returned to the Chamber, when it is expected that the next appropriation bill will be brought before the Senate?

Mr. McKELLAR. It was expected that the appropriation bill would be considered today, but it seems that an arrangement has been made whereby the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Reynolds] will proceed this afternoon, and the appropriation bill will be called up tomorrow.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

Mr. REYNOLDS. So, Mr. President, in order that emergency legislation might be considered, I was very happy indeed to have the opportunity of being of what help I could be in securing action upon the measures in question. The flood-control bill came up and was passed, after which I was exceedingly desirous of bringing to the attention of the Senate the bill pertaining to the tobacco compacts, in which I was greatly interested, because my State of North Carolina produces more tobacco than does any other State in the Union. North Carolina has within its borders the largest tobacco warehouse in the world; North Carolina contributes to the Federal Government more money annually than does any other State in the Union, with the exception of the State of New York, and that is attributable very largely to the fact that in North Carolina we are great manufacturers of tobacco in its various and sundry forms for the market throughout the entire world.

I was also interested, Mr. President, in that measure because in North Carolina there are tens upon tens of thousands of toiling, hard-working tobacco farmers who are vitally interested in having action upon the bill which the Senate has passed today.

I now wish to state upon the floor of the Senate for the benefit of my constituents and my friends in North Carolina that I did everything that was humanly possible to bring about the enactment of the tobacco-compact bill, and, Mr. President, I want my constituents in North Carolina, and particularly the growers of tobacco, to know—and I hope the gentlemen of the press who represent the newspapers of North Carolina will so state to the tobacco farmers of North Carolina—that I have made a great sacrifice upon the floor of the Senate in order to serve my constituents in North Carolina—"and how"? [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I know of no question in which I am more deeply interested than in the question of the deportation of habitual alien criminals, and the restriction of immigration under the laws of this country, and in order that I might serve the farmers of North Carolina, who were expecting the tobacco-compact bill to be passed yesterday, as it has passed today, I was forced to limit my argument upon the pending Kerr-Coolidge bill to 3 hours. There is so much to be said about it that I have looked forward with great pleasure to the physical activity involved in speaking upon the floor of the Senate 10 hours a day for 30 days.

Mr. President, I have not as yet launched into my argument in regard to the bill now pending because under an agreement into which I was necessarily forced to enter in order that the tobacco-compact bill might be considered my time on the pending bill was limited to 3 hours, and I therefore felt that I had a perfect right to utilize a portion of my time to explain to the Senate and to my constituents in North Carolina and to the people of America as a whole why my argument upon the pending bill was thus limited.

But I am a man of my word, Mr. President. I consented to limit my argument to 3 hours as a result of an agreement having been made to permit the tobacco-compact bill to come before the Senate and to be considered and passed today in order that the farmers of North Carolina and other tobacco-producing States of the Union might be benefited by the enactment of such legislation. I shall endeavor to keep within the time agreed. I made an agreement to speak only 3 hours upon the bill. I shall now proceed with my argument on the pending bill.

Mr. President, I am exceedingly regretful that every Member of this distinguished body is not present today, but that is impossible because, unfortunately, some of our Members are confined to hospitals, and others, as a result of overwork, have been forced to remain in their homes in order that they may regain their former good health.

I desire to preface my remarks by stating that there is no more important question before the American people today than the question involved in the bill now before the Senate, for it will not only affect those who at present reside within the confines of this great country, but it will affect generations upon generations to follow. If ever we are to begin checking immigration into this country in order that America may be retained for Americans, if ever we are to begin the ejection and deportation of habitual alien criminals from this country, we must begin now.

Mr. President, for the benefit of the members of the Senate, I wish to restate that the Kerr-Coolidge bill has been misnamed. It is said that it is a deportation bill. I say that it is quite the contrary. I say that, on the contrary, it is an importation bill, because instead of ejecting from the shores of this fair land the habitual alien criminals, it will import them into this country. I believe I shall be able to prove that statement, for when we legalize the presence of those who entered here illegally and who have remained here illegally in violation of our laws, we are breaking down and opening up the floodgates of immigration. Why is that so? It is because every alien whose presence we legalize will remain here and we will be compelled to permit the members of his family from shores beyond the seas to enter this country outside of and beyond the quota of 153,000 a year.

Mr. President, we have arrived at a time when the Members of this body and the Members of the other branch of the United States Congress will soon reach the forks of the road. There they will have to go either to the right or to the left. There they will have to stand for America for Americans or vote for America for the aliens. There is but one question here to be decided. Are we for America for Americans, or are we for America for the aliens? That is the question to be decided by this body and later to be decided by the other House of our National Congress.

Mr. President, I am not the only person who stands within the shadow of the dome of this magnificent Capitol of the greatest country upon the face of the earth opposing this bill. I am not the only person who stands within the shadow of yonder flag opposing the bill. However, I want

Members of this National Legislature and the American people generally to know who stands in opposition to the passage of the Kerr-Coolidge bill, and I am now delighted and feel honored to call the roll of honor.

Those organizations which stand flat-footedly and 100 percent against this bill are the American Federation of Labor, the American Legion—

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGill in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield only for a question, because every moment is going to count with me. I do not want to be discourteous to my friend, for whom I have a deep affection, but he will appreciate the fact that I am limited to a 3-hour address, and I must make utilization of all that time.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to know by what authority the Senator states the American Federation of Labor is opposed flat-footedly to this bill?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be very glad indeed in a few moments to read communications from the principal organizations I shall mention.

I repeat, I am backed 100 percent and flat-footedly and unhestitatingly and enthusiastically in opposition to this bill by the American Federation of Labor, by the American Legion, by the Veterans of Foreign Wars, by the Disabled Veterans of the World War, by the Military Order of the World War, by the Daughters of the American Revolution—who are in our great Capital now in annual convention—by the Sons of the American Revolution, by the Patriotic Order of Sons of America, by the Association of Firemen and Engineers of the United States with their 500,000 members, by the Junior Order of United American Mechanics with their 500,000 members throughout the length and breadth of this country, and in addition thereto by 110 other patriotic societies in America whose endorsements I have for the enlightenment and benefit of the Members of this body.

Mr. President, I propose to prove every statement I make. In my last argument here I recall that in discussing the question with my friend the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolings] a question arose as to where the first shot was fired during the Revolutionary War.

My good friend the Senator from Massachusetts the other day said some contention had been made that the first shot of the Revolutionary War was fired in New Hampshire. I wish to say, in passing, that, regardless of where the first shot was fired, or where the shot was fired that was "heard around the world", I hope that when this matter shall have been finally determined upon the floor of the Senate, the defeat of this bill will be a shot that will be heard around the world by every single alien who proposes to enter this country in violation of our immigration law. If the shot that sounds from the Senate Chamber around the world when this bill is defeated is heard by every alien who intends to enter our country in violation of our laws, I say it will be the second best thing that has been done in America since we freed ourselves from the power of those who live beyond the blue waters of the Atlantic.

The first shot of the Revolutionary War may have been fired in Massachusetts or New Hampshire, Mr. President; but I desire to say that the shots that were fired during the Revolutionary War that ended the war, that turned the tide of the war, that brought about victory for the patriots of the Revolutionary War, were fired in my State of North Carolina, at Kings Mountain, not far from which place the first Constitution of the United States was drafted.

Mr. President, North Carolina having decided the Revolutionary War, I shall proceed with an argument of this question and endeavor to substantiate the statements I made a moment ago as to the organizations that are with me in opposition to the un-American Kerr-Coolidge bill which has been brought here, and which will do what? Which will bring about the legalized entry into this country within the next 3 years or more of millions of immigrants, all of whom will be able to come into this country legally outside the quota of 153,000 persons annually.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Only for a question.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In view of the fact that section 3 of the bill, which refers to permitting certain classes of aliens to remain in this country, relates only to 2,862 persons, I should like to ask the Senator to explain how large are the families of these aliens, since he comes to the conclusion that the bill will permit millions of their relatives to come in.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am deeply grateful to my friend from Washington for that inquiry. The only figures mentioned in connection with the bill are the figures 2,862. The number which is now 2,862 was only about 1,500 1 year ago, when Mrs. O'Day, Representative from the State of New York, secured the passage of what was known as the O'Day resolution, which for a period of 1 year, ending on March 1, 1936, prevented the deportation of about 1,500 or 2,000 aliens. But since the O'Day resolution was introduced in the House of Representatives, the number of 1,500 or 2,000 aliens who were caught has been increased to 2,862. The 2,862, Mr. President, represents only a very small fraction of the aliens in America who entered the country illegally. and who have remained here since then in violation of the law. In other words, the number 2,862 represents only the aliens who entered illegally who have been caught by the Immigration Service of the Department of Labor. In furtherance of the statement I made a moment ago to the effect that the number of 2.862 represents only a fraction of the total number involved, I venture the assertion that there are in this country as a minimum no less than 1,000,000 aliens who have come in illegally, in violation of our immigration laws.

I am glad to find sitting here with open ears and watching with anxious eyes none other than my distinguished colleague Hon. James J. Davis, of the State of Pennsylvania, who, I feel assured, will verify my statements. If any man in the United States knows and is familiar with the immigration and deportation laws of our country, my colleague from the State of Pennsylvania is that man, because under two Presidents he served as a Cabinet member in charge of the Department of Labor, during which many years of service to his Government and to his country he made a special study of immigration and deportation, and of the measures that have been enacted and that should be enacted for the protection of the American people who desire to preserve America for Americans.

Sections 2, 3, and 4 of the bill if passed will make legal that which now is and for some time has been legal. Under sections 2, 3, and 4 the entry will be legalized of millions of aliens who are not now entitled to remain here because they slipped into our country in violation of its laws and remained here ever afterward.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. The query of the distinguished junior Senator from Washington [Mr. Schwellenbach] has prompted me to seek information regarding one particular section of the bill, because I am sure the Senator from North Carolina has studied it. I refer to the admission of a large number of aliens by the so-called interdepartmental committee. I should like to read a portion of the section to the Senator and ask him for his opinion regarding it. I am just an ordinary, every-day sort of a person; and the Senator from North Carolina, being one of the leading lawyers of his State, can best answer this question:

Sec. 4. (a) An alien who was or hereafter may be admitted to the United States—

Hereafter-

An alien who was or hereafter may be admitted to the United States as a nonimmigrant under section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1924 (43 Stat. 154; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 203), or as a student under subdivision (e) of section 4 of that act (43 Stat. 155; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 204), and who is of a class admissible to the United States in a nonquota or preference-quota status, may make applistates in a nonquota or preference-quota status, may make application to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization for a change to the status of a person admitted as a nonquota immigrant under subdivision (a) of section 4 of that act (43 Stat. 155), as amended (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 204 (a)), or as a person admitted by virtue of a preference in the quota under clause (A), paragraph (1), of section 6 of that act (43 Stat. 155), as amended (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 206 (a)) title 8, sec. 206 (a)).

(b) If the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization finds that said alien-

(1) At the time of his application would be entitled to a non-quota visa or to such preference in the quota if he were outside the United States;

(2) Did not enter the United States as a nonimmigrant or student to evade the quota provisions of the immigration laws-

In other words, if the alien came in here intentionally as a student, and then decided that he wished to remain here. would the interdepartmental committee have the right to admit him; or, if he came into this country as a visitor-and I think the ships of the various ports clear about 1,000,000 visitors every year-if any of them came here and remained here, and then decided to make application for admission, would the interdepartmental committee under this bill have power to admit them?

Mr. REYNOLDS. They would have that power, Mr.

In substantiation of what I said a moment ago in regard to those who oppose the bill, I wish to give the Members of this body some idea as to the great interest that is being displayed by these organizations and even by State legislatures throughout the country.

Yesterday I sent to the desk a resolution which had been forwarded to me by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of South Carolina and it was printed in the RECORD. I particularly call this resolution to the attention of the Senators from South Carolina in order that they may know what their constituents think about the matter. It was a resolution approving the action of United States Senator Reynolds and Representative Starnes in introducing their alien-deportation bill.

I mention at this time a bill drafted by Representative STARNES and myself because, before the completion of my argument, I shall make a motion to return the pending bill to the Committee on Immigration for further consideration. I shall make two other motions, one of which will involve the Reynolds-Starnes bill; and, in view of the fact that a large number of the resolutions I shall read, and a large number of the telegrams I have received, and a large number of the letters I have received from time to time from the organizations I have mentioned, take into consideration the Reynolds-Starnes bill, it will be necessary for me from time to time to mention both bills.

I proceed with the reading of the resolution from the Legislature of the State of South Carolina:

Whereas it has come to our attention that United States Senator Reynolds and Representative Starnes have introduced in the Congress of the United States a bill to the effect that aliens convicted of crime in the United States, aliens belonging to any organization having as its object the destruction of the American Government, and aliens afflicted with certain diseases be deported and returned to the country from which they came; and Whereas it is the thought of this house that the enactment of such a bill into law would be of great benefit to the United States and its citizens: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the house of representatives. That it heartly en-Whereas it has come to our attention that United States Sen-

Mr. President, I read a telegram, under date of March 31, 1936, addressed to me at Washington, D. C.:

Revision of Kerr-Coolidge bill does not meet with the approval of Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Right here I wish to advise the Members of the Senate that this bill made its appearance upon the floor of the Senate once before, and that there was such an uproar, there was so much opposition by the patriotic orders of America,

Committee on Immigration, where more hearings were had, and where a revision was made, but I allege the changes were not in keeping with the desires of the American people and were not in conformity with the wishes of those who desire to protect and maintain America for Americans.

In speaking of America for Americans I wish to remind the Presiding Officer of this body that for several days past I have heard statements upon the floor of the Senate about unemployment increasing, about the millions upon millions of people being out of employment in this country, and I wish to ask a question of the Members of this body. It is well that I ask it now, so that they will not be embarrassed when they reach home after the adjournment of the present session of the Congress and set about to ask votes of their respective constituencies to return them here. I wish to ask the question, What have we, as a body of legislators, done to relieve the great unemployment situation? Have we stopped the thousands upon thousands who are coming annually to our shores and prevented them taking jobs from Americans? We have not. Have we ejected from this country millions of aliens who have come across our borders illegally from Canada and from the countries to the south of us? Have we ejected them from this country in order that our American boys and our American men might have the jobs they fill? We have not.

The very thing we could have done to reduce unemployment we have been afraid to do, evidently, because we have not done it. Again I say, are we for the American laboring man, or do we prefer those who come from shores beyond, who have come into this country and taken jobs which rightly belong to the American laboring man? I say we have not done a thing. Insofar as I am concerned, I stand upon the floor of the Senate unhesitatingly declaring that I am for the American laboring man against the people of any other country upon God's earth; and I want the world to

We hear talk about unemployment. It has been estimated that there are as many as 7,000,000 aliens in this country. They are living, are they not? If they are living, they either have to be working and earning money or they have to be on the Federal dole, one of the two. They have to have clothing to cover their bodies, they have to have food to fill their stomachs, they have to have roofs under which to live, and they have to have fire with which to warm themselves, and those things can come in only one of three ways, either through work by the sweat of their brows, or by the charity of the American people, or the dole of the American Government, which means money of the taxpayers of the United States. I say that it has been estimated that there are as many as 7,000,000 of these aliens.

Mr. President, it must be remembered that our situation in this country is different from the situation in any other country upon the face of the earth. We are a mechanized country. We are users of machinery to save labor, and every time there have been patented and manufactured and put into operation labor-saving devices, work has been eliminated for the toilers of the United States in numbers estimated at from 5 to 5,000. We do not find that to be the case in other lands.

Senators who have traveled extensively, whether in the Eastern Hemisphere or in the Western Hemisphere, know that one may motor through Italy, and there he will see a farmer with a one-furrow plow, drawn by a donkey or a milk cow, or perhaps a couple of milk cows, breaking the ground in some beautiful valley. If that beautiful valley, stretching for miles and miles, which is clothed in the shadows from the towering peaks and kissed by the brilliant sun of Italy, were transplanted to America, what would happen? Within 24 hours after that great area had been transplanted to America, mechanized America, with its labor-saving machinery, that old milk cow or the old mule with which the Italian was plowing the valley-and there are thousands of them-would be displaced by labor-saving machinery in the form of tremendous engines pulling plows making 40 furrows at a time.

Go, if you will, into the East, to Bombay or Calcutta, India. and by labor organizations, that the bill went back to the Proceed, if you will, anywhere along the northern coast of Africa. Visit, if you will, any of the countries of continental Europe. Go to Turin, in Italy, and there, in a massive building as large as the Senate Office Building what do we find? A mere handful of stenographers transacting the business of their government under the operation of their superiors? No: we find thousands upon thousands of Italian girls and Italian boys making out the records with pen and ink. But if that building were transplanted to Washington today, that one building, with its 3,000 clerks, Italian boys and girls, making out the records with pen and ink, it would not be here more than 24 hours before those 3,000 boys and girls would be dismissed and there would be instead perhaps a few hundred expert stenographers with their labor-saving machines typing the records for future reference.

Mr. President, that is the condition which exists throughout the world; and yet we in the United States, with our labor-saving devices, with 12,625,000 men out of employment, and with 750,000 girls and boys annually reaching the age of 18 in this country, we have not seen fit to stop the yearly flow of thousands upon thousands of aliens who are coming into this country to take the places and positions which the sons and daughters of this land should have. We have not seen fit to deport the millions of alien criminals now in this country, who have illegally entered, who are here living upon the taxpayers of our land, or taking the jobs which belong to American citizens. I cannot understand it. I cannot fathom it in my mind.

Mr. President, the telegram which I started to read is from Francis H. Kinnicutt, president, Allied Patriotic Societies. Inc.:

On behalf of the Allied Patriotic Societies, Inc., I desire to state that the changes reported on Saturday in the Senate deportation bill, S. 2969, are, in our opinion, entirely inadequate and insufficient to cure fundamental defects in the bill. The bill seems primarily designed to make it possible to keep in the country over 100,000 illegally entered aliens who are now mandatorily deportable.

In other words, Mr. President, every one of those 2,862 aliens, 98 percent of whom entered this country illegally, according to Colonel MacCormack, and a great percentage of whom have violated the laws of our country since they have been here, is under our present law mandatorily deportable. But the Immigration and Naturalization Service has the gall and the nerve to say, "No; we will not deport them! We wish to break down the immigration law", the law that the patriots of this country, through the body at this end of the Capitol and the body at the other end of the Capitol, enacted years ago for the protection of America. The Department of Labor, through the Immigration and Naturalization Service, has the gall, has the brass, has the nerve to say to the American people and to this body, "We wish you to change the laws which you have made. We wish you to amend the law so that we may let these criminal aliens stay in this country."

Mr. President, why such a position should be taken is beyond my comprehension. I cannot understand why anyone should desire to break down the immigration laws which have been built up. I cannot understand why anybody should wish to keep in this country, to allow to mix with our blood strain, habitual alien criminals, many of whom have dishonored their own flags, some of whom have deserted the armies of their country, many of whom have debauched American womanhood, many of whom had the gall to bring into this country alien women for immoral purposes, many of whom are jailbirds, and many of whom are admitted thieves, which I shall prove, and I defy any man in this body to prove the contrary.

Mr. President, the point I am making is that the passage of the pending bill will result in breaking down the immigration law we have built up. The passage of the bill will result in opening the flood gates. It is a bill which will prevent our Government from sending alien criminals out of the country. Why do we wish to enact a law which will result in retaining such people in this country?

Before I refer to some of the individual cases I desire to read some telegrams.

A telegram from the Patriotic Societies, Inc., of New York City, says:

The bill seems primarily designed to make it possible to keep in the country over 100,000 illegally entered aliens who are now mandatorily deportable.

I assert there are now more than a million such aliens in this country.

The Allied Patriotic Societies, Inc., have already, at their February conference, and later by vote of the board of directors, specifically approved and voted their hearty support to the bill introduced by you and Mr. Starnes, S. 4011.

FRANCIS H. KINNICHTT President, Allied Patriotic Societies, Inc.

Mr. President, that is one endorsement. Those persons are interested. They are from the State of New York. Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Sometime earlier in the afternoon a query was addressed to the Senator from North Carolina with reference to the stand of the American Federation of Labor. I have just talked to a representative of the American Federation of Labor, who told me that they were bitterly opposed to three sections of the pending immigration bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. May I inquire whether or not those are sections 3, 4, and 5?

Mr. DAVIS. That is correct.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Then, as I understand it, Mr. President. I did not overstate the facts. I spoke correctly and with authority when I stated that the American Federation of Labor is opposed to the passage of the pending bill. Of course the American Federation of Labor is opposed to the bill because the members of the American Federation of Labor know that there are today in this country 12,625,000 persons out of employment. Of course they are opposed to the bill because the members of the American Federation of Labor know that between fifteen and twenty million other persons are on Federal relief by way of governmental jobs, by way of actual emergency relief, by way of public works developments.

The great American Federation of Labor, being interested in the American laboring man who earns his bread and his meat by the sweat of his brow, bitterly oppose the bill; and why? They oppose the bill because it will result in permitting to stay in this country several hundred thousand aliens to compete with our American men, to compete with our American women. How much longer are we going to be the laughingstock of every country upon the face of the earth because of letting persons from foreign lands come to this country illegally and take jobs which should belong to our own citizens?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Inasmuch as the Senator has investigated the twenty-eight-hundred-odd cases of persons who illegally entered this country, and whom the measure now pending proposes to cover, will the Senator inform me whether he has ascertained from the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization how many of those 2,800 persons have work; and, if they were not here, how many citizens of this country, or those who are aliens but who have been legally admitted, would have the jobs?

Mr. REYNOLDS. In answer to the Senator's inquiry, I will state that I have made inquiry in regard to that matter. but I have been unable to obtain from anyone any definite information on the subject. Why? Because, Mr. President, we have not the slightest idea as to how many aliens there are in this country; because we have been lax in the administration of our immigration laws; because we have been lax in everything pertaining to aliens. Our sympathies have been going to them and not to the American people. I think it is high time that our sympathies should turn to our own firesides, to our own thresholds, to our own homes, to our own people. The American people deserve sympathy before aliens from abroad, who have sneaked into this country, deserve sympathy. We have no idea—it is only a guessas to how many aliens there are in this country, because, unlike every other country on the face of the earth, we do not require registration of aliens when they come into this country. When they come here, do we ask them whether they are aliens? We do not. When they go on relief rolls, do we ask them whether or not they are aliens? We certainly do not. When they apply for jobs in restaurants, or hotels, or anywhere else, do we ask them whether or not they are American citizens, whether they came in here legally or illegally? We do not. Our laws are shamefully lax; and, as lax as they are, some would undertake to tear down and destroy the work which has already been done to protect America and Americans.

A man said to me the other day, "I do not understand this situation. I have hundreds of friends who are out of work. They go here and there to look for a job, and they find some foreigner, some alien, holding down the job. They go elsewhere and still they cannot find work. Our forefathers years ago came to this country and ran the Indians off the continent, and now the aliens are going to run us off. We shall have to emigrate somewhere if we do not stop this business."

Mr. President, why should we not stop it? How much chance of obtaining a position does anyone think any of us would have if we landed in Italy, or in France, or in Germany, or in Great Britain, or in any other country of continental Europe, or in any other country in the world, for that matter? The moment we got there we should be registered and we should be watched every minute we were there; and if a job were vacant, does anyone think that an American would get it? No, Mr. President, he would not. They would see to it that one of their own citizens got it. But we, bighearted oafs, shed tears over those who do not care anything about us, saying, "Come in, you poor fellows. Come on in; we are so sorry for you. You take this job." Meanwhile, the poor American, with the soles of his shoes worn off, and holes in the seat of his pants, and not even a hat to cover his head, cannot get a job anywhere! What do we mean, Mr. President? The American people know what we mean. I am glad that I understand it; and I am glad that I am availed the opportunity of letting the American people know that I am standing on this floor and voting for them. I want first to take care of our home folk; then we can go into foreign fields if we so desire.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield to the Senator from

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator know the number of immigrants who came to this country from 1820 to 1923?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have a rough idea, but I know the Senator from Pennsylvania is thoroughly familiar with the figures, having been Secretary of Labor in a previous administration. I should be very happy for him to provide me with the exact number, if that is what he has in mind.

Mr. DAVIS. Immigrants came into this country from 1820 to 1923 to the number of 35,202,506. We have been very generous in allowing foreigners to come to our shores.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator for providing me with that information.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to make myself plain; I want in my simple and humble way, if I can, I want to make myself understood to this effect: We have no objection at the present time to the entrance of aliens who will make good citizens, men and women of fine character from the shores beyond, recognizing freely and generously, as we do, that the development of this country in commerce and science has been due, to some degree and extent, to those who have come from foreign shores; but I raise my voice against permitting habitual criminals, who have come here in violation of our law, to remain here. I do not have to call upon the American people to back up the position or stand I am taking, because the backing of the American people is today here with us.

Mr. President, I should like to read another communication. Here is a letter—

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield further to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Before the Senator proceeds further with the reading of the protests, I should like to ask him if he has made a thorough investigation of the 2,800 cases and whether he finds that some of the aliens in that list have been criminals or are now criminals or, having been criminals, have been pardoned?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I certainly have. I have two or three books full of facts here regarding many of the cases. The other day I talked about a fellow by the name of Georges Gaston Grenier, from "Paree." According to the report sent here by Colonel MacCormack, of the Immigration Bureau, one would think that fellow descended from heaven with wings, clothed in raiment of white, and had found footing upon a pedestal of ivory; but I began to look into the record of that gentleman and I found that I was not far wrong. The report stated that he was O. K. I read the report: and I have it here; but I investigated the case for myself, and my investigation disclosed that he was a rather angelic fellow, because that report showed that he stole an airplane. and that he slipped into this country in violation of the law. I am talking about one of these men whom they want to leave in this country to mingle with the citizens of your State, Mr. President, and my State. I am talking about a man they want to leave in this country to build up Americanism, to contribute to the glory and the honor of America.

Mr. President, why do we permit immigrants to come into this country at all? Why should we permit any of them to come in here? The only theory upon which they are permitted to come is that they may be of help to America. The theory is that when we let immigrants into this country they will contribute something to the country and will help America. Yet we are trying to keep in this country such men as Georges Gaston Grenier, who stole an airplane; and not only did Georges do that but he was indicted on some other charge involving immorality and was convicted. Georges came here for immoral purposes, the record shows. What did Georges, this man of good character, this "lily white" man so gloriously painted by the adroit brush of Colonel MacCormack, do? He had deserted from the army, deserted the flag of his country. What was the reason the Department gave for keeping him here, stating that it was a hardship case, and that it would be terrible to send him back? They said, "If you send him back, he might be courtmartialed." That goes to prove, to my mind, that it is not desired to send him back, because he may be punished by the country that wants to punish him.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am delighted to yield to my colleague from Utah.

Mr. KING. I do not want to interrupt my friend, but I am sure he would like to know the facts.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Let me state the facts with respect to Grenier. I just came into the room and heard the Senator mention his name.

The allegation was made by the Senator that Grenier deserted from the French Army, stole a French military airplane which he flew into Italy, and that after coming to the United States he perjured himself in his declaration of intention to become a citizen.

In these allegations the fact that each of them was completely refuted in the record was entirely ignored.

A report in the file proves that the French Government investigated the case and found no record of the alleged service in the French Army or of birth in France.

The board of review in 1932 found that Grenier was not born in France but in Greece, and that his correct name was not Grenier but probably George Zolotas, which is the name under which he entered the country and under which he applied for citizenship.

Grenier, therefore, according to the record, is not a French citizen, did not serve in the French Army, did not desert from it, did not steal an airplane, and did not perjure himself in his application for citizenship.

The statement that Grenier twice entered the country illegally is not correct except in the most technical sense.

As a matter of fact, he would have a legal status in the country were it not for a highly technical construction of the law. He came here as a seaman before June 3, 1921, and would be eligible for registration were it not for the fact that he subsequently paid a visit of less than an hour in Canada. His return from that visit is held to constitute a new entry and to enable his deportation.

The statements as to Grenier's having formerly been married and divorced and as to an illicit relationship during the period of his former marriage and the birth of his illegitimate child are correct.

On the other side of the picture there is the fact that he legally adopted the child and has cared for her, and that he has since been happily married, has settled down, provides for his wife and family, and is respected and esteemed by his neighbors and employers.

The able Senator from North Carolina called this a "lily white" case. The facts will determine its character. I am not extenuating—

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, if the Senator will excuse me a minute, my time is limited.

Mr. KING. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will give the Senator time. I have given the Senator 5 minutes, and I should like to have 5 minutes added to my time.

Mr. KING. The Senator may have 10 minutes more if he wants them. I have finished.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I went over to the Bureau and looked at the record in the case of Grenier. I am not disputing what my good friend says, but there is just a difference of opinion. I want to read what my record shows. The files of the Immigration Bureau show that Grenier entered the country illegally in 1926; that he was a deserter from the French Army; that he stole an airplane; that he gave false testimony in applying for United States citizenship; that he was convicted of a bastardy charge; that he admits certain relations with other women than his wife while married to his first wife.

The record shows that he was divorced by his first wife and has since remarried, had a child, settled down, and is now considered qualified to be rated under the classification of a hardship case.

The decision in the case of Grenier, judging by the files of the Department, rests to a great extent upon a report submitted by the Immigrants Protective League, which says in

Mr. Grenier has a record in the past which is anything but enviable. Since his second marriage, however, he has settled down and assumed his responsibility toward his home and toward his community. Like many young men, he went through a period of seeing how wild he could be. We do not believe this indicates he is thoroughly immoral or dishonest, especially in view of the more recent years. Separation now would mean great hardship for his present wife and son present wife and son.

Grenier, according to the records, made two illegal entries into this country, his first arrival being dated back in 1919, and at that time he came into the country under false papers which he had purchased. He was ordered deported to France in 1932, but managed to stay the deportation order, and it eventually was canceled at the suggestion of the board of review, which gave considerable weight to the report of the welfare agency that examined into his history. One of the moving considerations which led the welfare agency in its report to recommend leniency in the case of Grenier was that if he should be returned to France he would face court martial.

That is the record I have. If I am in error I want to be advised. I do not want to do something that is not proper. I do not want to lay the blame upon anyone who is not deserving of blame.

Let me refer to another case, so my eminent friend from Utah will be availed an opportunity to talk with Colonel MacCormack tomorrow and ask the colonel what he has to say about this case. I do not want to take advantage of anyone. I hope the Senator from Utah will remain in the Chamber to listen to this next case.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will pardon me for not remaining, because I have a committee meeting which I must attend immediately.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The next case is that of Marie or Mary Kolachek. This case is particularly interesting in that it discloses the possibilities that have arisen through the Department of Labor's failure to enforce the immigration laws. Marie Kolacheck and her sister Frances were known and notorious as prostitutes in Galveston, Tex. Marie was proven to be the proprietress of a house of prostitution in which her sister was an inmate. There was Frances, who was an inmate of this bawdyhouse, and she was employed by the proprietress of the bawdyhouse, her sister Marie. They were aliens.

By the exercise of influence and the expenditure of considerable money for legal services, the two women fought deportation for years. Marie married an American, thereby losing her citizenship in Czechoslovakia, from which she had originally come illegally. She came into this country illegally, ran a bawdyhouse for years, made a lot of money, employed good lawyers, brought influence to bear, fought deportation, and found the only way in God's world she could stay in this country was to marry some American, and so she married one.

The Government's hands were tied in her case, as her native land refused a passport. But this condition did not apply to Frances, the sister, whom she had kept in her bawdyhouse for gain, because Czechoslovakia furnished the passport on March 23, 1933, for Frances. There was a woman who had entered the country illegally in violation of our law, had remained here in violation of our law, had been an inmate of a bawdyhouse, helping her sister who ran it, remaining here illegally all the time, and the Department of Labor got a passport for her back to Czechoslovakia. Did she go? She did not go. Let us see what happened.

That passport continued in the files of the Department of Labor as a part of the records to the present time. In the face of the evidence supplied by court proceedings, law enforcement officers, and the Immigration Bureau's own representative in Galveston, coupled with the fact that on July 29, 1933, the board of review of the Department of Labor definitely turned down the application made in the alien's behalf for a stay of deportation, she was permitted to remain in the country through the direct intervention of Commissioner MacCormack.

The board of review in the Department of Labor said, "No; we are going to send her away", but she was permitted to remain in the country through the direct intervention of Commissioner MacCormack.

That is the statement I am making. There she was, having illegally entered the country, spent days upon days in a bawdyhouse helping her sister violate the law every day. The board of review said she must go out. I am now charging she was permitted to remain in the country through the direct intervention of Commissioner MacCormack.

Note the dates: On July 29, 1933, the board of review stated:

It is therefore recommended that deportation be proceeded with and request for stay of deportation be denied.

Get that date squarely in your mind. On July 29, 1933, the board of review said she must be deported. Mind you, just 2 days later, August 1, 1933, Commissioner MacCormack wrote over his own signature:

I am now directing a further investigation to be made. In the meantime, of course, the girls will not be deported.

On October 4, 1933, upsetting all previous recommendations and records, the Department records disclose a new finding which says, referring to the case of Marie:

Deportation will work a great hardship on her.

There is one of the so-called hardship cases, a woman here for years in a bawdyhouse, who came here illegally and entered the bawdyhouse run by her sister, and yet Colonel MacCormack says it would "work a hardship" for her to have to leave. I expect it would. Of all the things ever said upon the face of the earth, listen to this that he said:

Her education and social behavior have been acquired in the United States.

[Laughter.]

Her education and social behavior have been acquired in the United States! It would work a hardship on that precious little rose to have to be returned to the land of her birth. He said further-I hate to read this next sentence because I am getting so sick of Americans who are trying to throw off the responsibility of America for Americans and who are fighting and talking for aliens who get in here illegally. Why not keep America for Americans instead of fighting for aliens who have illegally entered our country?

Let me read what Commissioner MacCormack said further. It is my opinion that the masses of the American people are getting tired of this kind of thing.

Here is what the Department of Labor says through the Immigration Service:

This country has greater responsibility toward her than her native

Did this country have anything to do with putting her in a bawdyhouse? Did this country have anything to do with getting her into this country illegally? It did not; but we ought to keep her here because she will contribute to the moral uplift of the country, so says this Department of the Government! We ought to keep her here—this poor, lovely little flower-because to deport her would work a hardship upon Marie!

Why, according to this description you would think she is as pure as the newly fallen snow. So the colonel said, "Poor little Marie! We ought to keep her here. She got her education and her social standing in America."

I have quoted that from the record. Let us see what else they say:

This country has greater responsibility toward her than her native country.

And so on December 11, 1933, the board of review of the Immigration Service, again considering the case of Marie, ordered that her deportation be delayed until such time as Congress could enact legislation covering her situation.

Colonel MacCormack says, "No; it will be a hardship on you, Marie, to go back. We will keep you here, Marie. We do not want to do you an injustice, Marie. You will contribute to the morale of our great America. We want you to stay with us. We appreciate all that you have done"; and so she remains here.

I ask, are we going to permit the Department of Labor and the interdepartmental committee to make the laws, or are we going to make the laws? In the Kerr-Coolidge bill they are asking us to break down all that has been built up for the protection of America for Americans.

Let me pick out here, at random, another case, that of a man whom it is desired to keep in this country. Let us see about Mr. Emil Henry Carstens.

Those who are sponsoring the passage of this bill would have you believe that the persons who are now being considered are all persons of good character, and that they should not be sent back to their respective homes because to do so would work a hardship upon them. Let us see whether or not it will work a hardship on us for them to remain here. Let us find out about that. We are going first to consider whether or not permitting these persons to remain here will work a hardship upon the American people. If it will not work a hardship upon us, let them stay; but let us see about this case.

Pass this bill and leave a million aliens in this country, taking American jobs, disrupting and destroying the morals of the people, if you wish. If you can stand it, I can stand it; but I will say that the American people will not stand it.

I am going to bring to the attention of the Senate another one of the cases of men who ought to have been deported, but whom the Department is holding here. It is holding this man Carstens here—why? God knows. I do not know. Included in the list of hardship cases submitted by the Department is the record of Emil Henry Carstens, who, when the record was prepared in 1935, was, and still is—now, listen—was, and still is, serving a sentence in Sing Sing Prison!

Here is a fellow who has been in the penitentiary at Sing Sing. He is now in Sing Sing prison, New York State, following his conviction for grand larceny. Do we need any more thieves in this country? I do not think so. The Department, moved by the fact-here is what moved the Department; the Department was moved to tears, I presume-moved by the fact that the man has an American wife, contemplates applying the rules of the hardship classification to him after his release from prison!

Here is an alien who came into this country, committed theft, was convicted and sent to Sing Sing Prison, and is still there; and Mr. MacCormack, of the Immigration Service in the Department of Labor, says we should leave that criminal, that jailbird, here in America, to associate with your constituents and my constituents-why? Because, Mr. Mac-Cormack says, to deport the alien would work a hardship on

Let us see what the record says. The Department, moved by the fact that the man has an American wife, contemplates applying the rules of the hardship classification to him after his release from prison.

If that fellow has been in the penitentiary for years, how is it going to be a hardship on his wife to deport him? She has become accustomed now to being without him. He is subject to deportation. Here is a fellow coming out of Sing Sing prison, an alien, and Colonel MacCormack says he ought to be permitted to remain in this country.

Well, let us see: I will pick out another one just at random. Let me show you how they work some of these things. There are tricks in all trades.

Francisco Chavez: This alien came into the country illegally. He was arrested at Galveston, Tex. There is only one point in this case that is interesting. The records of the Department show that at the time of his arrest for deportation he was separated from his wife. After the warrant of deportation was issued-he is one of those smart guys-he effected a reconciliation with his wife and automatically won classification as a hardship case.

Mr. President, I wish to state that I propose to make a motion to recommit the pending bill to the Senate Committee on Immigration for further consideration, but out of consideration for my colleagues, all of whom are not in the Chamber at the present time, I shall not ask for a quorum.

Mr. President, I hope I may have credit for the 15 minutes I lost in yielding to other Senators.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to ask the Senator why he speaks about the time. There is no rule which would prevent him from taking as much time as he may desire to take.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In order to get consideration of and action on the tobacco compact bill, I agreed to limit my discussion of the pending bill to 3 hours. Of course, that has nothing to do with anyone else who desires to discuss the bill at great length, and I hope that my colleagues will find sufficient interest in this un-American bill to discuss it to the fullest extent.

Mr. President, I have dozens upon dozens of cases I might cite, but I shall now read some communications from those who are opposed to the bill. I hold in my hand a telegram from Mr. Devereaux, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. The telegram is dated March 31, 1936, and reads:

WASHINGTON D. C., March 31, 1936.

Senator Robert R. Reynolds, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:
Revision of Kerr-Coolidge bill does not meet with approval of Veterans of Foreign Wars. It is not satisfactory and we are opposed to the bill. In general, we object to time limitation and unlimited discretionary powers conferred. Bill leaves opening for assembling of political power, which will defeat ends of justice and permits legalizing entry of unknown numbers of illegal entrants. We endorse unqualifiedly Reynolds-Starnes bill and urge its enactment. Kerr-Coolidge bill should be defeated.

VICTOR E. DEVEREAUX, Director, Department of Americanism, Veterans of Foreign Wars of United States.

On April 6, 1936, the commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars wrote me as follows:

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES, Washington, D. C., April 6, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT REYNOLDS.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: We have been noticing your splendid fight against the adoption of the Kerr-Coolidge bill in the Senate recently, and we want you to know that we are 100 percent behind you on that fight.

The Reynolds-Starnes bill, which would provide mandatory de-portation of criminal aliens and alien Communists, registration and fingerprinting of all resident aliens, and preliminary impartial ex-aminations and tests by our consuls in foreign countries before aminations and tests by our consuls in foreign countries before visas are granted to applying immigrants and, would cut down the present immigration quotas to 10 percent of what they are now at the same time making provision for preferred treatment of immigrants with relatives in this country is much preferable than the Kerr-Coolidge bill, and we sincerely hope that you will be successful in your efforts to have such more mandatory legislation enacted at this session of Congress.

With best wishes for your success and the success of your associates in this fight, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

JAMES E. VAN ZANDT, Commander in Chief.

Mr. President, I have a telegram dated Baltimore, Md., March 30, 1936, addressed to me, which reads as follows:

State Council of Maryland Junior Order United American Mechanics heartily endorses the Starnes-Reynolds bill and sincerely urges its prompt and favorable consideration.

H. L. MENNERICK State Secretary, Junior Order United American Mechanics, Baltimore, Md.

So the Juniors, with their 500,000 members in every State of the Union are with us.

I have here a telegram dated New York City, April 1, 1936, addressed to me, which reads as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 1, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS, Senate Office Building:

Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York has long supported legislative proposals for mandatory restriction of immigration, the deportation of alien criminals, and the registration of all aliens in United States, which your bill embodies.

CHARLES T. GWYNNE, Executive Vice President, Chamber of Commerce of State of New York.

So we have with us the chamber of commerce of the great Empire State, the only State in the Union which contributes more every year to the Federal Treasury than does my State of North Carolina.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is the Senator referring to the tobacco tax? Mr. REYNOLDS. I refer to all the taxes that come out of North Carolina.

Mr. CLARK. The tobacco tax is paid by residents of Missouri, Illinois, Ohio—by everyone who buys a cigarette.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is quite true, and I am happy to know that, because the gentlemen who reside in the State of Missouri, the State of Illinois, and all the other States recognize the superiority of North Carolina tobaccos-cigarettes, cigars, chewing tobacco, snuff, and pipe tobacco. [Laughter.] I thank the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. President, I have here a letter from the president general of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, and I shall read all of this letter, because, although of great length, it discusses each and every section of the Kerr-Coolidge bill. The letter is dated April 1, 1936, is addressed to me, and reads as follows:

The Coolidge bill, S. 2969, having been reported to the Senate with certain amendments, we wish to take this opportunity to inform you that as representatives of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution we feel that this bill with the amendments thereto does not meet the objections heretofore made by our representatives before the Immigration Committee, both in the Senate and in the House, on the so-called Kerr bill.

The chief objection that was raised at the time of the hearing before the Senate and the House committees was to the discretionary power granted to the interdepartmental committee in deporting criminal aliens.

There are a number of other features in this bill that do not meet with the policy of this organization which have been stated in resolutions heretofore passed by the national body.

Accordingly we as representatives of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution urge you to oppose to the utmost of your ability the so-called Coolidge bill, and hope that it will not be passed at this session of Congress.

We are familiar with the Reynolds-Starnes alien deportation and registration bill, and we wish to heartily endorse this without reservation or qualification. We believe that this represents what the patriotic Americans have striven for for many years, and is for the best interests of the American people.

Very truly yours,

HENRY F. BAKER,
President General. FRANK B. STEELE, Secretary General.

Mr. President, I ask that a letter addressed to me under date of April 1, 1936, by Amos A. Fries, National Society Sons of the American Revolution, and the enclosure, be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, following the letter I have just read from the president general of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter and enclosure are as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 1, 1936.

Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your letter of March 31, I am giving reasons why the Sons of the American Revolution are opposed to Senate bill S. 2969, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, as amended by Senator King March 30, 1936.

Very sincerely yours.

Very sincerely yours,

AMOS A. FRIES National Society Sons of the American Revolution.

SUMMARY

P. S.—The amended bill is bad for four fundamental reasons: (1) The bill would largely increase the number of aliens coming into the United States for permanent residence, and who could become citizens, over the numbers now coming into the United States.
(2) The bill provides for a commission with power to set aside mandatory immigration laws or the decisions of our courts.

(3) It provides for legalizing illegal entries into the United States, and thus encourages aliens to break our immigration laws, thereby tending to make worse our already bad alien situation.

(4) The bill fails to provide for registration, which alone will enable us to solve the criminal and unlawful alien problem in the United States.

OBJECTIONS OF THE NATIONAL SOCIETY OF SONS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION TO SENATE BILL 2969, AS AMENDED BY SENATOR KING ON MARCH 30, 1936

Senate bill 2969, as amended by Senator King on March 30, 1936, is different in a few minor details only from the original S. 2969 as submitted by Senator Coolings February 24, 1936.

The amended bill is therefore subject to most of the objections made by the Sons of the American Revolution to the original

S. 2969.

The amended bill is objectionable in four important provisions or omissions, viz:

Section 3:

(1) It will increase many times in the next few years the ten to fifteen thousand aliens that have been coming legally into the United States under the present strict enforcement of the clause United States under the present strict enforcement of the clause against permitting aliens who might become public charges to enter the United States. This would be brought about through section 3 (a), paragraphs (1) and (2), which for 3 years beyond the passage of the act would allow the proposed interdepartmental committee to legalize the illegal entry of persons who had been in the United States 10 years or who had been in the United States at least 1 year and has a father or mother, husband or wife, or a child, stepchild, adopted child, or an illegitimate child if legally recognized as such, or an older brother or sister, if the alien who sneaked in is a minor.

The chairman of the House Immigration Committee in ques-

The chairman of the House Immigration Committee in questioning the representative of the Sons of the American Revolution suggested there might be a hundred thousand or more aliens in the United States with the various family relations referred to above. It has been estimated that the number which might come in or remain here, having already sneaked in, might amount to as many as 1,250,000. If the suggestion of the chairman of the Immigration Committee of the House be correct, the number thus coming in or to be allowed to remain though now illegally here would be at least 100,000—or more than the total number of immigrants coming into the United States since President Hoover began the strict enforcement of the law against admitting aliens liable to become public charges.

Section 4 (a) and (b), paragraphs (1), (2), and (3), will increase immigration through changing aliens who are in the United States temporarily as families of merchants, students, travelers, alien seamen, etc., to permanent immigrants if the "Commissioner of Immigration" so decides.

(2) The second great objection to this bill is the proposal to legalize the illegal entry of aliens as under section 5 (a), para-

Sections 6 (b), (1), and (2) simply prescribe reports of numbers of aliens illegally or temporarily in the United States that have been changed to legal immigrants, a procedure the S. A. R. believes fundamentally and wholly unsound.

Section 6 (c) provides for deduction of aliens, whose illegal or temporary status was changed to a permanent and/or legal status, from the total quota allowance of the countries of their origin.

But this is in addition to aliens legally admitted to the United States and may far exceed those so legally admitted, and thus raise our present low immigration by regular methods to several times the number now so admitted legally each year.

Section 7 is just an increase of $8 in fees to be collected from aliens illegally or temporarily herein return for being granted, what ought to be a priceless privilege, that of having an opportunity to become a citizen of the United States.

Sections 8 and 9, we believe O. K., as it should facilitate the apprehending and decreasing of illegal entries of aliens into the United States.

United States.

Section 10, just the usual clause for making rules and regula-

Section 10, just the usual clause for making rules and regulations to carry out the law. This clause is superfluous.

Section 11: This section is opposed absolutely by the S. A. R. They don't believe any commission, individual, or department should be clothed with authority to set aside laws of the United States or decisions of our courts in behalf of aliens, many of whom would be lawbreakers if not actual criminals.

Section 12 would be O. K. if the bill were O. K., but the bill is Section 13 is not important one way or the other.

Reynolds-Starnes provision

Reynolds-Starnes provision

(3) Finally, the National Society, Sons of the American Revolution, believes any law a joke and a farce that does not provide for registering all aliens by finger printing, photographs, and other marks of identification, and for check-ups, at least annually, of the residence of all aliens. None of the evils of our immigration laws concerning criminal aliens, or aliens illegally in the United States, can ever become better, or really avoid becoming worse, without registration of all aliens and at least a yearly check-up of the residence of all aliens in the United States.

P.S.—As regards the first section of the proposed bill (pp. 1 and 2) subparagraph (1), page 2, is approved; subparagraph (2), page 2, is approved in principle, but the limiting to 5 years seems too short a period, and, most important, the S. A. R. objects to the clause that makes any deportation under this paragraph subject to the approval of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization.

Subparagraph (3), page 2, by using the words "knowingly and for gain", and "or on more than one occasion", is seriously faulty, in that it allows relatives, or friends, or even paid agents of societies to knowingly aid the breaking of our immigration laws at least once, because they do not violate the law for gain.

Subparagraph (4), page 2, has the same objectionable feature as subparagraph (2), page 2; that is, making any deportation under that paragraph subject to approval of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization.

Section 2, page 3, requires the same approval of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, and that is opposed. Also we believe the 30-day period now allowed by law is long enough. The wisdom of permitting a pardoned criminal alien to remain in the United States is strongly questioned (as Bruno Hauptmann a possibility). remain in the Chica.
Hauptmann a possibility).
Sons of the American Revolution,

By Amos A. Fries, Chairman, Immigration Committee.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution is a great patriotic order of America which believes in protecting America for Americans, an organization which believes in giving sympathy to America before we waste sympathy on aliens who have come to this country illegally and have remained here

I have before me a letter from the Crusaders, the headquarters of which are located in the city of New York. This letter is addressed to me under date of March 30, 1936, and reads as follows:

> THE CRUSADERS, New York, N. Y., March 30, 1936.

The Honorable ROBERT REYNOLDS,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Dear Bob: I am enclosing copy of a broadcast I made in support of your bill known as the Reynolds-Starnes bill. I meant to port of your bill known as the Reynolds-Starnes bill. I meant to advise you that I was going to make it, thinking you might like to listen in, but due to the rush here I neglected it.

I am glad to advise you that the response we received from all over the country was practically unanimously in favor of this bill. Of course, we got some mail from reds and pinks opposing it, as we expected, but I am certain that these would not amount to a small fraction of 1 percent of the total. On the other hand, those that favored the bill were most emphatic in their support.

I want to congratulate you on your excellent work in this connection, and if there is anything you can think of that we can do to beln just call on us.

do to help, just call on us.

With kindest personal regards, I remain,
Sincerely yours,

FRED G. CLARK.

Mr. Clark is the head of the national organization known as the Crusaders, situated in the State of New York.

On April 1, 1936, I received a telegram from Mr. Clark. reading as follows:

The returns from radio address of Voice of the Crusaders Monday evening, March 23, reveal an overwhelming sentiment in favor of Reynolds-Starnes bill and strong opposition to Kerr-Coolidge bill. Actually more than 99 percent strongly favor immediate legislation which will accomplish the purpose for which Reynolds-Starnes bill is designed.

That will inform Senators of the overwhelming sentiment of the American people for the deportation of alien criminals, and for restricted immigration.

The telegram continues:

The Crusaders, whose membership includes men and women in I walks of life from every State in the Union, heartily endorse the Reynolds-Starnes bill, and urge its immediate passage.

FRED G. CLARK

National Commander.

I have here, Mr. President, a brief radio address delivered by Mr. Clark over a Nation-wide hook-up in favor of the Reynolds-Starnes bill, which is as much unlike the Kerr-Coolidge bill as night differs from day, because the Kerr-Coolidge bill will have the effect of letting in criminal aliens, while the Reynolds-Starnes bill will have the opposite effect of deporting them. The Kerr-Coolidge bill invites them in; the Reynolds-Starnes bill keeps them out.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield to my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. I have spent some time reading the Reynolds-Starnes deportation bill. If I understand the Coolidge bill correctly, if it were passed, it would be necessary to employ a great many persons to go out and look for aliens, whereas the Reynolds-Starnes bill makes it compulsory on their part to come to a central place designated by the Immigration and Naturalization Service for the purpose of enrolling themselves, so that the Service may ascertain whether or not they are legally here. Is that correct?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator is eminently correct, and I thank him for his contribution.

Mr. DAVIS. The result of the passage of the Kerr-Coolidge bill would be to build up a tremendous bureaucracy at the expense of the American taxpayer, while with the passage of the Reynolds-Starnes bill the regular bureau would be able to take care of the work.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Quite so.

I now have before me a brief radio address, which I mentioned a moment ago as having been delivered by Mr. Fred G. Clark, national commander of the Crusaders, who advised me by telegram that 99 percent of those who wrote him favored the passage of the Reynolds-Starnes bill. Ninety-nine percent of all the responses he received as a result of his radio address were in support of the passage of the Reynolds-Starnes bill. I ask that the radio address be published in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks, in order that Senators who are not here may have the opportunity of reading what the national commander of the Crusaders had to say, and particularly what he had to say in reference to the responses he received, all of which goes to show that with 12,625,000 persons out of work, with sixteen to twenty million persons on relief, living on the Government, our people are demanding that the Congress give consideration to the American people and stop giving money and sympathy and consideration to those from beyond the seas who have illegally entered this land and who have remained here illegally.

I ask that the radio address be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so

The address is as follows:

Senator Reynolds, of North Carolina, recently demanded the deportation of hundreds of thousands of aliens on relief who have received hundreds of millions of dollars from the taxpayers of the United States. There has been much heated argument recently in Congress over the alien problem in general and the proposed Reynold-Starnes and Kerr-Coolidge bills in particular. On the surface this battle may look innocent. Down deep, one of the most important issues before the country is being fought out between those who thoroughly believe in maintaining fundamental American principles and those who lean toward red internationalism. Perhaps these are strong words, but there are times in the lives of men and nations when strong words are necessary.

Cut the alien controversy into two sections, bring them both out in the open, and we can understand them better. The facts are these: Estimates on the number of aliens in this country vary. The minimum is placed at about 5,000,000. There are, however, competent students on the subject who contend that there are more than 7,000,000. The number of aliens on relief is estimated by statistical experts at from 600,000 to 1,500,000. Yet, again, there are students of this situation who believe the number on relief will run well over 2,000,000. But if we accept the minimum figures, the picture is gloomy enough.

Most countries are very strict about their alien population. Whenever an American citizen becomes an object of charity in any European country, his apprehension and deportation becomes automatic and immediate. There is never any argument about it. Bu here, faced with such a serious emergency in our own affairs that millions of our own flesh and blood are walking the streets, we pay out hundreds of millions of dollars to aliens on relief. And we take one more puzzling step! We give profitable employment to several million aliens while legions of our citizens are numbered in the ranks of the idle. That's something to think about!

Most of the aliens in this country have been here many years.
Why don't they become citizens? The answer in most cases is simple. However, these aliens are the third that they are the second citizens? ple. Hordes of these aliens came to this country to escape the military duties of citizenship in their native land. By refusing to become citizens here they escape the obligation of defending this country in times of emergency. But every citizen here is under direct obligation and, in an emergency, the Government can and does call on him to defend his home, his community, and his country with his life if necessary. There are many other obligations that are placed on the shoulders of citizens that these aliens escape.

But the main reason why radical aliens refuse to accept citizenship is the cardinal principle of all these men and women throughout the world who believe in communism that it is not only a crime but absolute sacrilege to admit allegiance to any government that in any way opposes "red" theories. A Hindu, because of his religious belief, would rather die than eat beef. A Communist will estually go to all hefore he will estually acceptable. cause of his religious belief, would rather die than eat beef. A Communist will actually go to jail before he will incriminate himself in the eyes of his followers by doing anything that would signify his allegiance to our Government. Many Communists—allens and otherwise—fool our Government officials when called in for investigation during strikes by declaring that they do not carry a "red" card and therefore cannot be considered members of carry a "red" card and therefore cannot be considered members of the Communist Party. Very few Communists ever register and take out a "red" card. Not one "red" agitator or speaker in a hundred ever takes out a card which forces him to admit to Government investigators or to the police that he is a member of the Communist Party. They take this precaution to escape deportation or other difficulties with the law.

No; we are not pulling tail feathers from the American eagle in making these statements. We are not putting patriotism on our sleeves. We are quoting simple facts. The Communist Party is not—in any sense of the word—an American institution. It does not profess to be such. Its leaders not only frankly admit does not profess to be such. Its leaders not only frankly admit but are proud to declare that they take orders from Moscow, and that the Communist branch in the United States of the Russian Communist Party must live up to all the rules laid down in Moscow.

Secondly, the Communists not only want to overthrow our Government—they are not even willing to leave us the flag that has flown over this free Nation for 159 years. They want to remove the blue and white from our flag and leave just the "red" of international communism. And somehow the idea of hauling down the Stars and Stripes does not appeal very much to the genuine citizen of either birth or choice. Now, before we shed any tears over this alien who refuses to accept any responsibility in this country and who has no respect for our Government, let's calmly look into the justice of this whole controversy.

What right has this Government to pay out hundreds of millions of taxpayers' dollars to aliens who would be instantly deported if they were living in any other country on the face of the globe? Why should we—who are having such a hard time caring ported if they were living in any other country on the face of the globe? Why should we—who are having such a hard time caring for ourselves—take money out of the pockets of millions of our hard-working citizens, who actually need this money for bread for their own families, and give it to aliens who are either plotting the overthrow of our Government or at least are so opposed to our Government that they refuse to assume the obligations of citizenship? What right have we to penalize American citizens and give preferential benefits to the alien who refuses to become American?

Now don't misunderstand us. This country was largely de-

Now, don't misunderstand us. This country was largely developed by foreign-born who were proud of the opportunity of coming here * * * proud of the flag that some of them helped create. Yes; they honored the flag that guaranteed them liberty which they did not enjoy in the country they left. They were proud of the Government that guaranteed them rights they had never dreamed of in their fatherland. And they were more were proud of the Government that guaranteed them rights they had never dreamed of in their fatherland. And they were more proud of their citizenship papers here than of all the possessions with which they were endowed. But there is a vast difference between the aliens who came here and immediately accepted all obligations in this country and were loyal under all circumstances and the legions of aliens now troubling us who despise our Government and all it stands for and are working night and day to bring about its downfall.

bring about its downfall.

Can anyone justify the steady employment of 3,500,000 aliens, who refuse to accept the obligations of citizenship, when 8,000,000 American citizens, gladly accepting all the responsibility of citizenship, are in the ranks of the unemployed? We should like to hear from everyone listening in on this program as to his or her honest opinion in this matter. This country has long been the haven of the oppressed. We sincerely hope that we can—when economic conditions change—admit into this country selected haven of the oppressed. We sincerely hope that we can—when economic conditions change—admit into this country selected people, willing and eager to work, from foreign countries—men who have the right attitude toward our Government and our people; men and women who recognize the vast difference between the onerous restrictions of other countries and the freedom that can be enjoyed under this constitutional democracy that recognizes all men as equal before the law.

But the time has come—and we can ignore it no longer—when we should stop pampering alien responsibility dodgers, especially at a time when our own genuine citizens are in such urgent need of work and sustenance

Now, a word regarding the two important immigration and deportation bills before Congress. The Reynolds-Starnes bill, which is a desirable bill dealing with alien immigration and deportation, and the Kerr-Coolidge bill, an undesirable piece of legislation that, in our opinion, should be defeated. The Reynolds-Starnes bill should have the support of every American. It is enthusiastically endorsed by all of the patriotic organizations of the country and the American Federation of Labor. The Reynolds-Starnes bill makes it mandatory on our authorities to deport all aliens convicted of crime in this country and those aliens afflicted with diseases constituting a menace to the community. This bill also makes it mandatory to deport aliens belonging to organizations whose objective is the overthrow of the Government by violence. Now, a word regarding the two important immigration and deviolence.

Now we come to the Kerr-Coolidge bill. This proposed piece of legislation, endorsed by the Department of Labor, has a suspicious similarity to the Dickstein bill, introduced in the House in 1934. The Dickstein bill, opposed by the American Federation of Labor and all patriotic organizations, was then overwhelmingly voted and all patriotic organizations, was then overwhelmingly voted down in the House of Representatives. The Kerr-Coolidge bill is not an act clarifying our present immigration legislation. The apparent objective of this bill is to make it possible to prevent the deportation of thousands of aliens who should be deported, because it leaves the authority to deport in the hands of the Secretary of Labor, whose word is both final and autocratic.

There are more than 2,000 aliens in this country whose deportation should have been carried out long ago—who have either been convicted of crime or are afflicted with diseases dangerous to the community or are members of organizations dedicated to the purpose of overthrowing our Government, by force if necessary. These undesirable aliens are being allowed to stay in this country by some mysterious force, and it appears to us that the Kerr-Coolidge bill has been largely framed to keep those 2,000 people in this country with other legions of aliens who should be deported.

deported.

This is a country of laws—not dictators—and the deportation of undesirable aliens should be mandatory and not left to the whims or fancies of a single individual bureaucrat! The American Federation of Labor is throwing its entire strength against the Kerr-Coolidge bill. Every patriotic organization is up in arms against this proposed act, fighting desperately with all the power at its command.

at its command

Whether this country is to remain American with American ideals and American principles adopted by and administered by people who believe in constitutional democracy or whether we are to be permeated with alien ideas and destructive alien activities, depends largely on what we do with these two all-important measures before Congress. The Crusaders appeal—without prejudice—to all American citizens to demand that aliens in this country either get American or get out! And make it mandatory, when allens flout our fundamental laws of justice, that they get out whether they want to or not. It's time to take care of American citizens first! Let's drown out the Third Internationale with the strains of Wake Up America!

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, there is in this country an organization known as the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, with a membership of over 500,000 persons. There is no more honorable body anywhere in our whole land. The vice president and legislative representative of that organization is Mr. Arthur J. Lovell. In his letter he takes up the Kerr-Coolidge bill section by section. I am going to read the letter now, because I desire Senators who are present to hear what Mr. Lovell, the vice president of that great organization, with a membership of 500,000 persons from coast to coast, from Canada to Mexico, has to say about the bill. That organization is against the Kerr-Coolidge bill, as is every other patriotic organization in the United States. Mr. Lovell directed this letter to me on April

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, does that organization include in its membership practically all the firemen and engineers in this country?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; railroad firemen and engineers all over the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. And does it also include conductors?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes, sir.

The letter reads as follows:

BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN, Washington, D. C., April 1, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,

My Dear Senator. We have just received copy of amendment (in the nature of a substitute) submitted by Senator King to the Coolidge bill, S. 2969, and we are availing ourselves of the first opportunity to advise you of our views with respect to this proposed legislation.

So far as we can determine, none of the serious objections to S. 2969 have been overcome in the substitute bill. The bill is essentially for the relief of aliens illegally and unlawfully in the United States and would put a premium on evasion and violation of our existing immigration restriction laws.

Section 1 provides that an alien who entered the United States, either from a foreign country or an insular possession, either bestimated.

Section 1 provides that an alien who entered the United States, either from a foreign country or an insular possession, either before or after the passage of the act, shall be deported in the manner provided in sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917, etc., followed by some highly important qualifications and subject to the discretion of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization. As a matter of fact, in practically all of the instances cited in the bill the alien could be proceeded against and deported under existing Federal law.

Section 2 would weaken the provisions of existing immigration laws and would open the possibilities for the exercise of political influence to defeat a meritorious deportation. Under this section if an alien is convicted of a crime and later pardoned he may escape deportation. The approval of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization would be no safeguard.

Section 3 provides that after an alien who has illegally entered the United States and successfully evaded detection for a period of 10 years, or who has successfully evaded detection for a period of 1 year, if he has a relative legally resident in the United States, he may not be deported if the so-called interdepartmental committee can be induced to permit him to remain, and when so permitted to remain automatically becomes eligible for citizenship. Section 4 provides that nonimmigrants, upon application to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, may have their status changed to that of a nonquota immigrant or preference-coucta immigrant. It seems to us that instead of this section hold-

Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, may have their status changed to that of a nonquota immigrant or preference-quota immigrant. It seems to us that instead of this section holding out the reward of permanent quota admission to aliens who break their promise and breach the condition-precedent agreement by which they obtained temporary admission, this section should provide for the immediate deportation of temporary admitted non-immigrants and nonquota aliens who break their word and violate their agreements and should make such deportation a bar to reentry.

Section 5 provides that the registry of aliens at ports of entry may be made as to any alien not ineligible to citizenship in whose case there is no record of admission for permanent residence, if such alien shall make a satisfactory showing to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization that he entered the United States prior to July 1, 1924, has resided in the United States continuously since such entry, is a person of good moral character, and is not subject to deportation. Fortunately section 6 provides that the burden of proof shall be upon the alien to establish every requisite fact.

Section 6 further provides for a tabulation or compilation of records of aliens permitted to remain in the United States under the provisions of this bill and the opening of a "charge account" records of airling perimited to the records of a "charge account" against quotas of this bill and the opening of a "charge account" against quotas of future years.

Section 7 applies to the collection of entrance fees and is necessary if the bill should be enacted into law.

Section 8 empowers the Secretary of Labor to designate persons holding supervisory positions to issue warrants for the arrest of aliens. It is our understanding that for years the Secretary has delegated the power to assistants and arrests are made and warrants are issued with little delay. If this provision of law is necessary, it would appear that there is no good reason why it should not be enacted without being connected with other legislative matter which we believe is wholly against the public interest.

Section 9—we have previously stated our objections to this section, which is similar to the original bill. Any such authority as contained in this section should be restricted to competent, experienced officers and not delegated to "any employee."

Section 10 is the usual provision for the issuance of rules and regulations.

regulations.

regulations.

Section 11 provides for the composition of the interdepartmental committee. We are opposed to the delegation of power to any such committee. The Secretary of Labor is charged generally with the enforcement of the immigration laws and it is very unlikely that the interdepartmental committee would deviate from the policy of the Secretary of Labor. We are opposed to the proposed substitution of persons for laws.

We see no objection to section 12 and if the bill is enacted this

We see no objection to section 12, and if the bill is enacted this provision would seem desirable.

Section 13 provides for the repeal of the provision of law granting quota preference to immigrants skilled in agriculture, and we have no objection to that provision.

SUMMARY

While the amendment in the nature of substitute for S. 2969 contains certain modifications and improvements over the original bill, it still confers very broad discretionary powers on the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization and the interdepartmental committee. The bill is claimed to strengthen the deportation laws, when, as a matter of fact, with one inconsequential exception, the bill, if enacted, would not add a single mandatorially deposits the property would expert. exception, the bin, it enacted, would not add a single mandatorially deportable alien to existing law but, on the contrary, would substitute for the mandatory provisions of law the discretion of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization and the interdepartmental committee. The chief object of the bill is to "permit to remain in the United States" aliens who are illegally and unlaw-Assuring you of my cooperation and assistance and with best wishes, I am,

PAYMENTS TO EASTERN CHEROKEES

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I submit a Senate resolution which simply asks for information from the Comptroller General.

Some years ago the Congress passed a jurisdictional bill enabling the Cherokee Indians to go into the Court of Claims. The case was prosecuted; but, for some reason, the Court of Claims did not take into consideration or assume jurisdiction of some facts which the Indians thought they were entitled to have considered.

There is now pending before the Committee on Indian Affairs an amendment to the original jurisdictional bill; but before the Committee on Indian Affairs can adopt the amendment with any degree of satisfaction it is necessary to have some information, and I submit this resolution asking for the information from the Comptroller General. If there be no objection, I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma, which will be read?

The resolution (S. Res. 285) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller General of the United States, for the information of the Senate, is hereby requested to advise the Senate of the amounts appropriated by Congress in payment of the lands and improvements of the Eastern Cherokees ceded by them by treaty of December 29, 1835 (7 Stat. 478); what charges against such funds were found justly due and payable by the Supreme Court of the United States; after deducting such just charges, whether or not the balance bore interest, and if so, from what date and at what rate. He is further requested to advise the Senate what amount or amounts of payments were made thereon to the Eastern Cherokees per capita since the dates of appropriation; and the balance due the Eastern Cherokees per capita, if any after applying such payments made in accordance Resolved. That the Comptroller General of the United States, capita, if any, after applying such payments made in accordance with the established law governing partial payments. Also what gratuities, if any, have been paid to the Eastern Cherokees per

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, in view of the lateness of the hour and the conditions in the Senate, and my understanding that there would be no legislative business transacted, I shall feel obliged to call for a quorum if any business is to be transacted. I should not object, but I should have to ask for a quorum.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In order to obviate the necessity of calling a quorum, I ask that the resolution be printed and lie on the table, so that I may call it up at a later date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, what is the nature of the report?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a favorable report on the nomination of a postmaster at Knoxville, Tenn. I should like to have the nomination considered at this time.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

MEMORIAL SERVICES

The Speaker of the House of Representatives presided. The Chaplain, Dr. Montgomery:

Almighty God, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee and worthily magnify Thy holy name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Dorothy Reddish sang There Is No Death, by O'Hara. The Chaplain, Dr. Montgomery:

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; He leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou are with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever. Amen.

Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not love, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing. Love suffereth long, and is kind; love envieth not; love vaunteth not its self, is not puffed up. Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth. Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. For we know in part, and we prophesy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part Chair declares the House to be in recess for the purpose of | shall be done away. When I was a child, I spake as a child,

I understood as a child, I thought as a child: but when I became a man, I put away childish things. For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known. And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; but the greatest of these is love. (I Cor. xiii.)

Lead, kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom, Lead thou me on!

The night is dark, and I am far from home— Lead thou me on!

Keep thou my feet; I do not ask to see The distant scene—one step enough for me,

I was not ever thus, nor prayed that thou Shouldst lead me on;

I loved to choose and see my path; but now Lead thou me on!

I loved the garish day, and spite of fears, Pride ruled my will. Remember not past years,

So long Thy power hath blest me, sure it still Will lead me on O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till The night is gone,

And with the morn those angel faces smile, Which I have loved long since, and lost awhile.

Hear us, Infinite Spirit, while we breathe the chant of the ages: Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty; heaven and earth are filled with Thy goodness; glory be unto Thy holy name. Hear us and lead us to repose our confidence in Thee. We thank Thee for the blessed gift of life; inspire us to live wisely, labor industriously, and at the last hand it back to Thee without a blemish. Guide us by Thy law, rule us by Thy love, and lead us in the pathway of a just and honorable service for our country.

We praise Thee for the words that fell from the lips of our Master:

Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you.

Heavenly Father, the sands of life run swiftly; we know not when the silver cord shall be loosed, the golden bowl be broken, but so long as faith and hope and love shall live, so long is the immortality of the soul assured. Be this the comfort, the hope of the sorrowing ones of our deceased Members in whose memory we have assembled. May we go forward with patience and fortitude and at the last may we be able to look back without regret in the closing hours of this earthly life and pass serenely to our eternal home. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

Hon. ULYSSES S. GUYER, a Representative from the State of Kansas, delivered the following address:

ADDRESS OF HON, ULYSSES S. GUYER

Mr. Speaker:

Leaves have their time to fall, And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath And stars to set, but all, Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!

Veneration for the sepulcher and reverence for the dead belong to the most ancient instincts of the human race. To respect and to honor the memory and dust of our ancestors is common alike to the savage and the civilized. This inclination to consecrate the grave and to enshrine the memory of our departed ancestors may have been and doubtless was the beginning of the worship of Deity, for in that black night of prehistoric darkness the human soul reached out toward the only symbol of Deity it possessed—its earthly parentage.

Thus today, both in harmony with the precedents of the House and the customs of mankind, we meet to honor those who have gone to that "undiscovered country" and who for a brief time were associated with us in this forum fashioned by our fathers in the Constitution. This day the discord of party passion divides us not. Individual interests and personal ambitions are forgotten. The battle for supremacy and the struggle for precedence sleep for the moment like those we mourn. All that is sordid, all that is ignoble in this game of politics retreats in silence from the presence of death.

There are no minority views in this committee's report. It is accepted by unanimous consent without debate. That report constitutes the epitaph of the seven strong men who are the objects of this memorial. Their work in this forum is finished. Their record is completed. Their roll calls have all been answered. Their speeches have all been uttered. Their offices have been vacated by the decree of fate. Soon others will occupy their places and the current of life will resume its accustomed course.

It is one of the inexplicable mysteries of life in which one surrenders his peace of mind, his tranquillity of soul and life under his own vine and fig tree for a disappointing, disillusioning ignis fatuus in the morass of public life. Yet, arduous as the duties are, we are loathe to leave its unrivaled associations, and every Member may refer with pride to his membership in this forum of the people. The duties and growing exactions upon its Members increasingly draw upon their powers of endurance and resistance, which constantly increases their mortality. I have been a Member of this House for 10 years under five Speakers, three of whom have gone to that undiscovered land where there is always a quorum present.

In my humble opinion, the Presiding Officer of this House holds in his credentials of election as Speaker the supreme testimonial of exalted character, unimpeachable integrity, and superlative ability. He is no accident. He must prove his fitness for this great office through a long series of years in the fierce furnace of political debate, the fisticuli of parliamentary strategy and maneuver, and by his ability to manage strong and intelligent men under the most trying and difficult circumstances. That, in my opinion, was what led the late Nicholas Longworth to twice declare upon this floor, "I would rather occupy that chair than any other office in the world."

While in the roster of public offices a Member of this House is not the most exalted, membership in the House holds the opportunity for the highest type of public service. The principal difference between the higher and lower offices is that the higher are the more exacting and the more disappointing and disillusioning. Men speak of the Presidency as the greatest office in the world, and we do not dispute that estimate. But what a tragic and disappointing illusion!

With more or less familiarity I have known the last seven Presidents; knew each before his elevation to the high office, met each while serving his term, saw all of them after the expiration of their terms, except one, who escaped in the embrace of death, and every one of them withered under the devastating experience like the grass withered under the furnace breath of the drought of 1934. The Presidency saps the life like a vampire and like a vampire mocks.

I saw Woodrow Wilson stumble down into the valley and the shadow amid the wreck of his shattered dream of peace, disappointed, disillusioned and heartbroken beyond the dream of despair. I saw that world-famous smile of William Howard Taft, which they said would never wear off, fade forever among the things that were. Warren G. Harding, as Senator, might still be in the land of the living. We were all so sure that the cold, calculating, imperturbable equanimity, the impenetrable stoicism of Calvin Coolidge would be proof against the lethal draught, but now we know that a happy decade or mayhap a tranquil score of years were shorn from his span of life. One of the seven by reason of his superlative strength and his indomitable will survived a decade in the generous hope of again sacrificing himself upon that alluring altar, but before his dream came true he expired like a steed plunging back into his burning barn. I saw Herbert Hoover, too sensitive for such an office, grow old while I looked at him.

There are living six widows of former Presidents and the wife of the only ex-President, eloquent tribute to the eternal feminine and tragic evidence of Presidential mortality. Let no one deceive himself into believing that the present incumbent, in spite of all his playful laughter and gallant front, is not corroding under the acid of this enervating ordeal. We sigh, "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown", but no more uneasy than the head that is pillowed in that snowy palace at the other end of the Avenue. We speak of "the white light that beats upon a throne", but it is no white and not nearly so hot as that which flames about the Presidential chair. But this office confers immortality upon one's name, so scores of patriots surge to immolate themselves upon this alluring but fatal altar.

During the last holiday season I drove past that gleaming palace, with its noble portico aflame with a rainbow of Christmas lights, and I thought as I mused upon the somber shadows that lurked among its stately columns and hid in its classic corridors that we should write above those iron gates what is etched on the lintels of Dante's Inferno:

Lasciate ogni speranza voi ch'entrate.

Shakespeare, in his tragedy of greatness, puts upon the lips of Marc Antony the naked truth concerning human greatness. Antonius was standing above the body of his assassinated friend and comrade, that "piece of bleeding earth", that pathetic clay that but yesterday was Julius Caesar, "whose word might have stood against the world." As he gazed upon this prostrate form he exclaimed:

O Mighty Caesar! dost thou lie so low? Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils, Shrunk to this little measure?

Massillon, delivering the funeral oration of Louis XIV in the Cathedral of Notre Dame, exclaimed, "Dieu, seul, est grand"—God, alone, is great! Such is the tragedy of human grandeur! The old Romans had a lucid saying: "Sic transit gloria mundi"—so passes the glory of the world.

This service reminds us of the swift mutations of life. Nothing in life is permanent or static. Nature abhors both a vacuum and dull monotony. Life is a stream on whose bosom is etched everlasting change. The earth is full of life, music, beauty, and loveliness. But its beauty and loveliness do not last. It changes as swiftly as the wings of light.

Beauty comes and beauty goes, Like the petals of a rose. Song is but a moment's bliss, Fleeting as a lover's kiss. Dawn's bright promise of a day, Quickly crumbles in decay. Spring is but an eerie, banshee light, Vanishing in a burst of flight. And in all this translency, Only God and hope remain to me.

The passing of these colleagues of ours brings into sharp relief not only the eternal change of all things but the mystery of death. Life too, is quite as much a mystery. What is life with all its wondrous, mighty energies? Its definition and its source have escaped all our sages and philosophers. What is death? Only the poet can approach a definition. Nancy Byrd Turner has recently given her version and vision of death under the title, Death is a Door:

Death is only an old door Set in a garden wall. On gentle hinges it gives, at dusk, When the thrushes call.

Along the lintel are green leaves, Beyond, the light lies still; Very willing and weary feet Go over that sill.

There is nothing to trouble any heart, Nothing to hurt at all. Death is only a quiet door In an old wall.

But what a pitiable little span is human life. When viewed only from its troubled surface, what a strange and pathetic tragedy. Yesterday the warm, sweet current of life; today still in the chill of death. Yesterday the thrill and exhilaration of superiority and preeminence; today the democratic equality of the dust. Death, like love, "levels all rank." There is no caste in the dominion of the sepulcher. Death is the universal decree. The earth itself is but one vast mausoleum. We touch it not without desecrating a myriad sepulcher. The very rocks that wall us in are but the dusty archives of life that throbbed in dead and forgotten ages. All that lives must die.

The hand of the king that the scepter hath borne, The brow of the priest that the mitre hath worn, The eye of the sage and the heart of the brave, Are hidden and lost in the depth of the grave.

But it has been said that there is no life without death. That death is the prophecy of life.

Plato, thou reasonest well! Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire, This longing after immortality.

Bryant teaches us a beautiful lesson relative to the migratory bird:

There is a Power whose care
Teaches thy way along that pathless coast—
The desert and illimitable air—
Lone wandering but not lost,

He who from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way that I shall tread alone,
Will guide my feet aright.

The bird that sunward guides its flight does not know that eternal summer laughs beneath the tropic sun. He has never seen the leaves that never fade nor felt the heat that never cools. His native home was where arctic ice drove summer from the earth he knew. But in his little fluttering heart the Almighty had planted this cosmic urge to seek a land of everlasting summer; and when the bird arrives, there the summer is. Neither nature nor nature's God ever deceived his children.

I used to have a friend who was a great lawyer and a greater poet and philosopher, though he wrote all of his poetry in the form of prose. In an essay discussing the conservation of energy and the well-known fact that always and everywhere in nature nonextinction is her most imperious command; that matter and energy were indestructible and eternal. He tells it so much better than anyone else ever did, so I will quote briefly:

Each meanest mote of matter's dust doth hide a king, divinity doth hedge. He may his vesture's fashion change, or may put on the Gyges ring: he ne'er shall abdicate.

Though worlds may crash and matter wreck, or seethe in flame

Though worlds may crash and matter wreck, or seethe in flame with fervent heat, and seeming chaos come again, without a tremor, still enthroned, his royal plumage all unscathed, his power nor jot nor tittle 'bates.

When comes the time, and come it shall, when seemingly this solid earth, you fiaming sun, and all that his wide eye beholds, in sheer vacuity dissolves, * * his crown serene he still shall wear, shall still his royal scepter wield.

If this mote of matter, Judge Keplinger's humble but regal grain of dust, shall survive the wreck of worlds, what shall we say of mind and soul and energy? Mind and energy are eternal. I am mind, I am energy! I am immortal!

I know of no better manner of concluding this faltering memorial to those of our number who have gone to the land of their dreams than by quoting a little poem by the great dramatic critic, William Winter. About a quarter of a century ago Mr. Winter was very ill and close to the gates of eternity. He recovered, however, and afterward wrote this poem, and, in my humble opinion, no sweeter honey of its kind has dripped from the hive of genius since Tennyson wrote The Crossing of the Bar. In the gentle faith of Him who walked by the tideless sea and in the calm philosophy of William Winter, as expressed in this poem, we can look toward the sunset trail with confidence and hope:

One other bitter drop to drink,
And then—no more!
One little pause upon the brink,
And then—go o'er!
One sigh—and then the lib'rant morn
Of perfect day,
When my free spirit, newly born,
Shall soar away.

One pang—and I shall rend the thrall
Where grief abides,
And generous Death shall show me all
That now he hides;
And, lucid in that second birth,
I shall discern,
What all the sages of the earth
Have died to learn.

One motion and the stream is crost, So dark, so deep!
And I shall triumph, or be lost, In endless sleep.
Then onward, whatsoe'er my fate, I shall not care!
Nor sin nor sorrow, love nor hate Can touch me there.

Hon. John J. O'Connor, a Representative from the State of New York, delivered the following address:

ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN J. O'CONNOR

Mr. Speaker, once again the House of Representatives stands in recess, in tribute to those Members of Congress whom we have lost, by death, since we last met on such occasion.

In his oration in memory of the first Athenians who fell in the Peloponnesian War, Pericles commended the fitness of the Athenian public funeral, but doubted the wisdom of any speech, declaring that where men's deeds have been great, they should be honored in deed only, and that the reputation of many should never depend upon the judgment, or want of it, of one, and their virtue exalted or not, as he spoke, well or ill.

Most of us believe "they shall not pass this way again." But America was aware of their "passing." They had the distinctive honor, not always appreciated, to be singled out from among our 127,000,000 of the Nation's people to be included within the small group of 531 men and women who form the legislative branch of the Government.

Each and every one of them was conscious of that honor and its obligations and responsibilities. No one of them was a "backyard" Congressman, concerned only with his own State or his own district. They all appreciated that their correct title under the Constitution was Representative or Senator "from" the State of their residence, and not merely "of" that Commonwealth. Their ideas and the conception of their obligations were not provincial. They were "nationally minded", an example well worth emulation.

It has not been given to all men to have lived in the days through which they, our deceased colleagues passed. To have lived during the last generation is a privilege never before afforded in history, and unlikely to be repeated or surpassed.

These colleagues of ours who sat shoulder to shoulder with us, who agreed with us, or contended with us, passed through the most momentous three decades of civilization. That they were aware of it we are sure. Their participation in it youches for that.

They left us when they had reached perhaps the peak of their ambitions. In measure greater or less they had satisfied what Arnold called:

The highest earthly desire of the ripened mind, the desire of taking an active part in the great work of government.

It was their privilege to see man conquer distance on land through the development of the automobile. Above their heads they saw coursing through the air giant man-made birds, propelled by humans—their ears were startled to hear voices carried through illimitable space without wires-what they had toiled at with their hands they saw performed a hundredfold by "Frankenstein" machines, terrifyingly human in operation, though soulless and ruthless in their consequences. All this was called by some of their contemporaries "progress", the economic going forward of civilization, the scientific conquering of the universe, emancipation from the slavery of labor. The economic and social readjustment necessary from these innovations concerned these colleagues of ours, as their records well prove. Reared in the school of individualism they, like their constituents, looked askance at times at this irresistible march of the forces of nature and invention. To meet the changed conditions they gave the best that was in them to solve the economic and social problems of the Nation they represented. Their predecessors had no such problems. Until the turn of the twentieth century progress was comparatively even in its tenor. It was a great privilege to play an important part in an unparalleled period of dynamic change.

While our colleagues, whom we honor today, were afforded the opportunity to live through, and take leading parts in, such an economic and social readjustment, at the same time they were to witness and participate in the greatest armed conflict in all history, among practically all the leading civilized nations of the world. None of their forbears ever lived through such days and, please God, may their descendants never pass through such an experience, the effect of which even time may never eradicate. At first hand, and through their own eyes, our beloved colleagues saw countless millions of educated men, in arms, bent on destroying their fellow men with new implements of war which their fathers had never envisioned.

With airplane, with centaurlike tanks, with death-dealing gas, civilization brawled. None knew the terrifying results more than our departed colleagues—they lived it. They saw millions slaughtered and maimed, thousands upon thousands of their own boys, out of the four million in arms, killed or incapacitated. That experience was theirs, and it was their solemn duty to reconstruct and to salvage. We, who knew them well, know what a prominent part they played in this post-war rehabilitation. It is rarely that we could commemorate the service of any one group of men whose outstanding services in behalf of the veterans of the World War would stand out so pronounced.

In their time, these colleagues of ours saw nearly every old established government of Europe fall, and a new order instituted. Monarchies and kingdoms gave way to democracies, social states, or dictatorships. Never in history, in a space of so few years, was the change so rapid. All this they saw occurring in the outside world. They gave attention to all this change, because their vision was not nationally self-contained. They did not believe in erecting a barbwire enclosure around their own country, either to keep their own people in, or their blood relations out. They realized that America was an integral part of the world, born of it and, to an extent, dependent on it. They wore no dark glasses to blur out the Atlantic or the Pacific.

While all these chimerical changes were going on abroad, in their own land these beloved colleagues of our experienced new and unprecedented changes. They saw a Nation struggling under a tremendous war debt, principally consisting of billions loaned to those nations called our allies. They saw the post-war cost of war—a billion dollars a year to take care of our soldiers who defended their country and other nations.

In 1921 they saw our country plunged into a depression, from which our farmers have never emerged, only to be followed by those delusive boom years, until that unparalleled and unprecedented crash of 1929.

It is disputable which years were more interesting and awe inspiring, or worth while, in which to live—those dreadful war days of 1914 to 1918, or those stressful years of depression from 1929 until recently. Either were much worth while—the experience—not only for the individual who lived through them but for the morale of our people. The immediate cost is apparent, but the ultimate gain will be worth all the cost and all the suffering entailed. Aristotle said:

The powers of evil and horror must be granted their full scope; it is only thus that we triumph over them. Only when they have worked their uttermost will, do we realize that there remains something in man's soul which is forever beyond their grasp and has power in its own right to make life beautiful.

Our colleagues knew, ere they passed from this mortal sphere, that never again would our country be dragged into a foreign martial conflict. They also knew, and gave their all to the end, that, out of the great economic depression, a new order would arise making it impossible that there be a recurrence of such suffering. Oh, they were called "socialists" and other terms of alleged opprobrium when they joined in working out the remedies suggested and put them into effect. They were compelled to withstand all the jibes and shafts of ridicule shot at them by the diehard conservatives, and the "rugged individualists." But they stood their ground, and before they passed on, they enjoyed the satisfaction of having had a part in helping to pull this Nation out of the greatest economic abyss into which it had ever sunk.

They lived through these recent years of government consciousness on the part of the people. They saw the growth of untoward criticism of men in public life, by press, through radio, by individuals who had no conception of the subject about which they carped and who would not dare offer themselves before the electorate.

They lived through the recent years of all the "isms", from parlor, from soap box, and from pulpit. They, our colleagues, were the targets of the venom of blatant tongues in press and via radio. They learned that what were here-tofore considered sacred personalities were no longer revered by the raucous, snarling broadcaster or the irresponsible columnist.

They went all through that—patriots as they were, confident of the justice of the cause they advocated. They were not swerved by the threats of selfish minorities or blocs or groups or deterred by abuse from their inferiors.

To have carried on through those days, not yet quite over, is no small compliment, especially when they beheld the rise of the demagogue, the official who caters to any minority, however small, provided it is sufficiently leather-lunged. Democracy which they knew when they entered public life had deteriorated within their time to the "bloc", the "drive", the "march", and the "lobby." "League" this and "union" that came into being in the closing years of their life to attempt to dictate by threats the orderly process of a democracy. While they saw other public officials succumb, they, may it always be said to their credit, stood steadfast, obedient to the oath to which they subscribed and to their obligation to represent their people.

Read the list. Who among that number, of those we now hold immortal, would today succumb to the "points" of this one or the "platform" of that self-appointed dictator of our Nation's destinies?

We shall miss them because we have need right now of more of their stalwart type, ready to submerge their own interests to serve.

It was such men as these, our colleagues, Mark Twain had in mind when he gave his advice on how to take life.

Take it-

He said-

as though it were—as it is—an earnest, vital, and important affair. Take it as though you were born to the task of performing a merry part in it—as though the world had awaited your coming. Take it as though it were a great opportunity to do and achieve, to carry on great and good chances to help and cheer a suffering, weary, heartbroken brother. Now and then a man stands out from the crowd, labors earnestly, steadfastly, confidently, and straightway becomes famous. The world wonders, admires, idolizes. The secret of the power that elevates the few is to be found in their industry, application, and perseverance under the promptings of a determined spirit.

These men of ours did "stand out from the crowd." It is only those who do so stand out who are the targets for the arrows of the supercilious critics—yea, even the assassin's bullet.

It is not only wars which produce heroes. Most of our revered and still honored national characters did not achieve their everlasting fame on the battlefield. Contrary to many temporary indications, God has really endowed his people to be eventually appreciative of service well performed. Such appreciation is rarely expressed during life. Nor is it always adequately expressed in a contemporary eulogy. Time, however, is the recorder, in whose indelible, permanent record is written the only true biography. "The good men do" is not "interred with their bones."

President Alderman, formerly of the University of Virginia, once said:

In the case of a statesman, all experience warns us not to attempt to fix his final place in history until the generation that knew him and loved him or hated him shall have passed away and a new generation, to whom he was not a familiar figure, shall have come upon the stage, capable of beholding him with eyes undimmed by emotion and judging him with minds unclouded by prejudice or by passion. Loyalty and duty and reverence none-theless urge us to set down, while memory is clear and events are fresh, what we know of men upon whom their fellow men placed great burdens of power.

A prince once said of a king struck down: "Taller he seems in death."
And the word holds good, for now, as then, It is after death that we measure men.

We have not foregathered today, however, Mr. Speaker, to measure, but rather to express our deep-seated feelings at their passing from us. They were our daily companions and our friends. We like to assuage somewhat the irreparable loss to their families and our own grief by feeling that they have just "lay down to pleasant dreams."

A cornet solo, Nearer My God to Thee, was played by Ralph Ostrom, of the United States Army Band.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., pronounced the benediction:

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God, the Father, and the communion of the Holy Spirit be with you all.

HON. HUEY PIERCE LONG

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with somber reflections that we speak on this occasion, because this is memorial exercise day. It is the day that has been set aside in order to pay tribute to those illustrious citizens—our colleagues—who have been called from their daily labors by the Father of all time. These sad events come to us daily, but somehow we cannot accustom ourselves to them, and although we accept them we never become reconciled and are filled with much sorrow and grief.

Mr. Speaker, one of our most eminent citizens was called | which the RECORD will corroborate, and for continuous from his daily labors last September. That citizen was in the full bloom of manhood and health and had dedicated his life's work for the public good. That illustrious citizen was Senator Huey Pierce Long who was cut down by a cruel bullet directed by the aim of an assassin on September 8, 1935, in the hours of work and in the vigor of health and unlimited energy. With a strong constitution he battled for his life for 30 hours. While he was battling, the prayers of thousands of his fellow citizens were offered that his life would be spared so he could carry on as the protector of his wife and children and complete his services to his country; however, the wound proved fatal, and our beloved Senator passed into a quiet eternal sleep closing his earthly work on September 10, 1935.

This tragedy shocked the Nation, and the people in all walks of life in the State of Louisiana were visibly affected. One of the greatest outpourings of State citizenry visited Baton Rouge, La., on the day that his body was placed in a burial spot in a sunken garden on the grounds of the beautiful State capitol. That a virile and young man was taken from his people in the midst of health was indeed sad, but it was more pathetic to see him taken from a wife and three fine children, who needed his love, care, and protection. The heart of the Nation went out to them with fullest Senator Long had been honored by the State of Louisiana many times. He had served as public service commissioner, as Governor, and when he was taken from us he was the senior United States Senator and chairman of the State central committee and national committeeman of the Democratic Party of Louisiana.

Senator Long has left many monuments in his State that generations yet to come will see and know of him by his work. His life's efforts were devoted to the uplifting of the underprivileged. He was a great friend for the encouragement of education. He devised ways and means whereby all school children in the State of Louisiana would have free schoolbooks. He also inaugurated night schools for adults. He added facilities to the State University that permitted the tripling of the enrollment and made it easier to obtain a higher education for those who were desirous. He devised ways and means by which a new mansion, a new statehouse, an airport, and a bridge across the Mississippi River were constructed. These are all major improvements that will serve the people for generations with much convenience. He inaugurated the first complete paving program for the State. These and many other improvements are left as marks of his effort and foresight.

Senator Long was held in the highest affection by the people of his State, and there was nothing in their gift that he could not have had for the asking. While the Senator had many titles, his closest friends always called him "Huey", and I think that he preferred this salutation to any title that he had earned. I always called him "Huey." met him during his first term as public service commissioner on public business. From that time on I was thrown in constant contact with him, which occasioned me to know him intimately. He was always anxious to do something for the general good. He was of a very generous disposition. He was determined in his convictions and asserted his views in an aggressive and open manner. But with all this he was reasonable. When you could show him logically that he was in error, he would make acknowledgment and change his views. He was tireless in his labors, and those who joined with him on any undertaking were never surprised when he would call them up in the wee hours of the morning for some information or assistance, because when he undertook a task he labored both day and night-hours meant nothing to him. His signal and continuous victories attested beyond any doubt to his competency as a political leader, and I am convinced that you gentlemen of the House and Senate recognized his ability many times in his debates upon the floor of the Senate. I think he demonstrated to the world at large his skill as a debater on many subjects, speaking you recall how he held the Senate floor for the near record time of 15 hours. I have heard many statements made, with which I agree, that it was a great loss to the Nation when Huey Long passed away.

I knew him to be a devoted son, a loving husband, and an affectionate father. He was a tried and true friend-to know him was to love him.

> Whatever vales we yet may wander, What sorrow come, what tempest blow, We have a friend, a friend out yonder, To greet us when we have to go Out yonder someone that we know.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, Louisiana has already eulogized a great soul that has passed away into what many of us believe the realm of immortality. Little would the brief biography that my late beloved friend inserted in the Congressional Directory reveal such startling achievements and such an amazing and brilliant career during his entire period of public service for the people of Louisiana, who were so endeared to him.

HUEY PIERCE LONG, Democrat, of New Orleans, born in Winnfield, La., on August 30, 1893; became a practicing attorney in 1915; held offices of railroad commissioner, publicservice commissioner, and Governor; was elected in November 1930 a Member of the United States Senate without opposition, and his term was due to expire in 1937. Such is in the Congressional Directory.

O Mr. Speaker, this summary does not commence to tell of the uphill and courageous fight this man, as a young man, had to wage in order to study law; it does not tell, even infinitesimally, the love and ambition that inspired this then young man to achievement of his goals. He rose to master the art of law; he succeeded in elevating himself, through the grace of his people, to high public office. From the very first office he ever held he was a benefactor of the people, who honored him, and to even those outside of the district in his State, at the time he was member of the Louisiana Public Service Commission, of which he later became chairman. In that capacity he lowered rates of telephones and carriage and of utilities. Even yet as a young man he accepted the office of Governor of Louisiana in 1928. Adversity stalked this genius in the first 2 years of his reign as Governor, but, alas! my beloved friend triumphed over his adversaries, submitted his gigantic public-improvement program to the people of Louisiana, and received approval of the vast majority of Louisiana's electorate.

HUEY PIERCE Long's achievements are perpetual monuments to his genius, perseverance, and determination. These are the monuments of our beloved late leader's contribution to Louisiana: Thousands of miles of paved roads and graveled roads-3,160 miles of paved roads and 4,858 miles of graveled roads constructed in Louisiana from 1928 to 1935; 23 of the finest bridges, all toll free, crowned by the Huey P. Long Bridge over the Mississippi River at New Orleans, all constructed from 1928 to 1935; a State capitol of unexcelled design, architecture, and beauty to house the entire State administration; New Orleans' million-dollar lake-shore development, including sea wall and bathing beaches; Shushan Airport, one of the finest in the world, with A-1 rating; hospitals and enlargements thereof and other vital State institutions; gradual amelioration of taxation so as to saddle taxes on those best able to pay, thus retaining Louisiana's finances in above-par status; schoolbooks to all school children of all schools and free transportation to all rural school children, thereby elevating the literate standing of the State of Louisiana to a high-ranking position in the Nation.

Time and again this man who dared champion the cause of the masses went before the people of his beloved State, and he triumphed each successive time with greater majorities. Yet the narrower his opposition the seemingly more prejudiced it became—yes, so prejudiced until one night in the massive corridor of the State capitol he founded and built the assassin's bullet struck Louisiana's leader.

Oh! the ways of the world. Consider the anguish of his family and his friends and the people of Louisiana, whom he loved and who loved him, when that great mortal succumbed to the assasin's bullet on September 10, 1935. The tragedy of Baton Rouge! What in reality was the monument of HUEY PIERCE LONG—his beloved State capitol—turned out to be a Mount Calvary, where he was to shed his blood for the cause of Louisiana.

But HUEY PIERCE Long did not die without religion. His work seemed to be guided by Divine Providence. The love in his mind uppermost was his God. His heart was one of real prayer and contrition—a prayer to be spared to continue the great work he was executing, a contrition to join his Master, where most of us believe that life just begins.

Alas, Mr. Speaker, we of Louisiana mourn the loss of Huey Pierce Long. We are grieved by his passing, touched by the sorrow of his beloved family. He who gave all he had for Louisiana. He who entrenched himself within the heart of every Louisiana-loving person. He who entrenched himself within the hearts of his fellow men by a service and spirit that became so centrifugal in force and powerful in effect that friendship became cemented. He who underwent the mental tortures of Gethsemane, subservient to his own great mind that subjected him to the one principle, to be a great benefactor for the people he loved; such great devotion that he could not run away from the mental anguish. He who followed the noblest of pursuits courageously and resigned himself to martyrdom. Oh, may his martyrdom only spur us on to continue our beloved late leader's ideals.

For as ye would do unto those, so would you do unto Me.

O Mr. Speaker, Louisiana is grieved for her lost leader, but she is not torn asunder. She is united stronger than ever in a shining, brilliant memory of an uncrowned king who believed in "every man a king", who has answered the call.

His love for God, his love for mankind, his logic, his principles, all blend into one giant hue of brilliant splendor to shine on and on in glamorous memory, in solemn perpetuation, in supreme prestige within the hearts of all who loved him, all who have admired him, throughout Louisiana, the Nation, and the world.

Mr. Derouen. Mr. Speaker, it is a sad and solemn occasion whenever we are gathered here to pay tribute of respect and regard to the memory of one of our departed comrades. Yet our meeting here speaks the fact that great men, great in merit of mind, in character of life, in virtue of public integrity, have died. Truly, sir—

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power, And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave, Awaits alike the inevitable hour. The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

The late Senator HUEY P. Long was not cradled in luxury, nor were the muscles of his early boyhood softened in indulgent ease. He did not have the advantage of a liberal education; but during the years he worked on the farm and kenned his lessons in the village school, he girded himself for his life's work, with vision of advancement and place and achievement that stirred within him. He quickly prepared himself for the profession of law. His rise at the bar was rapid, continuous in its progress, and certain and conspicuous in its achievements. While still a very young man, he was one of the recognized leaders in a bar of exceptional ability. His success not only brought him prominence but also material reward. His imagination was fired with the echoes of political struggle, in which he was only too eager to take a part; and his pulse quickened as out of the mists of the years that stretched before him phantom arms seemed to beckon on to the public arena. He had not long to await his opportunity.

Courage is not a very rare thing; ability is not a very rare thing; superabundant energy is not a very rare thing; vision is not a very rare thing; a quick master mind is not a very rare thing; but it is very, very seldom that we find all these admirable qualities combined in one man as they were in Senator Huey P. Long. He had unlimited courage, wonderful ability, great energy, and a far-reaching vision enrapt in a master mind, and for it the country will ever be grateful.

It was my good fortune to know Senator Long as Public Service Commissioner, as Governor, and as United States Senator. Owing to our strenuous lives in different parts of the country, we were not thrown together in his earlier political life so as to become bosom friends. But we were always on best of terms, although at times we differed on certain policies. When he came to Washington, we began to exchange ideas, and I learned to admire him for his many noble qualities.

From the very beginning of his political history until its close by death. Senator Long was constantly and conspicuously in the public eye, owing to his ambition, his aggressiveness, his unique personality, and his unparalleled popularity. He was often misjudged, frequently villified and abused by the press; but he towered above all criticism. He was the greatest champion of the masses of the people of our great State of Louisiana. He unshackled them from the old traditional, blue-blood, "ring" politics. He opened their eyes to material progress and development and new forms of legislation. He preached his doctrine of a new day in a better way to great crowds that he held spellbound from the beautiful hills and streams of north Louisiana to the Gulf-kist prairies and marshes of south Louisiana. Thus, with the consciousness of his power and of his predominating influence with the voters, who recognized in him an aggressive exponent of the principles in which they inherently believed, he was content to trust his political fate and fortune to their keeping. And they elected him and his coworkers by unprecedented majorities to the greatest offices of the State.

Although he had his own peculiar way of handling national issues, I soon discovered that he was thoroughly sincere in his convictions and that his every impulse was in sympathy with struggling humanity—the poor laborer, the farmer, the children—as boundless as the fathomless depth of space. He was passionately imbued in his advocacy of better charitable institutions, free schoolbooks, night schools for adults, free public education, including college work, better highways and bridges, mortgage moratorium, share the wealth by a more even distribution of wealth. He was not so much against the rich as he was hungry for means of making everyone happier, healthier, and wealthier—every man a king!

His ideas on national issues, whether we agreed with him or not, gave food for thought. They opened the eyes of many who had not seen the light. He contributed original ideas and ideals in the consideration of national problems that will influence national legislation long after we are gone and forgotten. He planted the seed in younger minds which will replace us in every important office of this land. Through the mediums of the mail, the press, the radio, and on the floor of the United States Senate, he marshaled his ideas and plans and ambition with his whole force and power and logic that made an impression, for or against, on every man, woman, and child of this country.

Senator Long had one quality which I often thought made his way more difficult for him. He was constantly seeking not the path of the least but that of the most resistance. Pertinacity, persistency, fidelity, and ceaseless activity were the qualities of our departed friend. He was by nature aggressive rather than defensive; communicative rather than receptive. His virtues were positive, not negative virtues. There was nothing passive about the man. His was a nervous, restless, active, inquiring, and doing mind, sometimes belligerent, always forceful; the kind of mind that always presses home the attack and scorns to feint or parry. And how he did love a good fight!

He was one of the most epideictic and panegyric orators of his time. He knew the Bible, and he unsparingly quoted from the Holy Scriptures as his base for almost every issue. He knew human nature and knew how to appeal to their inner feelings and desires. On the political hustlings he could arouse the enthusiasm of his audiences as no other man. He would speak several times a day to crowds that would invariably overflow the largest halls in every parish of our State. The day or night was never too disagreeable, the journey never too long or difficult, and nothing caused him to weaken in presenting his cause, as he saw it, to his people. It was the continuous outpouring of himself, the giving of all that was in him, that contributed so largely to his unparalleled popularity with the voters of Louisiana.

Before he came to the United States Senate he was a national figure. Louisiana made more progress in 4 years than it had in 50 years previous, and Governor Long had been the unquestioned leader in guiding every step of progress. Very characteristic of him, as soon as he took his oath of office as United States Senator he began filling the Chamber and galleries every time he took the floor to thunder his ideas on national legislation. He was an indefatigable worker and surrounded himself with the best posted and most efficient personnel. He had voluminous data at his finger ends. He was a strong debater and participated in many hot verbal contests on the floor of the Senate. He was quick with these apropos bits of repartee so indispensable in a debater. He was neither timid nor half-hearted. There was no trouble to discover how he stood on any major issue. He was either wholly for a proposition or wholly against it, ever alert at his post, unwearying in labor, strong and frank in debate, seeking out and challenging every wrong.

Throughout the South and the Nation there was universal sorrow when he died. His national popularity had not been tested, but he was one of the best known statesmen and had a great following. He was in the full vigor of life. His achievements were merely in their infancy. A great future was ahead of him. Having made himself not only a national figure but an international figure, he would have been a great influence on our national destiny had he lived a few more Sad to realize, Senator Lone's voice will never again be heard, but his influence, written in memory's halls, will be felt not only in this generation but for generations to come.

He was a good friend of mine. We often had our little chats in which he would reveal his plans with such vivid determination. I can see him in the last political battle of his career unfurling his battle flag to Louisiana's breezes. I can see him bright and clear of eye, robust in health, and exuberant in spirits. I can see him as he stood in the historic Chamber of the mightiest legislative body on earth, the United States Senate, battling with all the courage of an olden knight for the cause of the poor and oppressed. I can see him when he was the very embodiment of life, intensely human, a man with a host of devoted friends, with strong beliefs, with earnest convictions, with unfaltering purpose; and I can see him as he lay cold in death, a victim of an unfortunate circumstance, in the beautiful State capitol building which he erected, surrounded by his loved ones, mourned by his legions of devoted friends, lamented by his thousands of true supporters, with his earthly work donea remarkable man gone home to meet his God and to receive his reward.

His like we will never see again. His great spirit is at rest. He sleeps in the soil of his native State, snugged closely to her heart. Sweet be his sleep, glorious his awakening. With peace to his ashes and honor to his memory, permit me to conclude by quoting Theodore O'Hara:

Rest on, embalmed and sainted dead!

Dear as the blood ye gave!

No impious footsteps here shall tread

The herbage of your grave;

Nor shall your glory be forgot

While Fame her record keeps,

Or Honor points the hallowed spot

Where Valor proudly sleeps.

Yon marble minstrel's volceless stone
In deathless song shall tell,
When many a vanished year hath flown,
The story how ye fell.
Nor wreck, nor change, nor Winter's blight,
Nor Time's remorseless doom,
Can dim one ray of holy light
That gilds your glorious tomb.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House-

In the Valley of Decision,

Down the Road of Things-that-are,
You gave to us a vision,
You appointed us a star,
And through Cities of Derision
We followed you from far.

On the Hills beyond Tomorrow,
On the Road of Things-to-do,
With what strength of hand we borrow,
As we borrow soul from you,
We know not sloth nor sorrow,
And we build your vision true.

Senator Long battled forces unconquered by others and insurmountable to the average man, but he was a warrior bold, with unlimited courage and political genius. He held the State of Louisiana in the palm of his hand. He wrote its legislation; he built its hundred-million-dollar roads and its huge bridges; he lifted the State out of the mud; he breathed life and vigor into the university and built a capitol to the heavens; he furnished education to thousands of young men who never before even dreamed of school and college. The people of Louisiana, especially in the rural areas, fairly worshiped the ground he walked on. His enemies found much fault with him; they were bitter in their criticism; they cursed him; they damned him; they threatened to kill him; and finally they did assassinate him.

I cannot help believing the world is better because of Huey Long. He came out of an environment of suppression and poverty, from a land of meager opportunities. He burst through the chains that held him and forged ahead to national leadership. When he spoke the Senate galleries and halls were crowded. No other man now in the Senate could do that. The people who drifted into our offices always inquired, "Where is Huey Long?" "When can we see Long?" "When will Long speak?" This was so true that it became monotonous. He fascinated the young and he roused the old.

A storm that blows through a neighborhood does damage, and perhaps Long did some damage; but he cleared the way, and he swept the skies clear of the poisonous breath of old-time controlled Louisiana politics. He fought corporate dictatorship. He substituted his own strong control. This he proclaimed as liberty and liberation for the masses.

He aimed at national power. He thundered "Share the wealth" until the Money Trust shuddered in retreat. With poisoned fang Wall Street struck back. He incurred the most deadly hostile opposition, until groups of men met in secret and plotted his death. Strangely enough, on the floor of the Senate he predicted his own assassination. He knew he was a marked man, and that in all probability he would fall on the political battlefield of America.

For when the one Great Scorer comes
To write against your name,
He writes not that you won or lost—
But how you played the game.

Certainly the band of conspirators who were responsible for HUEY LONG'S death played a bloody game, and the chapter which tells of their evil deed reads like the dark pages of the Medieval Ages. I am glad to know that the Legislature of Louisiana recently passed a resolution to investigate the death of HUEY LONG, and I ask that the Congress of the United States pass a resolution of investigation. We are slow to act, it seems. Certainly we are not safe in our political liberties when assassins stalk through the land to strike men down because of their political views and opinions.

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.

In the fell clutch of circumstance,
I have not winced nor cried aloud;
Beneath the bludgeoning of chance
My head is bloody but unbowed.

It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishments the scroll,
I am the master of my fate:
I am the captain of my soul.

HON. THOMAS D. SCHALL

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, the sudden and tragic passing of Hon. Thomas D. Schall, a Senator from my home State of Minnesota, terminated the career of one of the most colorful figures in our national public life. His friends loved him for his sterling qualities, and his enemies feared him for his uncompromising and fighting spirit.

The handicap of blindness gave him a second sight, and with the aid of his loving wife he was able to muster facts and information far beyond the capacity of others.

TOM SCHALL, as he loved to be called by his friends, was one of the leading orators of his day. For many years he represented the Tenth Congressional District of Minnesota in this House. The people of Minnesota honored him by electing him as one of its Senators. The rank and file of our citizens had confidence in his ability and integrity and the humble loved him because he was one of them.

Senator Schall was a family man. He loved his home and dear ones. Though misfortune came to him and several members of his family, he was always cheerful and carried on his public fight as a crusader of old.

The public service rendered by Senator Schall will be written into the pages of the history of Minnesota and the Nation. His untiring efforts and accomplishments will be an inspiration to the youth of America. Blindness did not stop him from reaching his goal. Work and perseverance were rewarded by the people of Minnesota.

I had the privilege of serving in Congress with Senator SCHALL for nearly 10 years, and during these many years I always found him courteous, helpful, and sincere in his effort to properly represent the people of Minnesota in the United States Senate.

A higher power has taken away one of Minnesota's distinguished sons. May this Divine power continue to guide the destiny of our great country in the path of truth and justice.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, the life and career of THOMAS D. SCHALL, late a Senator from Minnesota, should be an inspiration to every American youth. From early boyhood he was obliged to contend with obstacles that would have discouraged one with a less indomitable will to go forward. Everything that Tom Schall got out of life he had to fight for and in doing so formed a character that was unbending and unyielding. His education was attained by burning midnight oil. At the age of 29 he lost his eyesight. He was then a successful lawyer in Minneapolis.

Undaunted by this tragedy, he continued in his chosen field, and with the able assistance of a fine and loyal wife he in a large measure overcame this greatest of all physical handicaps. His ability to memorize what had been read to him was one of his outstanding gifts. His knowledge and grasp of pending legislation was a matter of constant surprise to his friends and coworkers; and this information he sometimes used with telling effect and in such a way as to discomfit his opponents. Tom Schall did not know the meaning of the word "fear." Indeed, fearlessness was one of his outstanding characteristics. Senator Schall was an orator of exceptional ability and as a campaigner had few equals in our part of the country. Certainly none excelled him. His departure was a severe loss to his party, especially at this particular time when there is such a tragic dearth of those who dare to speak their mind on current events and happenings. The loss is national rather than sectional, and in the coming contest he will be greatly missed.

May his soul know that peace that was denied it here on

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, the death of Thomas D. Schall, late Senator, State of Minnesota, has taken from the national arena one of its most colorful and forceful figures. Tom SCHALL, as he preferred to be called, was always on the firing line. He served for a number of terms in the House of Representatives and then the people of Minnesota promoted him to the United States Senate. In both Houses he was always energetic, active, and effective. To him, obstacles were stepping stones, and though much tragedy visited his life, his indomitable spirit carried him on with unfailing cheerfulness. Although blind he saw much that many of us with our normal eyesight failed to see. He had one of the most remarkable memories of his time and one that often produced awe in those around him. He was blessed with a devoted and loving wife, who was in fact his eyes for him. She was constantly at his side, reading to him the written words which he committed to memory with great fidelity.

TOM SCHALL was always a crusader. His life and career were indeed colorful and can be the inspiration to the youth of America as an example of a man who fought his way from humble origin to the highest places. Though gone, Tom will not soon be forgotten.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I was present at the funeral of the Honorable Thomas D. Schall, Senator from Minnesota, on December 26, 1935. No finer tribute has ever been given to the memory of a public servant than the tribute paid the late Senator SCHALL by Rev. Charles Fox Davis, who delivered the funeral sermon.

The services were held in the beautiful Lakewood Chapel. Lakewood Cemetery, Minneapolis, Minn.

Reverend Davis, a life-long friend of the Senator, spoke as follows:

My friends, after having listened to the sweet songs of the soul which were sung, and after having repeated the words of the gentle Nazarene who lifted the veil of the future as none other ever has or will, and having offered our prayer to our Heavenly Father whose love broods over men at all times and everywhere, and having felt the soft appeal of the organ notes which sometimes moves the soul within us more profoundly than articulate words, it would be a simple thing for us to take a last look at the quiet face of our friend who lies so still beneath the national emblem—the American flag—and the flowers, and then watch loving hands carry his broken body to its earthly resting place beneath the snows of winter in the bosom of mother earth in this silent city of the dead. But, because it is the custom of the day, after our loved ones slip away from us, to pay gentle tribute to their memories, this we do in our friend's memory at this time.

"IF LIFE WERE ALL

"If life were all, Where were the recompense For all our tears? The troubled toil Of all the long drawn years, The struggle to survive, The passing show, Were scarce worth while If life were all.

"If life were all, What were it worth to live? To build in pain, So soon to learn Our building were but vain,
And then to pass to some vain nothingness,
Were scarce worth while,
If life were all.

"If life were all, How might we bear Our poor heart's grief, Our poor heart's grier,
Our partings frequent,
And our pleasures brief?
The cup pressed to the lips,
Then snatched away,
Were scarce worth looking on,
If life were all.

"Life is not all, We build eternally, And what is ours today To make existence such, Is ours always. We stand on solid ground
That lasts from aye to aye,
And makes earth's sojourn worth the while,
Life is not all, I say.

"Life is not all. I do not understand the plans; only know that God is good, And that his strength sustains. I only know that God is just; So in the starless, songless night, I lift my heart to Him and trust; And God my spirit witness gives, Life is not all."

-Anonumous.

Firmly we believe with the poet, as did our friend gone, that life is not all; that beyond that bank of shadows which men call death there is another life where we take up the higher, eternal tasks prepared for those who leave their earthly trestle boards upon which they have done so well with their earthly problems.

"Death is another Life. We bow our heads And, going out, we think, And enter straight Another golden chamber of the King's, Larger than this we leave, and lovelier." Anonymous.

The entire State of Minnesota, as well as the Nation, was shocked and saddened when it was flashed from Washington through radio, telegraph, and newspaper that Minnesota's junior through radio, telegraph, and newspaper that Minnesota's junior Senator, Thomas D. Schall, had been stricken down in an automobile accident; that the doctors in charge gave but slight hope of recovery, and each bulletin issued by them from the Senator's couch of pain was eagerly awaited, while prayers went up to God that his useful career to his State and the Nation might not be broken, for men and women of all political faiths joined in the prayer that his busy and useful life might be spared. For all leaders were in demand in the council chambers of the Nation, and not one could be spared until order was brought out of chaos, and a happy, contented America return once again.

It was last Sunday at noon that I sat listening to the radio, being stirred in my soul by the Christmas music with which the ether was charged and surcharged. Coming from the great choir of some cathedral was the Gloria in Excelsis, rendered with much feeling and beauty, when suddenly and abruptly the anthem stopped and a voice tremulous with emotion announced the sad fact that Senator Schall had passed; that suddenly the silver chord had been loosened, life's golden bowl broken, and that he had come to the end of life's trail and had crossed the Great Divide and had entered that nightless, painless, deathless land. That his soul entered that nightless, painless, deathless land. That his soul had-

"Climbed the great world's altar stairs, Which slope through darkness up to God."

Which slope through darkness up to God."

My thoughts, made cheerful and meditative by the sweet music to which I had been listening, had been along the line of how Christmas was such a magician to humanity each year; how Father Time had turned Christmas into a beautiful golden drawbridge for the transit of the old year and the advent of a new one, thus relieving the old year of much of its regret and giving added courage to all to commence with faith and hope the new one approaching. I am used to the immediate and sudden in my work as a minister, but I tell you that the announcement coming in the midst of a beautiful anthem made me stop the music, arise, and enter into another room, making me deeply meditative. I began to try to reconcile the providence of Him of whom it is written, "He is too wise to err and too good to be unkind", with the tragic, swift death of our friend. I became perplexed in my trying to reason the problem out, for life at times seems so chaotic, purposeless, disconnected, and strange, as though the good Father above were not keeping house and we seem to be living in an orphaned world; that there is no kindly Providence arching our lives. Then there came into my memory the words of the poet:

"Leaves have their time to fall,

"Leaves have their time to fall, And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath, And stars to set—but all, Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!"

Then quiet came to me, and another voice more beautiful than an earthly poet's whispered, "What I do now thou knowest not; but thou shalt know hereafter. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." After that I understood. To understand our let it be afraid." After that I understood. To understand our friend's sudden home going called for faith, and that reason could not solve it—but "some day we'll understand."

Our friend was cut down in the morning of life's afternoon. Had he but have reached 80 golden summers, while there would have been sorrow at his going, we would have said that it was a warrior who had fought his fight, run his race, and, after having served his day and generation, had fallen upon sleep. For just as the farmer, when the summer sun has done its ripening work upon the fields, goes in and reaps the golden grain, even so does that reaper, Death, gather the aged from our firesides—love them as we may. However we may love the aged about us, when they leave us we feel that they have rounded out their lives and leave us for that country where the inhabitants never grow old and the gates of that city are never shut. of that city are never shut.

of that city are never shut.

Yes; taken away from us in the morning of life's afternoon. From the many physical activities and exercises he was taking daily; from his practice of walking, horseback riding, shooting, and other vigorous things he was doing to keep both body and mind alert; with his versatility of nature's gifts and those acquired, it is no wonder that we learned that his gifts were clicking as never before and that he was fully preparing himself for the impending political battle and congressional debate which were so close at hand, for he was always getting a good start, so as to be ready for the great and trying tasks which are plainly visible on the national horizon.

Further, within his active personality there were ideals he had never reached; programs he was planning to carry out, and loved ones to care and plan for. Tom Schall, with his fighting heart, had already scented the battle from afar, and never was better prepared, so I have learned from his friends, to enter into discussion with his colleagues of various political faiths in Washington, to try to solve the great socio-politico-economic problems which are awaiting a solution at the hands of the American people, and must be solved, and that rightly, if America is to reach her ultimate destiny. He stood ready with pen, on platform, and in debate, to do his part at this most critical juncture of the Nation's life. Yet suddenly, "in the twinkling of an eye", the "last clear call came", and he has changed worlds suddenly, "in the twinkling of an eye", the "last clear call came", and he has changed worlds.

There is a text in the Old Book which seemingly symbolizes his swift passing. It reads: "His sun is gone down while it is yet day." You have watched the sun in the early morning come through the gates of the east with a fiaming sunrise. Suddenly you have seen the whole earth illuminated with light, the golden beams of the rising sun shining through the interstices of the foliage, and within yourself you have said: "Today will be glorious with golden sun and blue sky above." But at noon, looking toward the south, no sun was to be seen. During the morning the drab, slaty clouds sprang up in the west and covered the blue dome and sun, and when you looked toward the west at eventide there was no sun sinking amid a sea of purple glory. Practically the sun went down while it was a sea of purple glory. Practically the sun went down while it was sea of purple glory. Fractically the sun went down while it was yet day.

Senator Schall's eventful life was a sun, and from it radiated hope, courage, light, truth, justice, and a real patriot's love for his own America. He possessed qualities of heart and mind which make a man a man wherever you might meet him. There is no need, though I knew him closely for many years, of my summing up those qualities here this hour. Let me quote to you a few excerpts from others, selected from the newspapers of the land in which there were columns in his favor. Let me also add that these eulogies were written in the calm of editorial rooms, whose papers, many of them, were strongly partisan and not alined with the political party or faith of our friend gone. They were written by men who had worked side by side with him in the interests of the Nation for two decades and more, and they speak of intimacy with him. Here are a few of them:

"A man of character, ability, and brilliancy, self-made and well made. A graduate of the University of Minnesota and also a college of law, with degrees from both, with a postgraduate course in the school of hard knocks and adversity."

"A vigorous and striking personality in the political life of the Nation."

"He had a fighting heart and asked no quarter."

"He had a fighting heart and asked no quarter."

"Schall's work and influence in the council chambers of the Nation was of the highest order."

"He was a careful, painstaking, conscientious representative of the people. Had he two eyes he could not have been more efficient than he was."

efficient than he was."

"Tom Schall's struggle to State and National recognition is one of the most stirring stories of the State of Minnesota, or any State in the Union, for that matter."

"An outstanding example of ability and ambition transcending physical handicap that triumphed over affliction."

"He impressed his personality and opinions upon the Nation and also his colleagues. His forceful personality will be very much missed."

Further it was the late outstanding Theodor.

Further, it was the late outstanding Theodore Roosevelt who said of Senator Schall: "I believe in Tom Schall with all my heart."

I have been reading to you the exact words taken but yesterday from the press of this Nation, by outstanding men, some of whom were his political opponents throughout his career, which prove conclusively of his place, standing, and value as a man and statesman. May I not add the words of the Book of Books, "He being dead, yet speaketh."

dead, yet speaketh."

I knew our friend close-up for many years, in his home life, professional life, and with my visits with him at Washington when engrossed with national problems. Many years ago I was invited to attend an oratorical contest at the State university. Being interested as a young man in that phase of university life, I attended it with one of the professors of the institution. I did not know any of the contestants personally at the time. I listened in an impartial way to the different youthful orators, but there was one in that gathering that gripped me tremendously, by his voice, delivery, and subject matter. I had observed the fact that he was not as well dressed or groomed as the others, but I felt that nature had given to him in excess of the others on the program one of her unpurchasable gifts—the power of impartation. My friend with me predicted good things in the coming years for the young man, and I was of the same opinion. Further, I have on record what President Northrop and also what Dr. Richard Burton predicted concerning him, both of whose predictions came true.

predicted concerning him, both of whose predictions came true. Yes; his power of speech, courage, force of character, rugged individualism gave him an individuality all his own.

My friends, our friend's struggle with poverty as a lad, his career from the first hour he came to Minnesota, commencing with the task of caring for horses and cattle on the hills and in the valleys of Ortenville, that town that is on the horier line heaven South task of caring for horses and cattle on the hills and in the valleys of Ortonville, that town that is on the border line between South Dakota and Minnesota—"out where the West begins"—on up through the years, through graded school, high school, the higher seats of learning, soon after graduating from the University of Minnesota and a college of law; having his natural eyes forever darkened through total blindness; still onward until he reached one of the few highest seats in the Nation's Capitol, is as courageous, as challenging, and inspiring a biography as I know anything about in the annals of American history. Thousands upon thousands who struggle for the honors which came to our friend, with every comfort and protection of parents, home life, affluence. with every comfort and protection of parents, home life, affluence, and other struggle-saving means, fall in the attempt, but Tom Schall, overcoming almost insurmountable difficulties, arrived. It is a living illustration of the quatrain:

"The heights of great men, reached and kept Were not attained by sudden flight; But they, while their companions slept, Were toiling onward thru the night."

THE SOUL OF TOM SCHALL

I knew the soul of Tom Schall. Far on into the night in the quiet of his own home we have discussed such profundities as God, the great Teacher of the soul, the gentle Nazarene, immortality, religion, and other kindred things. Sometimes political and also national problems were the topic of conversation, but I never talked with him but that religion was injected into the conversation. Tom Schall lived in a large universe and gave the Creator plenty of room to work His sovereign will. I never heard him criticize a man's religion in all the years I knew him. He permitted his fellow citizens to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. I found him well versed in comparative religion, particularly the religions now extant. He knew both the modern and the conservative interpretation of the great beatitudes of the Christ; but the fundamentals, love to God and to one's neighbor, were the great principles which actuated his life. He always endeavored to "live by the side of the road and be a friend to man." Lastly, time and again he has told me, as friend to friend, that from a youth up through the years he had always been inspired with the thought that God had called him to do a special work, and that was the secret of his success. Others to whom he had whispered the secret of his own soul have always told me that this thought of God being with him, he had admitted, was the secret of his success. Let us not wonder, then, that he fought like a crusader and died with his armor on. But he has gone from us! Gone—did I say?

"No; I cannot and I will not say

That he is deed

"No; I cannot and I will not say That he is dead.

He is just away!

With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand,

He has entered into that unknown land, He has entered into that unknown land, And left us dreaming, how very fair it Needs must be, since he lingers there. And you, O you, who the wildest yearn, For the old-time step and the glad return; Think of him, passing on as fair in the love Of there, as the love of here. Think of him still as the same, I say. He is not dead. He's just away."

-Riley.

To his beloved family, whom he loved so fondly that no language spoken could fathom its depths of meanings, if your loved one could but speak to you audibly here and now, in the language of another, I am sure that this is what he would say:

"Let there be no funeral gloom, my dears, Now that I am gone. No black raiment or graveyard grimness. Think of me as having withdrawn into the dimness, Think of me as having withdrawn into the dimness, Yours still, and you mine.

Think and remember only the sweetest of our love together, And, forgetting the rest, Where I wait, come thou gently on."

And now, in a very little while, after his own brethren of the Masonic fraternity have uttered their beautiful funeral ritual over their sacred dead, loving hands will take his silent form and bear it away to a sacred spot in this silent city where lie the wasted forms of so many of our kith and kin, and gently they will lay it down beneath the white drifted snow, forever out of human sight. Of that quiet moment and place, let me offer this prayer:

'Warm summer sun, shine brightly there,
Warm summer wind, blow gently there;
Green sward above, lie light, lie light,
Good night, my friend! Good night! Good night!"

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to speak in memory of the late Senator of my State of Minnesota, Senator Thomas David Schall. Senator Schall, having been born in Michigan, was not a native of Minnesota. but much of what he came to be was a product of that State and a symbol of a rugged period in its history.

Life to Senator Schall was a fight. He fought deprivation and obstacles as a boy. He fought for and won the opportunity of an education. He stuck to his course when others around him were dropping out for the then greater attractions of that young man's country, and at the age of 27 was admitted to practice law before the courts of his State. And later, at the age of 30, with all of the major obstacles safely hurdled-or so he thought-he suddenly confronted an even greater hurdle-blindness. Then began his greatest fight, a fight that led him to the highest political gift to be had in the State; a fight that continued unceasingly through a stormy political career and that did not end until life itself had ended.

Senator SCHALL, during those early years of struggle, had seen sights and dreamed dreams that were to his liking. This vision he continued to see. It was a vision of a golden age of opportunity. Minnesota was growing up and was enjoying the advantages of realistic maturity with the still keen enthusiasm of youth. Truly was it a golden age-golden grain moving in mile-long trainload after mile-long trainload into his Mill City of Minneapolis, millions of tubs of golden butter rolling through to the far centers of civilization, and in return for all of this a golden stream of financial aid for the building of a western empire. What matter that much of this was due to be changed? Senator Schall had seen it; he foresaw it as returning in the good old way; he continued to keep and to nurse and to fight for his vision.

It was not easy for Senator Schall to accept the changes of this changing age. In fact, acceptance of some of them was to him impossible. But to disapprove was not to be disinterested. Few men on either side of the Congress ever took keener interest in the proceedings, and no Member was ever more alert to the individual requests of his constituents. He fought for his friends and against those who opposed him. He fought with utmost courage and with utter disregard for the consequences of the bitterness of his attack.

Senator SCHALL has passed on, and with him has gone much that was symbolic of a picturesque period in the political progress of his State.

Minnesota and the Nation have lost a colorful and vigorous

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, Thomas David Schall, a Representative and Senator from Minnesota, was born in Reed City, Osceola County, Mich., June 4, 1878; moved with his mother to Campbell, Minn., in 1884; attended the common schools of Wheaton, Ortonville High School, and Hamline University, St. Paul; was graduated from the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis in 1902 and from the St. Paul College of Law in 1904; was admitted to the bar in 1904 and commenced practice in Minneapolis. He lost his sight in 1907, but continued the practice of his profession. He was elected as a Republican to the Sixty-fourth and to the succeeding four Congresses, March 4, 1915, to March 4, 1925. He was not a candidate for renomination, having become a candidate for election to the United States Senate. He was elected as a Republican to the United States Senate in 1924 and 1930 for two terms, commencing March 4, 1925, and ending January 3, 1937.

This is an impressive list of political victories won by a man who began as a youth without wealth or position. The road was not always easy. He met defeat in the primaries in 1910, when he ran as a Republican for the legislature, and was defeated for Congress in the Fifth District when he ran as a Progressive in 1912. He also met defeat in the primary of the special election for United States Senate in 1923. These defeats did not stop him. He filed again for the United States Senate in the regular election in 1924. This time he won the Republican nomination by a close vote and won the election by another close vote in the fall.

I first remember Tom Schall as a student at Hamline University. I was then at Carleton College, Northfield, Minn. The first time I ever saw him was when he stepped on the platform of the Congregational Church at Northfield in the State oratorical contest in 1897. Tom was then a freshman at Hamline University, and he won the State oratorical contest hands down, a feat which to my knowledge has never been duplicated by any other student in the State of Minnesota. Most winners are glad to make that high position in oratory as juniors or seniors.

He later won great renown in debate and oratory at the University of Minnesota, where he won the Pillsbury prize and competed in the Northern Oratorical League contests. This gift of speech served him well during his political campaigns. Generally he battled against the forces in power. Through campaign speeches and meeting the people in every town and crossroad, once elected he proved invincible in Minnesota.

Let it be said for SCHALL that he usually had the opposition of the great press of the State. Very few papers supported him. He announced his creed, "the Thomas Schall creed", and based his campaign upon this program. His campaigns were always hard fought; his enemies struck at him viciously, and he quadrupled the blows in return.

Not Heaven itself upon the past has power, But what has been, has been, and I have had my hour.

A sight that will long linger in the minds of Minnesotans is of a street corner near the center of some village with Tom Schall talking from the back of an automobile or out in the country talking from some picnic platform. There he was thoroughly at home and delivered long political speeches which dealt with the situation from the Schall viewpoint.

I did not belong to his political party. I often differed with his views on some very important questions, but I must say for Schall that he was never afraid of any man, anywhere, at any time. He fought for his rights, according to the political education of the group with which he associated. He inspired sincere loyalty on the part of his closest followers, who were generally poor and without means of political contribution. This is especially true of the primary campaigns. In the fall election, with a few notable exceptions, he had the support of the regular Republican organization.

A man who served more than 20 years in the American Congress—10 in the House of Representatives and more than 10 in the Senate—leaves his mark upon the history of his time. Serving upon important committees, and occasionally blazing forth in strong and vivid language, he captured the imagination of his State. He was a commanding figure and became the center of every group into which he entered. His untimely death, in the very prime of life, when he was girding himself for a new battle, leaves the State of Minnesota stunned with the sorrow that one of its leaders has passed on.

Envy and calumny and hate and pain, And that unrest which men miscall delight, Can touch him not and torture not again.

A large group of friends and fellow citizens of Tom Schall attended services at Lakewood, December 26, 1935. It was a bitterly cold day. The large chapel was too small for those who wished to attend and many waited in the cold outside. The Reverend Charles Fox Davis delivered the address, one of the most touching and eloquent I have ever heard, and I ask you to read his remarks as reprinted in the permanent Record of Congress, by Congressman William A. Pittenger, on April 21, 1936.

It may be claimed for and said of him;
He was a large figure in the life of the Nation;
He occupied commanding positions in the Congress;
He left a deep and lasting impress on his day and generation.

Tom Schall selected his ladder and he climbed to the very top.

HON. CAP R. CARDEN

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, in the death of Hon. CAP R. CARDEN the Nation has lost an honest, faithful, and capable public servant; his family a loving and devoted husband and father; and his colleagues a loyal, companionable friend.

Mr. Carden was born in Hart County, Ky., on December 17, 1866, the son of William P. and Frances M. Carden. He began the practice of law at Munfordville, in Hart County, Ky., in 1895. He served a term as sheriff and a term as county attorney of his county, and also served as master commissioner of the circuit court of Hart County for many years. He organized the Munfordville Bridge Co., which constructed a bridge over the Green River at that place. The bridge has since been taken over by the State of Kentucky and is now part of a national highway. He was an active promoter of the Mammoth Cave National Park and took great interest in that project. He was elected to the Seventy-second Congress from the Fourth District, to the Seventy-third Congress from the State at large, and to the Seventy-fourth Congress again from the Fourth District.

Throughout his congressional career he served upon the Committee on Agriculture. His district was almost entirely an agricultural district and he was deeply interested in the subject which meant so much for the happiness and prosperity of his people. He knew from experience the hardships and the ceaseless toil of the farmer. His constant desire was to help him to make his lot more pleasant.

During the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress Mr. Carden was taken ill while in Washington. He was removed to his home in Kentucky, where he departed this life on June 13, 1935.

The fine qualities of Mr. Carden's mind and heart were recognized by the many friends he made among his colleagues. Cap Carden was a plain man of the people. He knew their hopes and their aspirations. He thought as they did. His love for his people and his home was not vocal but was deep-seated and constant. While he had a sincere and enthusiastic desire to serve his people, and the consciousness of the service he was rendering them gave him a deep sense of satisfaction and pleasure, the glamour of Congress appealed to him very little, for his heart was always in the hills of Kentucky among the people he loved and who loved him.

CAP CARDEN was a sincere and genuine man. Hypocrisy and false pretense had no place in his character. He was a keen and farseeing businessman, as his success in the little town which was his home during his entire life of almost threescore years and ten well attests. To his intimate acquaintances CAP CARDEN never appeared as one who had almost lived his allotted span or who had arrived at the place in life where the shadows are cast to the eastward. His cheery disposition, his enjoyment of life, his kindliness made one regard him as still among the young.

It was my good fortune to take a trip to Hawaii with Mr. Carden a few years ago. While he never intruded or forced himself on others or apparently sought new acquaintances, it was not long before many of his fellow voyagers were calling him by his given name, and his companionship and presence were always sought in the jolly parties on the boat.

He had a deep-seated and abiding love for his home and his family, and his ambition was to enjoy his declining years in the quiet of his country home among his family and friends. He had announced he would not again be a candidate for Congress. His service here will be missed; others may take his place, the work he performed will go on, but the void this kindly, gentle, faithful man left in the hearts of those who knew him cannot be filled.

CAP CARDEN exemplified by his life the soundness of the philosophy that before you can receive you must give; that you can only get out of life what you put into it. Mr. Carden gave to the country his self-sacrificing service and his absolute loyalty; to his family, his unbounded devotion; and to his friends, his sincere friendship; and he received from his family and friends what he gave. The qualities of loyalty, friendship, and kindliness which he possessed can never die. CAP CARDEN made the world happier and better for having been here. I am sure that somewhere over yonder where the ties of friendship are never broken we shall meet him again.

The works of divine Providence are hard to fathom. God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform. Why Cap Carden should have been stricken while in robust health and taken from his field of usefulness, his devoted family, and his many friends when he apparently had many years of useful, happy life before him, we do not know, but we must bow in submission to the Divine will.

The moving finger writes; and, having writ, Moves on: nor all your piety nor wit Shall lure it back to cancel half a line, Nor all your tears wash out a word of it.

It may truthfully be said of Mr. CARDEN-

His life was gentle, and the elements So mix'd in him that Nature might stand up, And say to all the world "This was a man!"

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of paying | appropriate tribute to the life and character of my late colleague, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, the Honorable Cap R. Carden, with whom I have had the honor to serve in this august body. He, with others of our colleagues, has answered the final call of the roll and has shuffled off the mortal coil and laid down to pleasant dreams. To know him was to love and respect him. He was born and grew up on a farm and at an early period in his young manhood showed such aptitude in the study of his chosen profession of the law that he was early admitted to practice in the courts of his native State.

By habits of diligence, industry, and close application to the study of his profession he soon became a leader of the bar of his State, and as such accumulated a comfortable estate, which by shrewd methods of investment and habits of thrift and frugality at the time of his untimely death amounted to a confortable fortune. He was not only a successful lawyer and businessman of ability, but was likewise a profound student of the science of government and a faithful and fearless defender of the faith of the founders of the Republic. He was steadfast and unfailing in his loyalty and devotion to principle. Politically he was a Democrat, but never a partisan and ever a friend to all. From the early spring of youth through the ripening years of mature manhood he struggled and toiled for the things in which he believed and yet never rejoiced in the fall of even the most bitter antagonist. He was a man of deep and abiding conviction, of undaunted courage, and had uniform respect for the rights of others. He was a friend to man and loved to respect and recognize the liberty of the individual citizen. To disagree with his colleagues in their views upon public questions, which he often did, never carried in his heart and mind any lack of regard or respect for the views of others.

I believe it was Voltaire who, upon a historic occasion, once said of an opponent, "I wholly disapprove of what you say, but will defend to the death your right to say it", and to me, that, in a few words, symbolizes the whole career of the late CAP R. CARDEN, when dealing with those who opposed him in debate anywhere, everywhere, and all the time. He first came to this House in 1930, when dark clouds of depression hung heavily over the land, and yet he never, in all the dark days and distressing months and years that followed, lost faith in the virtue and ultimate triumph of his country. The years of his service here were times that demanded leadership of brave men, and he was at all times equal to the occasion and always measured up to the full stature of noble manhood. He was an optimist whose vision enabled him to see through the darkest clouds and behold the sunshine beyond. Finally, destiny decreed that he should pass, and wrapping the drapery of his couch around him, he laid down to pleasant dreams.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker, on the 13th day of June, 1935, death took from this House Cap R. Carden, who was serving his fifth year in Congress from the Fourth District of Kentucky, the district of Abraham Lincoln and Gen. Simon Bolivar Buckner. I had known him since I was a boy.

His life was one of broad and varied experience. A lawyer, banker, farmer, and public official—he was successful in all. He was retiring, modest, and never sought publicity or display of his talents; but he was a sound thinker, a safe, conservative businessman, and a man with the kind of well-balanced judgment which made him a valuable member of this body.

He voted at all times in accordance with his judgment and never catered to fads or wild schemes often proposed in this body. He was democratic in the extreme and met all men on terms of equality.

He had purchased the beautiful old homestead and farm of the former Governor of Kentucky and Confederate General, Simon Bolivar Buckner, a short distance away from the town of Munfordville, near the beautiful Green River, with its quiet, picturesque hills, such as abound only in Kentucky. He often expressed himself as intending to retire in that ideal retreat where nature smiles benevolently and broadly on the Glen Lily Farm in the Green River Valley.

So long a familiar figure in the business life of his community and at the courthouse in his home town, it is difficult to imagine that there has departed from their midst this substantial, quiet, able, genial, typical Kentuckian, CAP R.

HON. CHARLES VILAS TRUAX

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, we are gathered here today in this historic Chamber to pay brief tribute to the memory of our colleagues who have fallen by the way during the past year. This is indeed a beautiful custom which I trust will never be abandoned. When I first came to Congress 30 years ago these memorial services were held at frequent intervals on the Sabbath day. Just why and when that custom was changed I do not know, but it occurs to me that there was more solemnity, more sacredness, more heart and feeling in the service in the old days in the old way, but possibly since I am no longer young it is not easy for me to tune myself to present-day ways and customs. I am happy, however, to be living in this modernistic age even though my love for the little red schoolhouse and the horse-and-buggy days will never quite disappear or be supplanted.

To serve as a Member of Congress is an honor and distinction which relatively few are permitted to enjoy. Those of us who are thus honored owe it to ourselves, to our constituents, and to our great Nation not only to live circumspectly but to discharge our duties honestly, faithfully, and intelligently; supporting the Constitution upon which our great Government rests to the best of our ability and understanding so that when on an occasion like the one which brings us together this afternoon-and it will come to allfinal tribute may be truthfully and henestly paid to our memory, which will bring pride to the hearts of our friends and loved ones. An untarnished escutcheon, a well-spent and useful life, and an honorable name are the best heritage we can leave to our loved ones and friends who have so signally honored us.

And may I here pay what I consider a deserving and honest tribute not only to the ones whose memories are freshest in our minds today but to all who have served or now serve in both House and Senate during the past 30 years, which includes the period of my acquaintance and service in Congress. During the span of three decades I have known possibly 2,000 Members who have come and gone; many men of many minds, but all actuated, I am sure, by high and patriotic purpose. I have not known all intimately and well, but sufficiently so that I feel warranted in making this broad, blanket statement, that nowhere can a higher type of citizenship be found in this or any other Nation than the chosen Representatives of the people who have here served and yet serve here.

I will grant, regrettably, a few instances have been manifest where the weakness of the flesh and possibly the intellect predominated. But easily 99 percent of that large number reflected only honor and credit upon themselves and their constituencies. And so my colleagues I repeat that it is an honor and distinction to serve as a representative of the 130,000,000 people of our great Nation. And may I here say that I sincerely believe nothing that I may pass on to those nearest and dearest to me will equal the knowledge that I was a humble Representative of the American people for many years, and that I strived as best I knew to honestly and faithfully discharge my duties here.

Mr. Speaker, I had some acquaintance with the two Senators and the five Representatives in whose honor we are assembled. They were all human, but I am sure had honest intent to discharge their duties as best they could with the light given them. I wish, however, to briefly pay especial tribute to my colleague, the Hon. CHARLES V. TRUAX, Representative at Large, from my State, Ohio. I had known him and of him casually for several years, but not until the campaign of 2 years ago, when our contacts were frequent, did there after his term expired and spend his remaining days I my acquaintance become intimate and personal, which with and good will.

Congressman Truax served as director of agriculture of Ohio for 6 years, during the three terms of Gov. Vic Dona-HEY. He was active and prominent in all farm organizations. He was a friend and champion of the farmer and agricultural interests, as well as of the soldier and the common people, whom God must have loved best else he would not have made so many of them. He was nominated for United States Senator in 1928, and while he received more than 300,000 more votes than the head of the State ticket he was defeated in the Hoover landslide. He was nominated for Congressman at Large in 1932, defeating a field of 11 candidates, and elected to the Seventy-third Congress. He was reelected to the present Congress in 1934, and doubtless had he more carefully conserved his health and physical resources-the failure of which brought the untimely close of his brilliant career-he would have continued here indefinitely without much doubt as the exponent and defender of equal justice and the rights of all the people.

We have all seen his striking and stalwart figure on many occasions pace back and forth in this Well like an infuriated animal at bay, denouncing in loud stentorian tones the things he believed vicious and bad. No more outspoken and courageous Representative ever served here than Charles V. TRUAX. He was a valiant warrior for the rights of the common people as he saw them, and an unconquered and unsubdued foe of corporate and corrupt interests. Ofttimes, perhaps, you could not agree, but I know you gave him credit for honesty and sincerity. He was an advocate to be courted, a foe to fear, but when the storm passed, the battle fought, he was as gentle, as kind, and as gracious as a sweet and lovely woman. No one doubted his courage, his honesty, his sincerity. He was gifted by nature as an orator. His fluent tongue, his strong, resounding voice, his fertile brain, each is stilled; but the memory of his many fine traits of character, his battle for the rights of the people, and his achievements will not soon be forgotten by those who knew and admired him. After life's fitful fever I am sure Charles V. TRUAX sleeps well.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, on this memorial-day occasion I desire to pay tribute to Hon. CHARLES V. TRUAX, late Representative at Large from my State of Ohio. He was my distinguished colleague, neighbor, and friend.

Mr. TRUAX was a resident of Wyandot County in the congressional district which I have the honor to represent. We were closely associated in Congress. In many respects our interests in legislation paralleled through the years we served in this body.

CHARLES V. TRUAX championed the cause of the common people. In this he was earnest, sincere, and courageous.

He was one of the most picturesque and striking figures in the House of Representatives, where he often gave expression to his pride in being a son of the soil and a true dirt farmer.

Few men knew the needs of the farmers of our State as did Mr. Truax and few worked so earnestly and determinedly in sponsoring their welfare. Born and reared on an Ohio farm near Sycamore and educated in the rural schools, Mr. TRUAX rose to his place of distinction in State and National politics through ability and hard work.

He served our State as director of agriculture for a period of 7 years, beginning in 1923; chairman of his county committee; delegate to the national convention in 1924; nominated for United States Senator in 1928; and twice elected Congressman at Large from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX always truly represented the masses of the people as director of agriculture in the State of Ohio and as a Member of Congress.

He is credited with being one of the best State-fair managers Ohio has ever known. One of his greatest achievements as director of agriculture was his successful management of big Ohio State fairs for a period of 6 years.

It was my privilege to know him for many years. I am service in this body with him ripened into friendship, respect, | of the underprivileged, in whose behalf he gave unstintingly of his time, energy, and ability.

He was an indefatigable worker both in and out of Congress. His courageous service in the House and his honesty and sincerity of purpose are well and favorably known.

Citizens of Ohio have suffered the loss of one of their most useful legislators. The passing of my colleague takes from the State of Ohio and the Nation one of its outstanding political leaders and most distinguished citizens. His record of public service and his efforts to serve humanity, according to his understanding and convictions, will ever serve as an inspiration for those who follow.

CHARLES V. TRUAX was one of the most useful Members of the United States Congress. It is a tragedy that a man so young, so brilliant, and so much needed in the Halls of Congress should be taken away at the height of his usefulness and power.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, one of the finest and most progressive Congressmen I have ever known was Charles V. TRUAX, of Bucyrus, Ohio. Whenever the people needed a champion on the floor of the House of Representatives his voice came ringing through the Halls of Congress. He invariably voted with the people on issues between human rights and property rights.

The day Congressman Truax passed from this life we had a meeting of the Labor Committee in room 429 of the Old House Office Building. When we left the committee room TRUAX and I walked down the fourth floor lobby, took the elevator down to the street floor, walked across the street, and into the New House Office Building, to our office room, 1022. He stepped into our office, greeted the people there, looked out upon the courtyard and fountain, exchanged some friendly remarks, and left our office and the building forever. Within a few hours from that moment he went to meet his Maker.

I remember distinctly the debate on social-security legislation when the Lundeen bill (H. R. 2827) was before the House after being reported favorably by the Committee on Labor. The able chairman of that committee, the Honorable WIL-LIAM P. CONNERY, had just spoken in favor of the bill, and others had championed social-security legislation along these lines, when up rose CHARLIE TRUAX, thundering:

There is only one thing that I see wrong with this bill. The gentleman from Minnesota in his bill proposes to tax inheritances, gifts, and all annual incomes of individuals and corporations in excess of $5,000 per year. This provision of the bill, in my judgment, does not go far enough. We ought to tap right now, once and for all time, every fortune in this country of ours of $1,000,000

And so it was, in battle after battle, whether it was the soldiers' bonus, the Frazier-Lemke bill, or farmers' or labor legislation, Charles Truax was always to the front fighting for the people, girded in the armor of righteousness, and a host in himself in every battle. I have never known a man since the days of James R. Mann, minority leader of the House during the war days, who had intimate knowledge of so many individual bills. He was an incessant worker. Long hours, insufficient exercise, and intensive application to congressional duties contributed to his death. He literally died for the people of Ohio and America in the battle for human rights against property rights.

CHARLES V. TRUAX was born on a farm and educated in country and public schools. He was a farmer, specializing in purebred Duroc Jersey hogs. He sold hogs to breeders in every State in the Union, in Canada, South America, Australia, and Japan. He was editor of the Swine World, published in Chicago, 1916 to 1921. He visited all hog-raising States as field representative and auctioneer.

He was coorganizer of the first National Swine Show at Omaha, Nebr., in 1917. He was director of agriculture for the State of Ohio 1923 to 1929. He was a delegate and the personal representative of the Governor of Ohio to the National Wheat Conference in Chicago in 1923 and to the National Agricultural Conference in Des Moines, Iowa, in 1926. familiar with the outstanding record he made for the cause | He was coorganizer with George N. Peek and vice chairman of the Committee of Twenty-two which sponsored the Mc-Nary-Haugen bills of 1926 and 1927.

He was chairman of the Democratic executive and central committees of Wyandot County 1920 to 1924. He was elected member and vice chairman of the Democratic State central committee in 1922, and was a delegate and secretary of the Ohio delegation to the Democratic national convention in New York in 1924. He acted as reading clerk in that convention. He called the roll on the one hundred and third ballot that nominated John W. Davis for President.

In the Democratic primaries of 1928 Truax was nominated for United States Senator, defeating a field of four opponents, including Gov. George White. He received 300,000 more votes than the head of the ticket in the general election. He was defeated by Dr. Simeon D. Fess, Republican, in the fall of

In 1932 he was nominated for Congressman at Large, receiving the highest vote in a field of 11 candidates. He was elected at large to the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth

CHARLES TRUAX was a member of the Knights Templar Consistory, the Shriners, Elks, and the Farmers' National Union. He was married and had three children-Dorothea, John, and Charles, Jr.

Those who are left to mourn him, the members of his family, his children, and friends, have every right to be proud of the memory of Charlie Truax, fighting Congressman from the great State of Ohio. Congressman Truax was elected at large in 1932 by 1,206,631 votes, having a majority of 98,070 over his nearest opponent. He was reelected in 1934. I cite these figures to show that his position was overwhelmingly approved by the great State of Ohio, which he so ably represented on the floor of Congress. He was a warrior for the right. Like Saul of old, he could hang his shield upon the wall and truly say, "I have fought a good fight; I have kept the faith." The last words he spoke on the floor of the House of Representatives, August 9, 1935, were a plea for the farmer of Ohio and America:

Does not the gentleman believe that it does not make any difference how high the price of hogs or how high the price of cattle, when a particular farmer loses his farm he is out for the balance of his life? There are a half million going to lose their farms because of the failure of this Congress to enact the Frazier-Lemke law. (Congressional Record, p. 12819, Aug. 9, 1935.)

He was a man of the soil, born on a farm, and loyal to that great element of American population—the American farmer and the American farm family. Always he had the best interests of the Ohio and American farmer in mind.

Sometimes when TRUAX spoke the House roared its disapproval. His were minority views. He spoke his mind unafraid, braving the ridicule that often fell upon his head. Those who disagreed with his political views pay high tribute to his zealous battle for justice as he saw it. In my mind he was always on the right side, whether or not to be right was easy or popular at the time. To the last he was undaunted by jeers and jest of friend or foe.

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide, In the strife of truth, with falsehood, for the good or evil side: Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight, Parts the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right,

And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light.

Then to side with truth is noble when we share her wretched crust, Ere her cause bring fame and profit, and 't is prosperous to be just; Then it is the brave man chooses, while the coward stands aside, Doubting in his abject spirit, till his Lord is crucified. And the multitude make virtue of the faith they had denied. Count me o'er earth's chosen heroes—they were souls that stood

While the men they agonized for hurled the contumelious stone, Stood serene, and down the future saw the golden beam incline To the side of perfect justice, mastered by their faith divine, By one man's plain truth to manhood and to God's supreme design.

For humanity sweeps onward: where today the martyr stands, On the morrow crouches Judas with the silver in his hands; Far in front the cross stands ready and the crackling fagots burn, While the hooting mob of yesterday in silent awe return To glean up the scattered ashes into history's golden urn.

HON, HENRY M. KIMBALL

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I arise on this occasion to pay my tribute of love, honor, and respect to the life, character, and memory of our late colleague HENRY M. KIMBALL.

My acquaintance with Mr. KIMBALL was coextensive with his entering this body. When he came to Washington in the beginning of the Seventy-fourth Congress we lived at the same hotel; and our contacts, therefore, were more intimate than the professional contacts necessitated by our congressional work.

Mr. Kimball was a retiring man, modest to a degree, but behind this apparent reticence there was a most friendly personality. He was in no sense a showman. He was genuine and real in every way. He abhorred the superficial, and judged people for their true worth and not for what they feigned to be.

He was mindful of the responsibilities which membership in this body carries with it. His service was of too short a duration to make it possible for all of us to measure his true value as a legislator. He took his duties in this body seriously. He was a tireless worker, and familiarized himself with each piece of legislation coming before the Congress. His votes were always based upon logic, common sense, and an understanding of what he was doing. While his chief concern was for the common people, as we are want to call them in these days, yet he had little tolerance for those who would agitate class hatred. He believed in the honesty, sincerity, and patriotism of all of our people, and proof alone was necessary before he would condemn.

He often told me, that in his view, a new Member of Congress could best serve his people by doing all things well and by his conduct meriting the confidence and respect of his colleagues. Those who have been in this body for any length of time will well understand that this course of conduct would have made him a power in the days that were to come.

To know HENRY M. KIMBALL was to respect him. He was well prepared for public service; a Christian gentleman with a fine education, a splendid lawyer, with a realization of the obligations of a member of the bar to the public and especially to our Government. Careful reading of good literature made him an entertaining and an interesting conversationalist. He stood well with his fellow men, and in his passing we lose a true friend, a distinguished colleague, and his place will be hard to fill. The memory of this splendid man will linger with us long.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, last fall we were all shocked to hear of the sudden and untimely passing of one of our colleagues, the Honorable Henry M. Kimball, of Kalamazoo, Mich. I take this opportunity to pay tribute to his memory.

Although his death came much too soon, Mr. KIMBALL enjoyed a full and active life. He possessed in his fine character and good sense of humor, those qualities which go to make friends everywhere.

A graduate of the University of Michigan, Mr. KIMBALL was actively engaged in the practice of law for 27 years, 17 of these years having been spent in active practice in Kalamazoo. When he was elected to the Seventy-fourth Congress it was the first time he had ever held a public office. However, he was well known and highly regarded in his home city and district, and the people never hesitated to place their trust in him.

Although I had the pleasure of serving with Mr. Kimball but one session of the Congress, I had come to know and respect him as a man of high principles and ideals, one who always followed what he considered to be the path of truth and wisdom. He served his State and his district loyally and with distinction. When the welfare of his people was at stake, partisanship was unknown to him. His primary purpose was to serve his country and his people.

Mr. Kimball, in the short time he served, had won for himself a place of distinction with his colleagues. State of Michigan has lost a splendid citizen and the Nation an able counselor and legislator.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to the memory of my late colleague and fellow member from Michigan the Honorable HENRY M. KIMBALL. His untimely death at the beginning of his service to the public is deplorable.

HENRY M. KIMBALL was born at Orland, Ind., on August 27, 1878. He received his education at Orland, Ind., High School, Hillsdale College, and the University of Michigan Literary and Law Departments. He practiced law for 27 years, the last 17 of which were spent in Kalamazoo, Mich.

I had no personal acquaintance with Mr. KIMBALL until he came to Washington as the Representative of the Third District of Michigan, and am therefore unable to speak of his early life or his accomplishments in business. However, his reputation as an able and capable lawyer extended throughout the State of Michigan.

My association with Mr. KIMBALL here in Congress, although all too brief, was long enough to develop a strong and affectionate friendship for him. He was a man of character, integrity, and ability and he inspired confidence and esteem. I was always deeply impressed by his exceptional devotion to duty and his apparent independence of thought and action. While a loyal partisan member of his party, he followed its leadership only when it was his conviction that to so do was the right and just thing for the best interests of his district, his State, and his country.

Mr. MAIN. Mr. Speaker, a few years ago the Honorable R. A. Nestos, then Governor of the State of North Dakota, was a guest at the Battle Creek Sanitarium. A splendid speaker, generous with his time and talent, he addressed a number of Battle Creek audiences. On one occasion he told a story which has remained embedded in my memory.

Norway, the native home of ex-Governor Nestos, is a land of rugged hills and valleys. The story is that of a young Norwegian who was minded to go out into the mountains to hunt for wild game. As he proceeded into the recesses of the mountains along one of the many valleys, a heavy mist enshrouded him, but he went forward. Presently, confused by the fog and deprived of his normal sense of proportion, he thought he discovered the outlines of a wild beast coming toward him down the mountain side. He raised his gun and was about to fire at this strange figure when the mist suddenly lifted and the young Norwegian discovered that the object which he had taken for a beast of the mountains was, in fact, the figure of one of his brothers carrying on his back another brother who had met with an accident on the hillside.

Prior to the advent of Mr. KIMBALL into the realm of national politics I had known him only as one attorney knows another in a neighboring county seat. We had enjoyed some professional contacts, but I had not had the opportunity of forming a real estimate of the worth and temper of the late Congressman. My viewpoint was obscured in the fog of legal precedent and the formality of the court-

In the primary campaign preceding the nomination of Mr. KIMBALL for the office of Representative of the Third Congressional District I was affiliated with the campaign of his leading opponent. I am glad to say that in the usual smoke screen of political maneuvering I did not aim any barrage of unkind language or personal criticism at Mr. KIMBALL. After his nomination and the smoke of the primary contest had cleared away, I was surprised and delighted to discover that Mr. Kimball was in a very real sense a brother of mine, a member of the same national fraternity and of the same chapter of Delta Tau Delta. He had preceded me some years in attendance at Hillsdale College, and prior to his nomination I had not learned of our mutual fraternal relations. This discovery naturally served to deepen the esteem and regard in which I held the late Congressman from the Third District of Michigan.

He was a genial gentleman, with mind and temperament well adapted to intellectual refinements and legal distinctions. He was an ardent and able advocate in defense of our Federal Constitution. To know Mr. KIMBALL was to admire him, and to associate with him, even though on the opposite side of a lawsuit, was to respect him. The Third Congressional District lost an able Representative in the passing of Mr. Kimball. The Nation has lost an unselfish public servant. Mrs. Kimball has lost a most estimable, husband. The daughter has lost a splendid father. His many friends have lost a genial comrade. It will be long before the substantial qualities in the character of HENRY M. KIMBALL grow dim in the memory of those who remain to mourn his loss. And never will his unique place in society and public esteem be filled in the same full measure that was so admirably achieved by this gentleman of sterling worth and charming personality.

My hat is off, and I bow in respect and tribute to the name and memory of my distinguished predecessor, my brother in Delta Tau Delta, the Honorable HENRY M. KIMBALL, late of Kalamazoo and the Third Congressional District of Michigan. May his untimely initiation into that greater fraternity, existing beyond the grave, serve to fix more clearly in our minds the ideals and sympathies of a brotherhood-universal in its scope, wide in its charity and affection.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include the following address of Marvin J. Schaberg, president of the Kalamazoo (Mich.) Bar Association, at the funeral of the late Representative HENRY M. KIMBALL at Kalamazoo, Mich.:

It has been wisely said, "There are certain fundamental truths which are the crystallized wisdom of the ages founded on centuries of experience with what is good and bad for the human race." These truths form the foundation and groundwork for those rules of action and human conduct which constitute that great social institution which we call "the law", and the application of these principles to the benefit of society depends in no small degree on the extent to which these virtues are exemplified in the lives of those who practice law as a profession.

The life whose memory we honor here today was dedicated to the law a little over a third of a century ago when he began his studies in a class in our great university, of which it was my own good fortune to be a member. From that association and fellowship of years together at the same bar there developed a real appreciation of his manly character and a friendship which has been very dear. It has been wisely said, "There are certain fundamental truths en very dear.

HENRY KIMBALL embodied all that is fine and good in a lawyer. He did not consider his admission to the bar a mere license to obtain a livelihood nor as a means of selfish attainment. He chose his profession, in response to an innermost desire, because he saw and found in it a means of expression of those deeper and noble aspirations of the human soul—a craving to give to his fellow man freely and fully of that which he felt in his own heart he was best freely and fully of that which he felt in his own heart he was best able to give and the law was the vehicle by which he sought to convey those desires. In his dealings with the courts, with his fellow lawyers, and his clients there was always noticeable that deep regard for justice in its full and complete meaning and that pervasive touch of deep responsibility. There was nothing feigned about his purpose. He possessed the confidence of careful preparation and a knowledge of the law and the facts, powerful weapons which he handled with an artful dignity which commanded the highest respect. highest respect.

In all of his professional contacts there was always noticeable a In all of his professional contacts there was always noticeable a beauty of kindliness, a fragrance of graciousness, the sunlight of gentility and courtesy, yet withal a subtle strength of purpose and determination that won for him an abiding friendship deep in the hearts of his brothers at the bar; and we all join in the sentiment that to him can well and justly be applied—that noble tribute paid long, long ago by one noble soldier to another as the final decree had been rendered, from which there is no appeal: "His life was gentle, and the elements so mixed in him that Nature might stand up, and say to all the world, "This was a man!"

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege at the beginning of the Seventy-fourth Congress to make the acquaintance of our departed colleague, HENRY M. KIMBALL, of the Third District of Michigan.

This acquaintance quickly deepened into a sincere friendship, based upon his splendid qualities and abilities.

Congressman Kimball was a man ideally fitted for the duties and responsibilities of congressional life. He had a splendid educational background, was a fine lawyer, highly respected by both bench and bar, with an especially high concept of the duties of a legal practitioner.

He was a firm believer in the principles of America, a lover of her Constitution, and would have sacrificed his life, if need be, for his country's welfare.

In the short time that Representative KIMBALL served in Congress he made many friendships, and both sides of the House were impressed by his lofty concepts of citizenship, his pleasing personality, and his friendly smile.

Tennyson, in a beautiful poem, said:

And the stately ships go on To their haven under the hill; But O for the touch of a vanished hand, And the sound of a voice that is still!

While our departed colleague has gone to his eternal reward, yet his memory will live on in the minds and hearts of the many men and women whom he loved and served.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include the following address delivered by me at the memorial services held for the late Representative HENRY M. KIMBALL at his home in Kalamazoo, Mich .:

HENRY M. KIMBALL took his seat as a Member of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States from the Third Congressional District of Michigan on the 3d day of January last with the hope and confidence on the part of his friends for a long and distinguished career for him in that body and with for a long and distinguished career for him in that body and with every reason on his part to look forward to many years of service there. He was stricken early in July after a service of only 6 months, and passed away at his home in Kalamazoo Saturday morning, October 19. His fidelity to his trust and to the commission with which the people of the Third Congressional District had entrusted him, causing him to ignore the warnings of his physician to take a rest from the active and exacting work of his office, undoubtedly becamed his death. hastened his death.

a rest from the active and exacting work of his office, undoubtedly hastened his death.

His service in the House of Representatives was short, but long enough to enable him to win the confidence and respect of all with whom he came in contact, and the deep and abiding friendship and affection of those who came to know him well. Quiet and unassuming in his manner, he possessed those qualities of heart and mind which give their possessor eventually a place of influence and leadership in the House of Representatives, as in other walks of life—ability, industry, and integrity.

The Third Congressional District of Michigan has had a long line of able and distinguished men represent it in the House of Representatives. My personal recollection of them goes back to the time when, as a boy in Olivet, I heard the Honorable Julius Caesar Burrows, who then represented the district, deliver one of those eloquent campaign speeches for which he was famous. Since I have been a Member of the House I have been more intimately acquainted with those who have represented the district. As a boy I knew John M. C. Smith. I was in college with Arthur B. Williams, and Joe Hooper and I were close friends. I first met Mr. Kimball after the election last year, when he came to Grand Rapids to talk with me about the work and life in Washington, but I soon found that he held the same high standards of public service and possessed the same high character and ability as his predecessors in office had possessed. He was a worthy successor of a worthy line of Representatives.

Mr. Kimball entered the House of Representatives well equipped by training and experience for public service. He was a student of a worthy line of Representatives.

Mr. Kimball entered the House of Representatives well equipped by training and experience for public service. He was a student of public questions and had a good grasp and understanding of them. He was a man of mature judgment, of high character and ability. As a Member of the House he was faithful in his attendance, followed legislation and the debates carefully, and was active and alert in the performance of his duties generally. He was attentive and sympathetic to the requests of his constituents, and active and energetic in looking after their interests individually and the interests of his district as a whole. He was a member of the standing legislative committees of the House on the Census, on the Civil Service, and on Flood Control. He performed all the duties of his office faithfully and well. In his death the Third Congressional District, the State, and the Nation have lost the services of an able, efficient, honest, patriotic, and loyal public servant. His usefulness and influence, if it had been his lot to continue in the House, would unquestionably have increased with the passing of the years.

the years.

In the language of a friend on a similar occasion:

"At the meridian of his powers our colleague and friend took his departure from fireside and forum. Why a thing like this should be we do not know; it belongs to the endless mysteries of life. But somehow we know that in the economy of the universe and the endless years it must be well. The voice of Christian faith must speak and give meaning to these fleeting days of life and take from death its blighting tragedy. Somewhere there must be a kingdom where life's deeper meanings are revealed, life's injustices corrected, life's inequalities leveled, life's incompleteness made whole. It must be so in a land of far horizons and cloudles" skies. Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face."

skies. Now we see through a glass darkly; but then, face to face."

As far as I am able to do so, I express the profound admiration and respect and the greatest affection of every member of the Michigan delegation in Congress, irrespective of party, as well as that of my own, for our departed friend and colleague, and extend to the members of his family, his devoted wife and daughter, our deepest expression. deepest sympathy.

HON, WESLEY LLOYD

Mr. SMITH of Washington, Mr. Speaker, when Wesley LLOYD was suddenly summoned away he left a real void in this House and I lost "for a while" a personal friend whom I had known intimately over 20 years. Our first contacts, which ripened into a lasting friendship, were made in the course of our careers as practicing lawyers in the State of Washington.

In more recent years, in 1932, we both came to Congress together and serve districts which adjoin each other, the district which he represented embracing Tacoma and Pierce County having formerly been a part of the Third District, which I now have the honor to represent in this body. Consequently, Wesley Lloyd and I had much in common, and each one of us was more or less familiar with the people, conditions, and problems of the district of the other and there existed between us a fine spirit of cooperation and unity of action in regard to many legislative matters vitally affecting the interests and citizens of our respective districts. I frequently sought his suggestions, counsel, and advice, which I valued highly and which he freely bestowed, and he often consulted me. I therefore miss his genial, thoughtful, kindly presence and companionship more than I can find words to express on this occasion.

Mr. Speaker, our departed colleague was an able, industrious, and conscientious Member of Congress who gained the respect and esteem of all those who came to know him. He served with distinction on the great Committee of the Judiciary, which is one of the truly important committees of this House, and the distinguished lawyers who sat with him there came to admire him for the fine analytical qualities of his keen legal mind and his marvelous gift of expression.

I desire to quote from an address delivered by Wesley LLOYD at the annual Lincoln's Day banquet of the Pierce County Bar Association at Tacoma on February 12, 1931. which will preserve for posterity in the permanent records of this Congress his exalted and noble concept of the profession of the law which he loved and which he served so faithfully and honorably and which lawyers here and everywhere would do wisely to heed and emulate.

The layman, uninitiated in the mysteries of the law, is apt to conclude that the lawyer is the slave and disciple of precedent. He is visualized as some strange and almost forgotten character from the stories of Dickens, who spends his time in dungeonlike libraries, searching among the musty archives for ancient writs that may enable him to rob the grave, or desecrate the tomb, to enrich the wicked payers of fees to the detriment of society and the righteous.

wicked payers of fees to the detriment of society and the righteous.

Time may have been when precedent was the book of books for the legal searcher after knowledge, but the busy lawyer of today must, indeed, be prepared to blaze new trails and chart unknown seas, and his reckoning must be compassed by the pole star of truth, else he will be lost in a wilderness where there is no lamp of human experience to guide him.

If, in the practice of law, you try to follow precedent, to seek some recorded case from out the past to define with a nicety the conduct of men and women of today and tomorrow, in an age when imagination is foreshadowed by reality come true, when fact has fallen swift upon the feet of fancy which wander into an unreal world of dreams, you are doomed to failure, penury, and woe.

If our conception of the law is founded upon no more sacred altar than on statutes that may be repealed tomorrow, or the edict or decree of a judge that may be swept aside by his successor; if we have not charted our course by the pole star of truth, then our craft is but a priesthood of pretense and our association but a convention of pettifoggers and bill collectors.

The real law that is and forever must be our guide—the star

The real law that is and forever must be our guide—the star that hangs immovable in the heavens; that ever flashes its cold and frosty gleam to beckon us on over the dreary wastes of an unexplored world—is justice. It is exemplified as right triumphant over wrong. Statutes may be enacted and repealed; majorities may over wrong. Statutes may be enacted and repealed; majorities may rule by right or might; kings may decree, and judges may interpret; but no rule, or law, or edict, or decree can long endure unless it be founded upon the sense of justice that lives eternal in every human heart—the same yesterday, today, tomorrow, and forever.

If I have the right concept of the true function of the lawyer in his relation to his fellow man, I would dub him the doctor of human conduct. His idea is right; his nurroses justice. From human conduct. His idea is right; his purpose justice. Even though legislators and chancellors may temporarily sweep away the superstructure of the law, the foundation upon which it stands remains secure.

Precedents are not the law, but only evidence of the law. The law is eternal. It reposes as securely in the unspoiled heart of the son of toil as in the breast of the chancellor in ermine. It is decreed as surely by the beggar at the gate as by the king on the throne. It lies as serenely in the mind of a little child as in the fertile brain of the mightiest conqueror whose footsteps ever shook the earth. It is justice, infallible and eternal. It was written in letters of fiame upon the tablets of Moses, amid the fiash of lightning and the crash of thunder upon Mount Sinai, and it is written in living fire in the hearts of men.

In living fire in the hearts of men.

But I would not argue that books of precedent are without value.

One cannot judge men unless he be able to know men. To know and weigh them in their relationships with each other, be able to understand their passions and longings, their weaknesses and follies, he must call upon not only his observations but the experiences of the past to guide him. He must know the stories of all men of all times, and when he calls to his aid the light that shines from out the past, no richer lore of human experience has ever existed than that contained in the recorded cases of the law.

When I look upon the rows and rows of leather-bound volumes.

When I look upon the rows and rows of leather-bound volumes, to me they are not of the dead past, but they breathe of life—as it was, as it is, and as it ever will be. They are not as the books of science. They are not mere compendia of information, of rule of thumb and calculation; nor even announcements of guiding rules, except insofar as every story of men and women is a guide to those who may come after them. Yellow and seared with age; musty and dusty and withered by decay and decrepitude; some badly printed, with the edges of the pages brittled by the passage of many years and the thumbings of many hands that are long since folded, they still sing stories of the living, throbbing world in which we live. As I read them, I look beyond the terse encomiums of the great jurists of the silent past—great in their day, but whose very names have been forgotten, save by the plodding scrivener who digested their wisdom and in his turn passed on to such reward as might await him, solaced that he had not reaped more than his share thus far.

more than his share thus far.

I prefer to read the stories told of human beings like you and me; men and women, princes and paupers, the bully, and the cripple who crawled on broken limbs; the successful masters of their day, and the eternal misfits of life; of those who gave generously and received little in return; and of those who prospered in their wickedness, even as the green bay tree; of those who loved in the rosy sunlight of their dreams, and of those whose hatreds were as the poison from which men flee; master and man, haughty dame and scullery maid, the proud and the penitent, noble and haughty, boastful and begging, worthy and wanton, forceful and foolish, daring and devious, victorious and victimized; rich man, poor man, beggarman, thief; doctor, lawyer, merchant, chief; for one and all they have come or been brought into the temples of justice, told their stories, and been accorded their penalties or their rewards, good or bad, just or unjust, as human justice is fallible. In any event, their stories have been told, and a more or less complete record thereof speaks a history of the pulse beat of the average man and woman of all stations and conditions from the days of Blackstone to the present day. Those stories, quivering with life and human understanding, are written in those documents stored away in the vaults of Old Bailey and a thousand county courthouses—stories stranger than Arabian Nights, more wonderful than Gulliver's Travels, more veracious than the Bible upon which they are all attested, and thrilling as only the hopes and fears, and struggles and loves and hatreds, and joys and sorrows, and the anguished cries of human terror and distress and woe, can be thrilling.

anguished cries of human terror and control thrilling.

But if I can bring you a message that may serve in some small measure to make you better lawyers as well as better men, I would say that, valuable as may be the books of the law, they must never be defied or allowed to become a fetish. They are, as I have said, not the law, but only the inconclusive evidence of the law. No man may become truly a great lawyer until, in addition to his knowledge of books, he has learned to commune with nature, to know himself, and to know men.

Go out, if you will, where the thunders roar, and the lightnings rend the heaven; hear the wind moan among the cliffs at night; see the awful might of old ocean in her angry moods; or gaze into a starlit heaven on a summer evening and contemplate the infinite; or hear the gentle breezes whispering secrets to the treetops; or nodding, sleepy daisies in fields where children play; go out upon the hillside where laughing waters come tumbling down to hide themselves in blue-green pools among the rocks, and cast a fly and watch it skim along the surface to trick the wary trout; or stand among the tules in the early morning of a wintry day and watch the wild ducks racing from the north on singing wings of flight; learn to know the mind, and understand the loyalty of a wet and tired dog that caresses you with muddy paws—and, having chosen such surroundings, learn to know yourself and the promptings of your own purified heart, which will unerringly point the way to justice and the law.

Upon such fabric was written the law of Moses: from such a

Upon such fabric was written the law of Moses; from such a school came He who walked on Calvary and declared the law that finds its living roots in human conscience. From the school of human experience came the great teacher, Blackstone, and the mighty jurist, Marshall; and from the forest and stream and field, and from the hearts of men, and from the exalted wisdom of his own purified and sanctified heart, came the law that was taught to the saddened and immortal Lincoln—the law of justice, upon which he builded for himself a tomb, eternal in the hearts of men.

My colleagues, what was Wesley Lloyd's philosophy of life? I think it is beautifully set forth in a prayer poem which he composed about 15 years ago and which he often recited at lodge meetings and sometimes included in his public addresses. It reads as follows:

My sins are grievous, Lord, let penance bring Some slight atonement for my wandering; For mistakes that I have made, for talents gamed away, For precious years misspent in idle boast and play, Oh, let me feel the lash and let me know the sting That breaks the proudest heart with bitter sorrowing.

But let me not, O Lord, my sorrows bear in vain, But let some good be born for every sting of pain. Strength give my heart and hand, added luster to my brain, And let my saddened lot bring unto earth some gain. Though hollowed-eyed with care, for every sin I'll pay But let me burdens bear for others on the way.

Oh, let me bring to childhood some laughter and some mirth And let me give to youth the loves and hopes of earth, To age bring pleasant memories and, too, surcease from care And let me banish sorrow and sadness everywhere.

Then my soul shall find atonement, and the wings of thought shall

And a voice from somewhere whisper that somehow I've done my best.

My friend, Wesley, I last saw you on that memorable afternoon in Tacoma, as you slept amidst a wilderness of roses and gardenias, lilies of the valley, chrysanthemums and heather, the loving tributes of legions of friends. To me you somehow appeared younger and I noted an expression of contentment upon your brow. You are now enjoying the eternal reward for all your labors and a state of bliss and happiness is your final lot, and until we meet again, old friend, hail and farewell.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, the passing of our friends from the stage of life affects us in various ways and produces in us conflicting emotions. Some we may know for many years, and while the knowledge of their passing may cause a certain feeling of regret, yet they are rather soon forgotten in the swirling maelstrom of human affairs. Others, however, are so possessed of character and personality and the indefinable attributes of nature that the memory of their friendship will continue on to the end of our days. The passing of such friends affects us as does the giant tree which, viewed for years upon the mountaintop, in the midst of a storm is struck by lightning, and, falling with a resounding crash, leaves a lonely space against the sky.

Mr. Speaker, such a man was our late friend and colleague, Wesley Lloyd, of Washington. On the floor of this forum he was quiet and unobtrusive. He was content to let others occupy the Well of the House. A splendid lawyer, and a philosopher, he had a keen sense of humor, which enabled him to pass over the rough places of life with the minimum of damage to his friendships and ideals. He loved the members of his family with a consuming love. Many years ago Wesley Lloyd and his wife had the great misfortune to suffer the loss of a young son. From this blow, our colleague never recovered, but, akin to the great tragedian on the stage, he carried on quietly and played his part, while bearing a hurt in his heart which could not be assuaged.

Mr. Speaker, if I would appraise a man's worth—if I would measure his stature—I would go to those who have known him most intimately, those who have associated with him in good times and in bad, those who have been with him when he was standing on the mountaintops of happiness and in the deep valleys of despair. Measured by this yardstick, and by every other method known to man, Wesley Lloyd was a true American, a faithful public servant, a splendid citizen, an upright lawyer, a loving husband and father, and a loyal friend.

Mr. Speaker, I had the honor of being one of the Members appointed by you to accompany the body of our beloved colleague to its last resting place at Tacoma, Wash. On the train, returning from that sad mission, I penned a few lines in memory of my friend and the friend of every Member of , this splendid House of Representatives. I quote them with the hope that they may, even in the slightest degree, be of some comfort to his loved ones who survive:

"Wes', old friend, you've realized your hope
That when at last this earthly life was o'er,
They'd take you to the home you loved so well,
Out West upon the old Pacific shore.

Out where the sun dips slowly o'er the sea And greets the stars of evening one by one, To keep a rendezvous of mystery, Until the East beholds it once again.

You've labored long and well—the victory's won;
You rest today in peaceful, friendly earth.
And as Tacoma's own—a favored son,
Her love will never wane—she knows your worth.

Your countless kindly thoughts and words and deeds An everlasting monument will be. Enthroned in the hearts of living men, You'll live a million years—eternally.

Your shroud will be the western sky you love, The giant firs will gently guard your sleep, And, standing by 'till you are called above, Majestic Rainier will her vigil keep.

And so we say farewell to you, good friend; Some day, all in good time, at eventide, We'll launch our bark, and sailing 'round the bend, Greet you once more upon the other side.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, all hearts were saddened by the passing of Hon. Wesley Lloyd on January 10, 1936. He was a Representative in Congress from the Sixth District of the State of Washington. He was first elected to the Seventy-third Congress in November 1932, and was reelected to the Seventy-fourth Congress in November 1934. He passed away just 1 week after the convening of the second session of the Seventy-fourth Congress. Notwithstanding his comparatively short service in the National Congress, Mr. LLOYD had attained a prominence in the House that distinguished him as a man of great ability and an outstanding legislator.

At the very outset of his service he was assigned to the Committee on Military Affairs, where he served with credit to himself and the Congress. In his second term in Congress. as a recognition of his fine legal ability, he was placed on the Committee on the Judiciary. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on the Judiciary are both exclusive committees and rank among the outstanding committees of

It is seldom that a newly elected Member of Congress has such recognition as to be assigned to these great committees. Mr. Lloyd more than justified this recognition by the character of the high service he gave.

Additional evidence of the appreciation of his character and ability is the fact that he was made assistant whip of the House in both the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses. He served in this capacity through the entire period of his membership in the House.

It seems an untimely event that took Wesley Lloyd from the walks of men at a time in his life when he was just getting into the full stride of the larger accomplishments of his career. It is not for us to question the dispensations of Providence, but we are forced to wonder why some things have to be. The only answer is that His ways are beyond our understanding. However, the term of human life is not measured alone by years but by things done and distance traveled in the progress of human accomplishment. Measured by this standard, WESLEY LLOYD had a span of life far beyond that of most men his seniors in years. His was a full life, crowded with deeds done and to be done. He met his responsibilities in a big way as a big man can. He had a mental capacity and moral courage that made work a pleasure rather than a burden.

It is said that "a life that is lived is a tale that is told." WESLEY LLOYD'S life would require volumes to tell of its preparation and fullness. He was born and reared on a

John Q. Lloyd. He had three brothers and two sisters. He spent his boyhood on this farm. Life on the farm was not easy. He worked early and late, as farm boys in those days were required to do. It was a far cry from those days and that work to the enviable position he attained later as a lawyer and as a Member of Congress. His early education was had in a country school, some miles from his farm home. He rode through the cold winter months to this school, frequently chilled to the bone, when a mere child. It was a oneroom wooden building, not a comfortable, modernly heated brick building as most rural school buildings now are.

It was here that he got the rudiments of the education that equipped him for his career of after years. From work on the farm, from this country school, and from his early experiences in the associations and spirit of this farm community, Wesley Lloyd laid the solid foundation upon which he builded a brilliantly successful career. His ambition to succeed was indomitable. He wanted to enter college but lacked the necessary funds to do so. But, nothing daunted. he got odd jobs to pay his way. He chopped wood at 10 cents an hour and did other work at a low wage. As a final educational equipment for the profession to which ne aspired, Wesley Lloyd entered the Washburn Law School in Kansas. After receiving his law degree from this school, he went to Spokane, Wash., to establish himself in that new State and there to enter upon the profession of law.

He remained at Spokane for only a short time, but while there he met Miss Ida W. Reed, whom he married, and then moved to Tacoma, Wash., where they have since resided.

Mr. LLOYD had not yet been admitted to the bar. He secured employment in Tacoma with a newspaper, and from this employment supported himself and wife, while studying for 6 months preparatory to taking the supreme-court bar examination. He was admitted to the bar in 1906 and began the practice of law in Tacoma. His office equipment consisted of a desk, a typewriter, and a few law books. Like those of most young lawyers, his clients, at the beginning, were few and of the class that had little money. From this modest beginning in the practice of law, Wesley Lloyd rapidly advanced in his profession, and through the years reached a position of prominence among the lawyers of his State. He participated in a large number of the most important court cases, both criminal and civil, in western Washington. His reputation and standing as one of the outstanding lawyers of the State were long established before he became a candidate for Congress in 1932.

In addition to his professional standing as a lawyer, Mr. LLOYD had established himself as a leader in the civic affairs of his home city of Tacoma.

He was a public-spirited man and was a useful citizen through his participation in the fraternal, social, and civic activities of his community. He was a home builder, a good husband, a good father, and a good friend. He has left to his family the heritage of a good name, the character of a great lawyer, and the record of a Congressman upon which the whole State of Washington looks with pride. The life of Wesley Lloyd was full of useful deeds. He was prompted and guided by the inspiration that comes from an abiding faith in the directing hand of an all-wise, all-loving, and all-powerful Providence. Peace to his ashes and rest to his soul.

Mr. WALLGREN. Mr. Speaker, during this past session death has thinned the ranks of the Washington State delegation to the House of Representatives. A man of courage and conviction, the late Hon. Wesley Lloyd served well his district and his Nation. His passing means a loss not only to those of us who valued him so highly as a colleague here. but it brings to an end his keen insight into judicial and legal questions.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee his enlightened views as to the purpose and function of the law and of the judiciary were admired and respected. But I need say no farm at Argonia, Kans. His parents were Mr. and Mrs. more of his work here. We who were his colleagues know tion of his ability.

I should rather here devote my words to his work in his chosen field, the law. His attitude was far-sighted and refreshing. My words can only brush the surface, but his, delivered in a 1931 address, plumb the depths, so prophetic have they proven to be in view of the events of the last 5 years.

Therefore, may I quote briefly from this address of Mr. LLOYD'S delivered before the Pierce County Bar Association:

The layman, uninitiated in the mysteries of the law, is apt to conclude that the lawyer is the slave and disciple of precedent.

* * Time may have been when precedent was the book of books for the legal searcher after knowledge, but the busy lawyer of today must, indeed, be prepared to blaze new trails and chart unknown seas, and his reckoning must be compassed by the pole star of truth.

* * *

If in the practice of law you try to follow precedent, to seek some recorded case from out the past to define with a nicety the conduct of men and women of today and tomorrow, in an age when imagination is foreshadowed by reality come true, you are doomed to failure, penury, and woe.

The real law that is and forever must be our guide is justice.

* * Precedents are not the law, but only the evidence of the law. The law is eternal.

This was the philosophy of Wesley Lloyd. He was my friend, and I was one of those chosen to accompany his remains to the State of Washington. There in the city of Tacoma, his home, he was given a funeral tribute that will long be remembered by the residents of that State. It was possibly as great a tribute as has ever been given anyone in the State of Washington, pointing to the esteem in which our colleague, WESLEY LLOYD, was held.

HON. STEPHEN A. RUDD

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, the Honorable Stephen A. Rudd was born on December 11, 1874, in the city of Brooklyn, where he spent his entire life, and where his legal and political careers developed to their fulfillment. He married Miss Martha Lindsay, whose father, the Honorable George H. Lindsay, served in the House with marked success from the Fifty-seventh to the Sixty-third Congress. Mrs. Rudd's brother, the Honorable George W. Lindsay, likewise saw service in the House of Representatives, coming to the Sixtyeighth Congress and remaining to serve well his constituents and the country until the Seventy-fourth Congress.

Succeeding the Honorable David J. O'Connell, whose sudden death occurred on December 29, 1930, as a Representative in Congress from his home district, Mr. Rupp also succeeded his predecessor as a member of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, where he served with outstanding distinction until illness prevented his attendance at committee meetings.

It was one of the greatest pleasures of my congressional experience to have learned to know the Honorable Stephen A. Rudd, who represented the Ninth District of New York in the House of Representatives for a portion of the Seventysecond and for the entire Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses.

To know Stephen A. Rudd was to respect and love the man. He was sincere in his efforts, devoted to his friends, and eager and willing at all times to cooperate in the problems that troubled his associates.

A quiet, unassuming, humble personality, Mr. Rudd was always thoughtful of those who served with him, loyal to a fault to all his friends, and devoted to an unusual degree to his home and his family. A sterling character, a generous man, a splendid representative of the people, he has gone to that eternal reward which comes as the fulfillment of a life crowded with good deeds accomplished for all those he loved and served.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, the passing of Stephen A. Rudd leaves a void difficult to fill. I served with him for a long period and learned to love him for his integrity, affability, and charm. He was ever kindly disposed toward all. I never heard a harsh word pass his lips. The Psalmist said, "Better is the fragrance of a good name than the perfume of it well, and his constituents had twice shown their admira- | precious oils." His good name is emblazoned on the hearts of those with whom he came in daily contact. He will be remembered in New York City, whence we both come, for many decades. Long will live the memory of his deeds of kindness and charity and his ever-willingness to lend a helping hand to the "halt, the lame, and the feeble."

> Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, again death, the merciless reaper, has struck down in the prime of his life a Member of this House from the city of New York, who in his lifetime has given the best that was in him to the services of this body and to our Nation.

> STEPHEN A. RUDD, whose death we are mourning today, was born in Brooklyn on December 11, 1874. He studied law at the Brooklyn Law School and was admitted to the bar of the State of New York, after which he was engaged in general practice for many years.

> His first political office was as a member of the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York, on which he served with distinction from 1922 to 1931, being very active in the many committees of the board and its sessions which are held every week in the city hall.

> Mr. Rupp was elected to the Seventy-second Congress at a special election held February 17, 1931, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Congressman O'Connell, and he was reelected to the Seventy-third and the present Congress.

> It was in Congress that I came into close contact with his sterling character, and where I was able to establish a friendship which continued until his death.

> One of the great opportunities in Congress is the possibility of establishing long friendships. It is Members like STEPHEN A. RUDD who endear themselves to us by their untiring and unselfish devotion to duty, their ever-cheerful personality, their ever-obliging attitude toward life, and their inexhaustible fund of good will and good nature.

> RUDD was one of the men whom to know was to love, and hearing of his untimely death it was impossible to recover from the sad reflections upon the fate of so many, who like the deceased Congressman were an ornament to society and a shining example worthy of emulation in life.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, many Members of this honorable body will pay their strong personal tributes to their long-time friendship and appreciation of the sterling character of our deceased colleague, Stephen A. Rudd, of the Ninth District of the State of New York, but probably few will parallel an acquaintance seemingly so short yet so memorable as mine, now in death's reverie.

As a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee he was the fifth ranking member on our side of the House. I was the junior. We were associated on that committee and found much in common that interested us, but in nothing else did our thoughts so center and unite as in the neutrality legislation of this session. Despite an illness that daily made its inroads all the more evident, he attended to his congressional duty on this momentous subject, followed it in and out of committee, and left an indelible imprint of integrity and energy on the final bill.

Unswervingly he held to views which ultimately in the minds of everyone resulted in the final cast of that important legislative pronouncement. Shoulder to shoulder with us he stood, culminating his efforts and strong principles in an entreaty and plea that reached the heights in eloquent cogency of thought and conviction.

He was unusually kind to me, the junior of juniors, and I cherish those acts of camaraderie. May they ever be with me as a reminder of one who pushed on in his courageous devotion to duty, despite unending pain and an all-too-convincing knowledge of approaching death.

A revered poet of my own district, Fitz-Greene Halleck, once penned these words for another, which I add now to the memory of a great friend:

Green be the turf above thee, Friend of my better days; None knew thee but to love thee, Nor named thee but to praise.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be afforded this opportunity to speak a few words regarding the service rendered by my colleague the late Honorable Stephen Rudd. I consider it an honor and privilege to have known him and my acquaintance with him developed into a friendship which I cherished.

I have never known a more loyal man and it is with a feeling of pleasure that I recall his reception of me when I came to the House of Representatives as a new Member. He was deeply interested in the business of the Congress and was always willing to be of service to those who were not familiar with the procedure to be followed.

STEPHEN RUDD was activated by two desires at all times—to serve his constituency to the best of his ability and to cooperate with his colleagues in every worthy cause. I never knew him to hesitate to lend his aid to the accomplishment of any act which would be for the betterment of our great Nation. He was conscientious and sincere in all his endeavors, and I know that all who knew him in the House learned of his passing with a deep sense of personal loss.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, in this brief space it is impossible to do justice in featuring the high lights of the picture in the history of the strenuous life of such a deserving type of public citizen as the deceased, Stephen A. Rudd.

It is with profound reverence that I speak of a life filled with such a human record of useful years. For 15 years it was my proud privilege to possess his friendship. From January 1, 1922, to March 3, 1931, we served together as members of the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York, when his constituents honored him by sending him as their Representative in Congress from the Ninth District, New York. His philosophy of life was of that higher type of humanism so replete with such refreshing wholesomeness seldom observed in our selfish world. Steve's life was in fact dedicated to complete fulfillment of self-sacrificing devotion to public service. It was the compelling secret and prominent feature of his unqualified success in all his activities. His intrinsic value as a public-spirited citizen cannot be measured in mere words, for our distinguished colleague had a keen conception of practical human conduct which he always applied in his treatment in making others happy and contented.

FOR HE WALKED WITH MEN AND UNDERSTOOD

Here was a man whose heart was good, Who walked with men and understood. His was a voice that spoke to cheer, And fell like music on the ear. His was a smile men loved to see, His was a hand that asked no fee For friendliness or kindness done. And now that he has journeyed on, His is a fame that never ends And leaves behind uncounted friends.

STEPHEN A. RUDD was a real champion of the people, a he-man with a spotless reputation and strong character, tempered with a kindly disposition.

In the drama of life of his Nation, State, and city of New York he played a conspicuous role as a public-spirited citizen. He was a pioneer and leader in human endeavors. And loved, honored, respected, and admired by all, he passed on to—

A beautiful land of faith we see,
A land of rest from sorrow free,
The home of the ransomed, bright and fair,
And beautiful angels, too, are there.
That beautiful land, the City of Light,
It ne'er has known the shades of night;
The glory of God, the light of day,
Hath driven the darkness far away.

Through the death of Stephen A. Rudd the city of New York, the State of New York, as well as the Nation, suffered a distinct and irreparable loss. His bereaved family lost a good provider, a loving husband and father; the Democratic Party, a valuable asset; and we, his colleagues, lost a true pal and friend—

For he loved the right with courage strong, Always ready and willing to battle against the wrong.

However, we will meet again:

Yes; we will meet again in the morning, In the dawn of a fairer day, When the night of watching and waiting With its darkness has passed away; Where no shadows veil the sunshine, Over there in the heavenly land; And the crystal waves of the river, Ever flow o'er the golden sand.

Where our precious ones now are dwelling,
Free from toil and every care,
With their garments spotless and shining,
Like the robes that angels wear.
When our pilgrimage is completed,
And our footsteps no longer roam,
By the pearly gates gladly waiting,
They will give us a welcome home.

Mr. PEYSER. Mr. Speaker, the grim reaper, Death, touches every one of us at various times, and yet, at each and every occurrence, whether it be of family, friend, or associate, is a distinct shock, bringing sorrow and grief in its wake, and, although I did not know Stephen A. Rudd intimately, his passing away brought a sense of loss that will not easily be replaced.

A kindly, genial gentleman, and one with a keen sense of his duties to mankind and country; always pleasant and willing to lend a helping hand to a newcomer in Congress, exemplifies my impression of the late Member from New York. An ardent, conscientious worker, yet generally standing in the background, his force and personality, nevertheless, had a lasting influence on those with whom he came in contact, and years will go by before his memory starts to fade in the minds of those who knew and loved him.

He was always among the first to welcome a new Member to Congress and offer assistance with the procedure of that great body, which, to a newcomer, is confusing and disconcerting in its many intricacies. His was a nature of service, and his many kind deeds will long be remembered by his colleagues. I, for one, shall cherish the thought of his many kindnesses to me and, with all my heart, I shall ever mourn the loss of his daily contact.

One too seldom meets men endowed with the graciousness and good will toward their fellow men in public life, and it is a privilege to so speak of my former colleague from New York, Stephen A. Rudd.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, out of the fullness of my heart, I bespeak the sorrow that is mine in the loss by death of our colleague, Hon. Stephen A. Rudd. A sympathetic friend, he was ever ready to bestow the benefit of his advice and counsel upon any problem which confronted fellow Members of the House of Representatives. In his own congressional district he was loved and esteemed by his people, to whom he was loyal, faithful, and devoted to the day of his death.

Congressman Rudd was an amiable character, learned, practical, and sound. His sincerity was marked, as was his high ideal of statesmanship. He had a keen sense of humor, but never applied it to the stern questions arising in the lives of our people. His heart and soul felt for them earnestly and fervently. The masses of our people had no better friend in public life than Stephen A. Rudd, who throughout gave his undivided allegiance and support to President Roosevelt, in whom he recognized a real friend of the American people.

Whenever a colleague unwittingly or in all seriousness indicated that he intended to do otherwise than follow the paths that had been blazed by the President, Steve Rudd never failed to remind him that the President was leading the way for our people and the people were behind the President. It was his method of suggesting kindly but firmly that a Congressman must always be with and abide by his people. Thus did he serve faithfully. And not only did he keep the faith but he inculcated it in the minds and hearts of others.

A distinguished citizen of the city of New York, where he held public office in the city government, Congressman Rupp entered the Congress of the United States in 1931 and served in the Seventy-second, Seventy-third, and Seventy-fourth Congresses. Although in ill health toward the last, he remained at his post, and hardly had he been missed from the floor of the House when his death occurred.

As a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs he was a keen student of events of the world. A lawyer of ability, he had a peculiar faculty of analyzing and simplifying any given problem, however complex. Ardently advocating world peace, he rendered yeoman service in his insistence upon a policy of strict neutrality and the development of friendly relationships with all nations.

Congressman Rupp died leaving an enviable record of service unostentatiously but ably performed. The Congress and his people will always remember him appreciatively, pleasantly, affectionately.

Our profound sympathy goes out to his beloved widow, Martha Lindsay, whose brother, George Lindsay, also served with distinction as a Member of Congress during our incumbency, and to his children, Martha, Stephen, Lindsay, and Roy. We grieve with them.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, in the death of Stephen A. Rudd the delegation from the city of New York in the Congress has lost one of its outstanding and most valued members.

Born in the district in Brooklyn Borough that he so ably represented in Congress, he attended the local elementary school and high school and St. Lawrence University. He was known as a diligent scholar and attained high honors in scholastic studies. Upon his graduation from the university, he took up the study of law at the Brooklyn Law School and was admitted to the bar immediately upon the completion of his studies.

As a young man he was interested in the welfare of the people of his city. This interest was the incentive for his entering political life. He was always a sterling and uncompromising Democrat of the old school and soon became known as a speaker and lecturer upon the important public questions that were presented for the consideration of the electorate.

Appreciating the splendid service he had rendered, the people of his district elected him as their representative to the board of aldermen of the city. Here, on account of his native ability and special training he rose rapidly and soon became chairman of some of the board's most important committees. Under his initiative many measures were introduced and passed, benefiting, building up, and beautifying his native city of Brooklyn. These splendid works in unison with his indefatigable zeal for the welfare of his people will indeed be the monuments by which he will be best remembered.

As an additional honor, the people of his district elected him to fill a vacancy in the House of Representatives in the Seventy-second Congress; he was reelected to the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses. In the Congress he was elected to membership on the very important Committee on Foreign Affairs. He took an active and conscientious interest in the work of his committee and became so proficient in the discharge of his duties that his advice and counsel were sought in the disposition of many important matters.

STEPHEN RUDD was a devoted husband and father. His wife was Martha Lindsay, sister of former Representative George W. Lindsay. He had four children, Martha L., Stephen J., Lindsay H., and Roy H. Rudd. His sons were lawyers and members of his firm.

His untimely death brought sadness not only to his beloved wife and family but also to his colleagues in the Congress. The esteem in which he was held by the people of his district was manifested by the streets crowded with men, women, and children standing in silent sorrow on the day of his funeral as a mute testimony of the love and esteem in which he was held by all classes.

CROSSING THE BAR

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea,

But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell,
When I embark;

For tho't from out our bourne of Time and Place The flood may bear me far, I hope to see my Pilot face to face When I have crossed the bar.

Mr. KENNEDY of New York. Mr. Speaker, today we meet to pay tribute to a modest but great man. We, who knew his capacity, ability, and real worth, realize he was not a spectacular man but one who had the real qualification for holding public office.

STEPHEN A. RUDD came to this House as a man well equipped for public service. On December 11, 1874, he was born in Brooklyn, N. Y. He pursued the study of law at Brooklyn Law School and St. Lawrence University. He was admitted to the bar and became one of Brooklyn's prominent lawyers, known for his honesty, integrity, and ability.

Entering public service in the city of New York, he served in the board of aldermen from 1922 to 1931. These years of the city administration were years of readjustment and reorganization. The World War had ended 4 years previously, but the traces of the long struggle were to be still found in the economic, social, and educational phases of our great city government. Labor problems, adequate but not oppressive taxation, educational and health bureaus were serious questions brought before the board of aldermen.

On February 17, 1931, at a special election held to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. David J. O'Connell, Mr. Rudd was elected to Congress to represent the Ninth District in Kings and Queens Counties.

Both in the board of aldermen and in the House of Representatives he quickly took a commanding position. During his service in the House of Representatives he was a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, a committee of power and influence and requiring comprehensive knowledge and sound discretion.

During the period in which Mr. Rudd served in the Congress of the United States there was particular need of men of intellect, ability, and commanding force. The problems confronting our Nation demanded men of natural force, learning, industry, and will power, to enact legislation according to their convictions. When he entered the House he came after a service in the city of New York that well fitted him for the arduous duties incident to service in the Congress of the United States.

As a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, he accumulated wide information on almost every question concerning this public service. He was respected for his sound and cautious judgment. It is a committee which needs the services of men of wide information, great equipment.

The confused European situation during these years placed great importance and responsibility on the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Mussolini was conducting the war between Italy and Ethiopia; Hitler startled the world with his Nazi rule in Germany; France underwent a political readjustment; revolution and unrest swept through Spain and Mexico; warfare continued between the Japanese and Chinese; and Lenin was still working out his 5-year plan in Russia.

As alderman he was recognized as one of the foremost and strongest minds. His counsel and advice were sought. When again the field of opportunity widened and he was elected to a place in the Congress of the United States, with regret he left his associates in the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York, left his friends and the place where he had worked so long and was known so well.

Those who are familiar with the history of New York City and State during the period in which Mr. Rupp served as alderman will recall the names of some of the giants in intellect, ability, and commanding force with whom he served, such men as Gov. Alfred E. Smith, Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Mayor John P. O'Brien, and Alderman Timothy J. Sullivan, the present president of the board of aldermen. All of them rank high in the opinion of persons who appreciate great natural force, learning, and industry. When Mr. Rudd entered the House of Representatives, he was soon to serve again with Franklin D. Roosevelt, no longer the Governor but now the President.

The life of Stephen A. Rudd should be an inspiration, particularly to the young men of Brooklyn. A typical American boy, born in the greatest city in the world, rising above obstacles, winning friends and honors. The country is richer for his carrer, for his life. His life was marked with ability, energy, and devotion to his public services, with charity and humility. He was never conscious of his position in life.

Nothing dies but something mourns. When a man who has been in our midst, has stood in the blazing limelight of publicity, has been known to all the Nation, when such a man dies, the City of New York, the State of New York, and the Nation mourn. Friends whom he has loved will cherish his memory with greater tenderness year after year. In his life he accomplished much and won the high regard of his colleagues by his stanchness and courage. It is not given to every man to put himself into the innermost love of a people, a community, and make them all mourners when he departs.

Let us remember our dear friend as a Congressman, as a Democrat, but above all as a devoted and faithful husband and father. With this sorrowing family we, too, sorrow. Let us tell them that while earth is poorer, heaven is richer, the one losing and the other gaining Stephen A. Rudd.

Mr. PFEIFER. Mr. Speaker, at this particular moment I want to pay a tribute of respect to my personal friend and our late lamented colleague, the Honorable Stephen Andrew Rudd, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

I have been a Member of Congress for only a year and a half, but during that time it was my great privilege to be rather closely associated with him. Owing to the fact that his congressional district borders mine, I had the pleasure on many occasions of discussing matters with him which were of vital interest to both of us. I admired the sincere and modest manner in which he conducted himself at all times, and I feel that this House and the district he represented have lost not only a good legislator but a true and loyal friend.

Steve Rudd as we knew him was a gentleman, sympathetic, with a big heart and a conscience that dictated his every action; always ready to defend and stand firm for what was just and right; intensely patriotic. Added to this he had that adroit diplomatic disposition which made him an able member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, to which he was elected by the House when he became a Member of the Seventy-second Congress. Although ill, he took an active part in the committee during the consideration of the neutrality legislation this session.

Postal and other Federal employees, veterans, their widows and dependents were never forsaken by Steve, as he was always in the first-line trenches for them, voting against the economy acts and overriding Presidential vetoes.

In the multitude of details that engross every legislator's life, our friend Steve gave care and attention to the slightest request of the humblest of his constituents as well as to the larger problems of government.

Let us weep in our darkness—but weep not for him! Not for him—who, departing, leaves millions in tears! Not for him—who has died full of honor and years! Not for him—who ascended fame's ladder so high, From the round at the top he has stepped to the sky.

Mr. MERRITT of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Seventy-fourth Congress lost one of its most outstanding Members in the death of Stephen A. Rudd, of Brooklyn, N. Y. It was for me, a new Member of the House, a very great honor to have bestowed upon me the friendship manifested toward me by this noble gentleman from the very first day I set foot on the floor of this Chamber. My acquaintance with him was, indeed, a short one, but it led quickly to a friendship which I am confident was as enthusiastic a pleasure for Steve as for myself.

It has been said that "we are born to die, and we die that we may live", and it is my fervent prayer that in the celestial life into which he has entered our beloved friend may find everlasting happiness. His untimely death brought sadness to his beloved ones, to his friends, and to his colleagues here. But with this deep sense of bereavement there is also consolation in the revelation of how large is the number of those who have been touched by his departure. In this busy, absorbing life we go our several ways and pass each other like "ships that pass in the night", without realizing the wealth of friendship that may be ours for the taking until one of these rare friends steps aside and we must go on without him. Then realization comes.

Had Stephen Rudd lived the full span of his life, the record thereof would undoubtedly have been one of exceptional accomplishment. His fine personality, the nobleness of his spirit, and his ability would have carried him far in the Halls of Congress and the service of his country. While he never said so, one felt that the philosophy of his life was to serve sympathetically, generously, sincerely. As one who enjoyed the blessing of his friendship, I should indeed be remiss if I failed to express something of the debt of gratitude and loyalty I owe him, and I offer this brief tribute gladly and proudly.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, in paying my tribute to the memory of my late colleague Stephen A. Rudd, I speak not only as a New Yorker but as an American citizen. Those of you who are familiar with Mr. Rudd's record in the House know how truly devoted he was to his country's good. His services went beyond the boundaries of his district and State. He was a real American. He was a true champion of those things that have gone to make our country great. In his own life he illustrated the best that America can offer in manhood, statesmanship, and good fellowship.

Those of us who remember him for his kindly disposition mourn him as a friend, but every citizen of his State and country will share our grief for a champion lost; for he was truly a friend of the people. As a husband and father he was familiar with those small but important trivialities that go to make up the life of the average man. Nothing to my late colleague was unimportant if it affected the lives of his fellow countrymen.

He was born, as you know, in the district he so ably represented here in Congress. As a young man he became interested in the welfare of his neighbors. It was that interest that sent him to Washington; and it was that interest, broadened to include each and every one of his fellow countrymen, that made him so valuable a Member of the House.

Those of us who are new in Congress know how generous STEPHEN A. RUDD was in giving of his knowledge based on his wider experience; and how important that help is only those of us who are serving our first term can realize.

As a friend, statesman, and kindly fellow man we of New York and the Nation mourn him.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, our late lamented colleague, the Honorable Stephen Andrew Rudd, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was one of the best and ablest Members of Congress. He was respected and admired by his colleagues by reason of his exemplary life, his courage, and his ability. He was a friend of the poor people, the downtrodden, the oppressed, and the wage earner. He was an especially good friend of veterans of all wars. They, their loved ones and dependents, would never suffer by reason of any act of his.

His colleagues in the House of Representatives regret exceedingly that he is no longer with us. He is missed very much.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, the death of Stephen A. Rudd removed from this House a man who served his people, his State, and his Nation well and faithfully for many years.

My personal relations with him were of an intimate and friendly nature. Not alone as a colleague in the House of Representatives but also on the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York.

The people of his district will miss his loyal, able, and unselfish service; his colleagues will miss his mature and reliable counsel and advice; his personal friends will miss the warm and wholesome influence of his gentle nature.

STEPHEN RUDD has left a record behind him that should bring happiness, not only to his family but also to his many friends, to whom he endeared himself as a great public servant and a sincere friend.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, all of us who knew and worked with the late Stephen A. Rudd feel a distinct and deep sense of personal loss at his passing. He was a true and helpful friend to all who knew him. It was my particular advantage to have served with him on the Committee on Foreign Affairs. He had an exceptionally fine and sympathetic understanding of the important problems that came before that committee, and he was so gracious in his manner of helpfulness. Even when his illness made his work so difficult he carried on, faithful in his devotion to duty and firm in his conviction of what was best for the country he loved and served so well.

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, "Till tired he sleeps, and life's poor play is o'er." So wrote the poet Alexander Pope two centuries ago, and never was the line more applicable than when quoted about the late Stephen A. Rudd.

Coming from the same city, Brooklyn, I knew Steve before we both entered Congress, but it was not until we came to Washington that I knew him so well and discovered his real character. As much as any man, he put his work first, as is evidenced by his activities and attendance in Congress.

Day after day his colleagues saw him at work when he should have been taking a much-needed rest. Often he mentioned to me how ill he felt, but he would not give up, because he was sent to Washington by his people, and he was bound to labor for them. Truly, he was a martyr, this Stephen A. Rudd, and such loyalty to his friends and his country must not go unrecognized.

I shall miss Steve Rudd very much. His colleagues, I know, all mourn his passing. The Nation and the city and State of New York have suffered an irreparable loss in his death. His place will be hard to fill.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, under the right given me to extend my remarks I desire in a most simple way to pay my respects to our colleague the Honorable Stephen A. Rudd, of New York, who passed away not long ago.

I take this opportunity to comment on Mr. Rudd's service, more especially because he has been a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, of which I am at present the chairman, ever since he has been in Congress. I served with him on this Committee, before I became its chairman and also since that time. This has given me an unusual opportunity to know the man about whom I am speaking, and his qualifications. He attended his committee meetings regularly and took a great deal of interest in the proceedings. He was quiet and unassuming, but a man of his own convictions. He was intelligent and honest and a loyal Democrat, and especially loyal to the administration. He had been sick for some time before his death, and yet during that time oftentimes he would meet with the committee when I felt he was not able to do so.

I feel that I speak the sentiment of the Foreign Affairs Committee when I say that he was highly respected by them and they all appreciated his worth. Personally, he is a loss to me in my official capacity, and also as a stanch friend. His record here in Congress is such as anyone should have been proud of and his place will not be easily filled. His going away is a loss not only to his constituents but to the people at large of this great country.

I am glad to make these few remarks in reference to my colleague and friend.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, a valiant and a gentle soul passed to his splendid reward when the spirit of the Honorable Stephen A. Rudd, Member of Congress from the Ninth Congressional District of New York, on March 31, 1936, left its earthly tenement and left this temporary world for the glories of a heavenly eternity.

None knew him who did not love him for his splendid capacity allied with a modesty and self-effacement rare in this time and this generation. He served his native city of Brooklyn handsomely and competently and when he became secretary to the police commissioner of New York he activated a difficult position with ableness and dignity.

When he came to Congress to assume the duties of a Representative he speedily gained not only the affection but the admiration and respect of his colleagues. These attitudes of his fellow Members of Congress grew as the years passed by until he came to be regarded as a most valuable member of the New York delegation in Congress.

Patient, yet persevering, our brother Rudd devoted his time and talents to the work of the Seventy-second, Seventy-third, and Seventy-fourth Congresses to the betterment of proposed legislation and to the interests of his constituents. With him duty came first, at any cost of time or labor. The poorest citizen of his congressional district was always accorded the same courtesy as was given its leading residents.

One of nature's noblemen has gone to his well-earned reward and we who are left behind mourn him as we would our own brother.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, "Death does not take a holiday", and once again we find its inexorable hand laid upon another of New York's Representatives in the Halls of Congress, beckoning this time the distinguished Representative from the Ninth Congressional District, representing a portion of the city of Brooklyn, the Honorable Stephen A. Rudd, and calling him to his Heavenly Master to give an account of his stewardship.

Mr. Rudd was my personal friend for a number of years past and his death stirs me deeply and profoundly. His was a lovable personality, ever thoughtful of his friends and tolerant of his enemies.

A lawyer of distinction, Mr. Rudd was elected to the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York and served in that body from 1922 to 1931. He was then elected to Congress to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late David J. O'Connell and was reelected to the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses.

His public life has been an open book. He served the city of New York as an alderman with ability and credit and he served his district, his State, and his Nation in Congress with distinction and honor.

When summoned to appear before his Master we know that His judgment was: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into everlasting glory."

To his family we extend our heartfelt sympathy and our prayers.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, the death of Hon. Stephen A. Rudd, Representative from the Ninth District of New York, on March 31, 1936, brought sadness to all those who knew him.

It was not my privilege to know Mr. Rupp until after I was elected a Member of Congress. The people of his district elected him to fill a vacancy in the House of Representatives in the Seventy-second Congress, and from then until the time of his death every contact with him increased my affectionate regard for him personally and officially.

Born in the district which he so ably served during his long political career, first as an alderman of the city of New York, where his proficient and splendid work leaves a heritage not only to his family but that same district which later elected him to serve them in Congress, as majority whip of the House, I wish to say further that Mr. Rupp impressed me by his faithfulness and loyalty to our administration and his desire to serve the people of his district and State. He was during the time which I knew him an inspiration to me and a fine example of a patriotic statesman.

Through the untimely passing of Stephen A. Rudd the city of New York and the State and Nation suffered an irreparable loss, but may his family be consoled by the consciousness of the splendid and loyal service he accomplished and ever strove for.

His life was gentle, and the elements So mix'd in him that Nature might stand up, And say to all the world "This was a man!"

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, when Stephen A. Rudd passed away there was sincere regret among his legion of friends. His loss was particularly felt by the many warm friends he had made during his service as a Member of the National Congress.

It was my privilege to meet Mr. Rupp when he first came here and to serve with him on the great Committee on Foreign Affairs. He was a hard, conscientious worker, actuated with but the one desire to be of service to his country. He was loyal to the best traditions of America and courageously fought, without regard to partisanship, for real Americanism.

The country suffered a great loss through his untimely death. He is gone, but his fine work and kindly character will ever be cherished by his district and his multitude of friends and admirers.

A good life, like a good deed, lives on forever.

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Speaker, at this particular moment I want to pay tribute of respect to our late lamented colleague the Honorable Stephen A. Rudd, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Three times his own people sent him to be their Representative in Congress. He did not fail them.

During his public career of over 28 years it can be said of him that he walked with the great of the country, but never, for one moment, forgot the common touch. His sympathies were of that broad and generous character which kept him during his career closely in touch with the people of the State of New York he represented here and the great common people of this Nation. During the later part of his service here he was a member of the great Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, and during the long hours of every workday on that committee, which engaged in preparation of the most intricate neutrality legislation, although sick at the time, he sat at the table performing his full share of the labor honestly and conscientiously, at all times living up to his high ideals. Steve Rudd, as we knew him, has passed on, but he will not be forgotten by those of us who knew him best.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, while it was not my lot to have known our late colleague, Stephen A. Rudd, for as long a period and as intimately as many of the other Members, still I was not unacquainted with his record and reputation, and for the comparatively short time it was my privilege to be associated with him, I am more than glad to add my voice in regret at the passing of a most considerate and courteous colleague and friend.

He was extremely well known throughout the Borough of Brooklyn, where he was a lifelong resident. His interest in his neighborhood was manifested throughout his life by the time and attention he devoted to all matters involving the local welfare. In addition, his outlook was broad and charitable, and in the practice of his profession as a lawyer his services without stint were always at the command of the needy, without regard to the sacrifice of time, convenience, or compensation, so that it is not possible to estimate the great contributions which he so generously made when the extent of his services in this respect are known only to the recipients and by those who knew and loved him for the assistance he thus rendered.

As a practical civic worker and an extremely busy lawyer his worth was recognized in his appointment to the office of the Kings County district attorney and his subsequent election to the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York and the United States House of Representatives. Each office he held was marked by conscientious and painstaking efforts to serve to the utmost of his strength and ability, so that his administration of each office was an admirable success.

His decease is a distinct loss to the Nation, State, and city, of which he was an exemplary citizen and public servant.

To Mrs. Rudd and his immediate family my heartfelt condolences are extended.

Mr. TONRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in my seat to say just a word at the passing of our beloved colleague, the late Stephen A. Rudd.

Mr. Speaker, I have had the honor of serving with him in two legislative halls, both here in this House and in the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York. I learned early the wisdom and justice with which his judgment was tempered. In this, my first term in this House, I profited to an extent, which his untimely death only has made me realize, by his wise, calm judgment and his superior experience.

Mr. Speaker, I have known Steve Rudd for over 20 years as an intimate and trustworthy friend, as an honest and upright citizen, and as a competent and prudent legislator. The personal loss which is mine can never be recompensed. The influence which he wielded on me will always remain, though death has taken him from me. The memory of him will be a model after which I shall always strive.

Mr. Speaker, this House has lost a beloved colleague; his family, a devoted husband and father; the citizens of the country and his own congressional district, an able legislator; and I, a sincere friend and wise counselor. I pray that God in His justice and wisdom may grant to his soul the peace and happiness for which he always strove for others.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, although I have been a Member of this House only since last November, I wish to join with my many colleagues in paying tribute to the memory of our late colleague, STEPHEN A. RUDD.

My short and pleasant acquaintance with him proved to me that he was a man of fine intelligence and upright character, who had a comprehensive grasp of the problems now confronting our Nation.

He worked conscientiously and well, and his record of achievement as a legislator is one that brought credit to himself and his party. His gentleness of manner and kindness of heart endeared him to all those with whom he came in contact.

As a new Member of the House, I sought his advice and guidance on several occasions, and his friendliness and help-fulness at those times will always be remembered by me.

By his death the State of New York and this great Nation of ours have lost the service of a truly great man.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, Hon. Stephen A. Rudd, Representative in Congress from the Ninth Congressional District of the State of New York, was respected by every Member of the House.

He was my friend and his passing is a real loss to me. His lovely wife bore a distinction unique and never enjoyed by any other woman in this country. Her father, her brother, and her husband were all Members of the House of Representatives. To add to that distinction, her son is a candidate this coming November for election to the same body. Her family has indeed made a remarkable and worth-while contribution to our Government.

Steve Rudd was a quiet, conservative, sensible Representative. He was the antithesis of a demagogue. He was never swayed by groups or blocs or movements. He kept his feet on the ground at all times, intensely interested in the welfare of his constituents, his party, and his country.

He needed to take no poll as to how his district felt on any question. Brought up in it, he intuitively knew what his people felt and wanted. No curbstone politicians swayed his judgment. No threats of political reprisal caused him to swerve from his honest convictions. Would that there were more like him,

We Members from New York shall miss him. The important Committee of the House of Representatives on Foreign Affairs, on which he served with distinction, will miss his keen judgment and counsel. The Bushwick section of Brooklyn, which he so ably represented, has lost a statesman and I have lost a friend.
